Heavenly Father, the world over is pleading for release; empower us with masterful determination to send the message that shall mock these tearful days and fulfill the hunger for justice and freedom which no swine-husks can satisfy. O for the spirit of our Saviour; He came and the blind caught the light, the lame began to walk, the sick heard His song, and the rejected of earth found the radiance of the upper world. From the contagion of an atmosphere breathing poison with diversified and monstrous horror, almighty God, deliver this appealing world. With a vision that abhors all greed and brute forces, enable us to toil on until they are dull and pulseless and those who have sown in tears shall reap more abundantly in joy. Through Christ, our Redeemer. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on Friday, May 21, 1943, the President approved and signed a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 122. Joint resolution to extend the provisions of the Bituminous Coal Act of 1937 for a period of 90 days.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 629) entitled "An act to authorize the conveyance of certain public lands in the State of Minnesota to such State for use for park, recreational, or wildlife-refuge purposes," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. HATCH, Mr. WALLGREN, and Mr. GURNEY to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. BREWSTER members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of August 5, 1939, entitled "An act to provide for the disposition of certain records of the United States Government," for the disposition of executive papers in the following departments and agency:

1. Department of Agriculture.
2. Department of the Navy.
3. National Archives.

ANTI-POLL-TAX BILL

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7) making unlawful the requirement for the payment of a poll tax as a prerequisite to voting in a primary or other election for national officers.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 83]

Anderson, N. Mex.	Gibson	O'Leary
Burgin	Gore	O'Toole
Byrne	Granger	Rolph
Cannon, Fla.	Guyer	Russell
Capozzoli	Hale	Sabath
Clark	Hinshaw	Sadowski
Cochran	Holifield	Sasscer
Cooley	Izac	Schwabe
Costello	Johnson, Calvin D.	Sheppard
Culkin	Johnson, Luther A.	Sheridan
Curley	Kilburn	Short
Davis	Kilday	Sikes
Dies	Kleberg	Smith, Ohio
Dilweg	Lea	Snyder
Disney	Lemke	Stearns, N. H.
Durham	McGranery	Treadway
Eaton	Maas	Vinson, Ga.
Elliott	Martin, Iowa	Welch
Elmer	Monroney	Whelchel, Ga.
Fenton	Morrison, N. C.	Woodruff, Mich.
Fernandez	Nichols	Worley
Gale		Zimmerman

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and sixty-seven Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

On motion of Mr. MCCORMACK, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

ANTI-POLL-TAX BILL

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to House Resolution 131, the Chair designates the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] to control the time in opposition to the bill H. R. 7.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7, with Mr. BULWINKLE in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BALDWIN].

Mr. BALDWIN of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I personally consider this one of the most important bills that has come before this House. It is my profound personal hope that it will not become political. It crosses both sides of the aisle. The State of Tennessee, one of the greatest States in the Union, recently repealed its poll tax law, through its legislative body, a State which has sent more distinguished people to this House, perhaps, than any one single State in the Union.

It is not political nor is it going to do away with States rights, in my opinion. And it is not unconstitutional, in my opinion. There are Members on my side of the House who will take up these questions much better and more ably than I can. My statement is simply for the purpose of appealing to all of us to listen to the debates and discussions and to vote on the merits.

This measure does not apply only to Negroes. It applies to a great many whites. If it applied only to Negroes, there are many arguments that might be forthcoming. They fight in the armed forces and are dying for us as soldiers, and if they are good enough to fight for us, I think they are good enough to vote for us. But that is another question entirely.

There are just as many whites as there are negroes who are affected by this measure. Where do we intend to draw the line on voting?

I admit that the States themselves have the right to say how they themselves will be governed. That is a constitutional right. But when it comes to the Federal Government I claim the Federal Government has the right to decide, and this Congress has the right to decide how we should elect our Members and the people who handle the affairs of the Federal Government.

The charge has been made that this bill is communistic. Yesterday one of my distinguished colleagues read a list of names, or started to read a list of names of ministers who had signed a petition in support of this measure. He named Dr. Fosdick, minister in the city of New York, and I assume all of us know who Dr. Fosdick is. He is the pastor of the church built by John D. Rockefeller. I suppose it is going to be said here that Mr. John D. Rockefeller is communistic, because he supports this bill.

It has nothing to do with communism; it has to do with the rights, under the Constitution, of every American, no matter what his creed or color, to express himself concerning the officials of the Federal Government.

I know that most of us do not believe that this legislation is inspired by any organization, whether it be Communist, Socialist, Republican, Democratic, or anything else that you want to name. This is not a partisan measure. I assure you that certainly it is not political in my constituency. I represent a district which certainly cannot be accused of being communistic, nor can it be accused of being Negro, nor can it be accused of being partisan, because the Republicans and the Democrats are about evenly split in that district. If I take the action that I do on this bill, it is because I sincerely believe it is for the best interests of our community and our Nation. I hope we will approach it in that state of mind and that we will listen to this debate and take in good faith the remarks and the points that are made.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. O'HARA].

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Chairman, let me say to you that I do not believe in a poll tax. I am opposed to a poll-tax limitation to any voter.

It so happens that during the last war I served with colored troops. Some of the time I had a company and part of the time overseas I was in command of a battalion of colored troops. One of the things I treasure is the fact that I look back over my service with those men with pride, because these colored soldiers went far beyond the ordinary course of their duty to discharge their job as soldiers in the last war. But I am against this bill, and I shall be very happy to tell you briefly why I am against this bill.

I do not know in this democracy of ours how many shocks constitutional government or democracy can take without having a complete break-down of our form of government. I am very seriously concerned about that today. I think perhaps we should think about that sometimes in connection with some of the matters that come before us.

For example, if the Congress has the right to change or fix the qualifications of voters of the several States—and that is what this bill does—by a simple act such as this, how far can we go? What qualification may be attacked next? Personally, I should like to have this matter presented to the country as the question of women's suffrage was presented to the country, by a constitutional amendment, voted upon here first by the Congress, then submitted to the legislatures of the States in the orderly processes of our constitutional form of government.

I should like to call your attention very briefly to some comments made by Mr. Mark Sullivan recently in a column by him. He said this, and I think it is fundamental:

> If Congress passes an act abolishing the poll tax, and assuming the Supreme Court should uphold it, then an immense step would be taken toward an ominous end. The result would establish a precedent and a principle. The precedent would be this—that voting qualifications in the States can be changed by the Federal Government at Washington.
> Once this precedent were established voting qualifications now existing in any or all the States could be abolished by the Federal Government. New voting qualifications, binding on the States, could be set up by the Federal Government.
> There is going on in America a broad movement tending toward a revolutionary effect. The effect is, mainly, centralization of power.

Let us consider my State, for example. We have a voting qualification that deals with the time of residence, 6 months in the State, 30 days in the precinct. Assume some group felt that that was a harsh qualification for the people of my State to impose. Let us assume there was an organization outside of the State of Minnesota which said, "We should have some different Senators and we should have some different Representatives from the State of Minnesota, and we want to transport voters in there in time to defeat those men. We want to elect a new Governor in the State. Therefore, we shall say to Minnesota or we shall say to Iowa or we shall say to Alabama, 'You shall change your qualifications to meet that which we think does not conform to the centralized form of government.' " The implications of this bill are most serious and far-reaching.

I believe this bill is unconstitutional, and I am voting against it on that ground.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. McMURRAY].

Mr. McMURRAY. Mr. Chairman, I should like to take the few minutes I have at my disposal to talk to my fellow Members of the House about the action which we will take here today. We are dealing with an issue about which men disagree. It is a great public issue, an issue which ought to be debated until it is thoroughly understood by all of the people who must vote upon it. However, I want to point out that this issue has been thoroughly debated. There will be nothing said today on the floor of this House that is new. We understand the issue. There are some who will vote for this bill because of principle, and I suppose there are those who will vote for this bill for other reasons, call it political expediency, if you want to. There are some who will vote against this bill because of principle, and there may be those on that side who will vote as they shall vote because of political expediency. The words spoken here will not affect or change a single vote in this House. This issue is set. Men have made up their minds about it. There is a sincere constitutional question involved, as there was a sincere constitutional question raised by an amendment passed last week, against which I spoke and voted. Yet this House passed that amendment, and I thank God that the Supreme Court still sits. That issue and this issue will be resolved in the courts.

Let me say just a few words to the members of my own party. We should not let this issue create a division among us. We should not let our opposition use this to drive a wedge between us.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMURRAY. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. COLMER. It is too bad that the gentleman did not think about that when he was trying to get this issue to the floor. It comes a little late to raise this question today, does it not?

Mr. McMURRAY. I did think about it, I say to the gentleman from Mississippi. Let us not let this issue be used by our political opponents to divide us. We have, according to an ancient custom and under the rules of this House, learned to address each other here as gentlemen and gentlewomen. I make this plea. Let us live up to the words we use. Let those who must on either side put their words into the RECORD and transmit the copies of those speeches to their constituents. But let us be reasonable here.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMURRAY. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is talking about a division. Does he not know that this is a part of the Communist program to destroy State governments, to create a bureaucracy and have this Government ruled through a bureaucracy centered in Washington? The gentleman is a little late now about getting up and saying, Do not let us be divided. I submit that the gentleman is already now following the communistic lines.

Mr. McMURRAY. May I say in answer to the gentleman that I got my views on this issue from Thomas Jefferson and Abraham Lincoln.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman did not get them from Thomas Jefferson or Abraham Lincoln. I have seen his campaign documents, and I know where he got them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield now to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, the Connally-Smith antistrike bill, S. 796, will be considered, under a rule, next Wednesday, June 2. I expect to oppose the rule.

I voted for the Smith bill in the last Congress in view of the Communist-inspired strikes at that time. I feel, however, that it would be a serious mistake for the Congress to adopt such restrictive and coercive legislation, imperiling the legislative gains of labor, at a time when labor has contributed a tremendous part in the war effort. It might even be the cause of provoking strikes and impeding the production of necessary war weapons.

Labor, as a general proposition, has abided loyally by its pledge to refrain from strikes in war industries for the duration of the war. Many of the department heads, including the Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Knox, and Assistant Secretary of War, Mr. McCloy, have requested the defeat of the bill. I would prefer no action on it at the present time, and would support it only in case of a Nation-wide strike in a war industry.

The following is a copy of a letter I sent to Mr. William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 24, 1943.

Mr. WILLIAM GREEN,
President, the American Federation of Labor, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. GREEN: Replying to your letter, I am hopeful that the Smith-Connally bill will not be brought up in the House, but if it is, my present inclination is to oppose it as a member of the Rules Committee, and to urge defeat of the rule.

The following is a copy of a telegram I have forwarded to some of the labor organizations in my district: "I have faith in the patriotism of labor and am a strong advocate of collective bargaining and freedom of speech in war and in peace, and see no necessity at the present time for the enactment of coercive legislation, such as the Connally-Smith bill, in view of the no-strike pledge of organized labor."

Thanking you for your letter, and assuring you of my cooperation, provided there is no drastic change in the labor situation, such as a Nation-wide strike in the midst of the war, I am,

Sincerely yours,

HAMILTON FISH.

Mr. BALDWIN of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE].

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, it is true that this bill raises a very interesting constitutional question. The question that we must decide here has not yet been decided by our Supreme Court. Therefore, in arriving at a conclusion, we must consider the Constitution, and the decisions under it, and also the trend of judicial decisions. It is true there are many cases on this general subject. There are many cases having to do with the interpretation of State statutes, and many cases where a petitioner came before the Supreme Court and claimed that a certain State statute or the conduct of a certain State election official deprived him of his equal rights under the law as laid down in the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution. The Court held in many of these cases, and rightly so, I think, that those statutes did not deprive the petitioner of any right under the fourteenth amendment. It has been pointed out by the Court many times that a different question would be presented if the Congress had exercised or sought to exercise its right to legislate upon this subject of the election of its own officers. We are now legislating on this subject, and the only constitutional question here is this—Do we have authority under the Constitution to pass this particular legislation? Some years ago this Congress passed a Corrupt Practices Act, and we sought to make it apply to primary elections as well as to general elections. The question of the constitutionality of that law came before the Supreme Court in the case of Newberry v. U. S. (236 U. S. 232). Four members of the Court, as then constituted, decided that the only authority in Congress to legislate on the subject of the elections of its own officials was contained in this provision of the Constitution:

Article I, section 4: The time, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof, and the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations.

They held that it grants all the power we have to legislate on the subject. If that be the law, then I admit that we have no authority to pass this bill. Four members of the Court, in that case, held that a primary is not an election within the meaning of the above-quoted clause in the Constitution.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GWYNNE. Not now. Those four members of that Court pointed out that the Federal Government is a sovereign government, that it acts through chosen officials, and has the right to regulate the manner of the election of those officials. They pointed to this part of the Constitution:

Article I, section 8: Congress shall have power * * * to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof.

This question came before the Court again in the case of U. S. v. Classic (313 U. S., p. 299). They held in that case in line with the statement made by the four judges above referred to in the Newberry case, that Congress had authority under article I, section 8, to regulate the election of Members of Congress and to protect the right of the citizen to vote for Members of Congress. They also held that a primary is an election within the meaning of the provisions of the Constitution I have referred to.

Now someone has, or someone will, point out this provision of the Constitution:

Article I, section 2: The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second year by the people of the several States, and the electors of each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature.

Now, what does that mean? Of course, in determining what that means you must construe it in connection with the other provision I have just read, about the general power of Congress to direct its own elections.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. BALDWIN of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. GWYNNE. I think the proper construction to be put upon that, and I think the court will put that construction upon it, is this: The legislative body of the Federal Government has complete authority to regulate the election of its own officials. If that be not so, then we are not a sovereign government. True, the Congress might not choose to legislate. It might choose to adopt the qualifications as laid down by the States. It might choose to do nothing, in which event it will be deemed to have adopted the qualifications laid down by the States.

Now, I have come to that conclusion for several reasons. In the first place, the courts have now very definitely come to the conclusion that the right to vote for a Member of Congress is not a right conferred by the States at all. It is a right based upon the Federal Constitution. I think the whole thing is summed up in the statement made by the Chief Justice in this Classic case, which is this:

While in a loose sense the right to vote for Representatives in Congress is sometimes spoken of as a right derived from the States, this statement is true only in the sense that the States are authorized by the Constitution to legislate on the subject, as provided by article I, section 2, to the extent that Congress has not restricted State action by the exercise of its powers to regulate elections under article I, section 4, and its more general powers under article I, section 8, clause 18.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. KLEIN] such time as he may desire.

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Chairman, if the facts concerning the poll tax were generally known there would be an overwhelming demand that we rid our democracy of this undemocratic anachronism.

The poll tax is a levy on the citizens of Alabama, Arkansas, Georgia, Mississippi, South Carolina, Texas, and Virginia, that requires a payment ranging from $1 to almost $50, depending on whether the taxes have accumulated, before they can exercise their right to vote. Let me give you an example of what cumulative poll taxes mean. Let us say the poll tax in a particular State is $1 a year. That seems cheap enough. Now, if a voter, because of economic distress does not pay the dollar, he not only cannot vote, but the second year he finds himself with double the amount to pay, plus 7 percent interest and an additional fine of $1. If he does not pay the third time, the fee is three times as high, and so forth. This may be pyramided so that he may be compelled to pay as much as $47.47 before he can cast his vote. When you take into consideration the wages paid in some of the Southern States, it becomes apparent that the exercise of the right to vote is prohibitive, and signifies nothing. The effect of this requirement is clear from the fact that in the Presidential election of 1940 only 27 percent of the population otherwise qualified voted in the poll-tax States, as compared with 76 percent in the other States.

Repeal of the poll tax has been opposed on the grounds that it is unconstitutional and that it is an invasion of States' rights.

Since the best legal minds are divided on the constitutional question, it would seem the sound and democratic procedure to pass the bill for which there is so much sentiment, and let the Supreme Court finally determine the issue.

As for the claim that to repeal the poll tax by Federal action would invade States' rights, the Congressman who is elected from a poll-tax State legislates concerning the interests of the citizens, not only of his own district and his own State, but of the entire United States. Further, as Members of Congress are Federal officers, their salaries being paid by the Government of the United States, not by the State governments, the Federal Government should eliminate any undemocratic voting restrictions imposed by the States. Whether this can be done by an act of Congress, or in the form of an amendment to the Constitution, can be decided by the Supreme Court.

In these perilous times it becomes an ever-present necessity to remind ourselves again and again what this war is being fought for. We all know and believe that its purpose is to perpetuate our way of life, to destroy fascism, and to spread democracy throughout the world. It is, therefore, the duty of every thinking citizen and especially those who have it within their power to act, to see that the fight is carried on, not only on the battlefields of the world, but wherever democracy is challenged.

The poll tax is a grave injustice, and serves only to provide the enemies of democracy with material with which to criticize and destroy it. In this country we must set an example for the rest of the world.

Our position at the peace table, and in discussing the post-war world, is considerably weakened, in my opinion, if here at home we tolerate a condition which permits of the denial to millions of people of the right to freely express their choice in the selection of their Government officials.

The 10,000,000 disenfranchised citizens of the poll-tax States must have the right to vote if democracy is to prevail in this country.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON].

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, the vote on yesterday to discharge the committee and to adopt the rule clearly indicates the futility of debate today to change any votes. But I am not willing to see this bill pass the House today without registering my protest as I did last year against its passage and restating the grounds for my opposition.

I am opposed to the bill because it is clearly unconstitutional. For 150 years it has been generally conceded by all who had even a reading acquaintance with the Constitution that in the framing of their election laws the States were sovereign and the Federal Government had no constitutional right to invade that local jurisdiction. I again invite attention to the able and unanswerable brief filed last year on this subject by the distinguished attorney general of Virginia, the Honorable Abram P. Staples, to be found in the Appendix of the RECORD, volume 88, page A3349.

The first time an effort was made to have the Congress legislate on the subject of controlling State elections was shortly after the War between the States, when passion ran high and a Republican leader, blinded by partisan prejudice, sought to further humiliate the States of the Confederacy by the passage of what was known as the Force bill. But even under those circumstances, and with the Republican Party in full control of the Congress, a majority was unwilling to violate its oath to uphold and support the Constitution in order to secure a temporary political advantage. So far as I know, not until a bill similar to this passed the House last year was any serious effort made to uphold the constitutionality of the proposed action.

Last year, and again this year, we will have the sorry spectacle of seeing distinguished Members of this House voting for a measure which in their hearts they do not want and in which they do not believe; the sorry spectacle of distinguished Members of this House yielding in a craven way to group pressure, and in yielding knowing that they are selling their self-respect for a mess of pottage. In voting today on this measure we are not voting on whether or not it is desirable to help support public education by means of the most ancient form of taxation known to civilized men. We are not voting on the merits of the question of whether or not the imposition of a poll tax unduly or improperly restricts the electorate. On those issues I would have no objection at all to the General Assembly of Virginia submitting to a direct vote of the people of Virginia an amendment to our State constitution dealing with the poll-tax question.

The section of our State constitution which requires the payment of a poll tax as a prerequisite to voting was framed by that distinguished statesman, CARTER GLASS, in 1901. That constitution was submitted to and ratified by the voters of Virginia when no one was prevented by a poll tax from voting. The same was true of the Constitution of Mississippi and other Southern States. For many years Virginia and other Southern States imposed a freehold or property-tax requirement as a prerequisite to voting. The substitution of a poll tax for such a requirement was a definite step in the interest of a freer democracy. It is now contended, and no doubt with some merit as the movement has been so widespread, that it would be in the interest of a still freer democracy to abolish the poll tax as a voting requirement, although with all due deference to the 41 States that have done so, we in Virginia have been unable to observe in any one of them any improvement in their State and local government over that enjoyed in the Old Dominion. While we have not been the last to lay the old aside, we have likewise not been the first by whom the new is tried. In other words, we do not make fundamental changes in Virginia merely for the sake of change.

But some of our northern and western friends are proposing to change our State constitution for us and to accomplish that end through the process of nullification of our State constitution and State laws enacted pursuant thereto. The fact they have no constitutional right to do so apparently deters them not. Even if the Congress had the constitutional right to pass such a bill as this I would still be opposed to it because I am a firm believer in the doctrine of States' rights. The pending bill strikes at the heart of that doctrine. In a representative democracy the most valuable, the most precious right any State can possess is the right to control its own election laws. Take that right away from the States and they become helpless pawns in the hands of a Federal bureaucracy. Last month we celebrated the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of our Nation's greatest political philosopher, our Nation's ablest and clearest expounder of the principles of representative democracy—Thomas Jefferson. There may be, and possibly are, a few Members of this House who do not believe in the principles of Thomas Jefferson, but the overwhelming majority on both sides of the aisle not only believe in those principles but lose no opportunity to publicly confess that faith. What a hollow mockery they make of that profession of faith in Thomas Jefferson when they vote for such a measure as this! They have seen a so-called Fair Labor Standards Act, claimed by its author to be limited to interstate commerce and strictly complying with the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution, deliberately construed and applied in a manner that has completely wiped out the last vestige of State control over intrastate commerce—a valuable and important right which the sovereign States reserved to themselves in ratifying the Constitution which conferred upon the central authority the power to regulate interstate commerce.

They have seen the Central Government tell or attempt to tell our farmers when to sow and when to reap, in violation of Jefferson's admonition on that subject. They have seen the Federal Government, on the pretext that private enterprise have broken down, move into competition with private enterprise on such a broad front it is now seriously contended that in the post-war era the only way to preserve the American standard of living and prevent mass unemployment is to engage, on a vaster scale than ever before, in a public-works program, supplemented perhaps by the Government operation of Government-owned plants built or financed by the Government in a grave war emergency to step up the production of essential war materiel. They have seen as a necessary war measure the adoption of vast Federal control through priorities and price fixing. These agencies may not be reluctant to continue and perpetuate their control of private enterprise in the post-war era and long after the expiration of the emergency which brought them into being.

In the face of these well-known trends in the field of Federal control and the destruction of State sovereignty, it is not only surprising to me, it is downright alarming, that an overwhelming majority of this House is willing to put its stamp of approval upon the most radical step yet proposed or undertaken to make the power of the Federal Government supreme. What boots it to praise the action of Marshal Stalin in disbanding the Comintern and stopping the operations of that communistic organization known as the Third Intertional if we propose to do here today to the 48 States of our Nation what the Comintern sought to do to the sovereign nations of the world, namely, dictate their domestic policies from Moscow? For, as pointed out in the article of last Monday by that outstanding news commentator, Mark Sullivan, the implications of the pending bill go far beyond the abolishment of the poll tax in just seven States. Unless the rights of the States be protected by the Supreme Court, the fundamental meaning of the pending bill is that the Congress feels it has the power to control the election laws of all of the States in any way which, at the moment, it may see fit to do. An old Virginia farmer used to tell me "The tendency of everything is to be more so." I defy anyone to deny the present trend toward complete Federal domination of the States and their local subdivisions.

The Communists who are the prime supporters of the anti-poll-tax movement in this country are not concerned with enlarging and improving our system of representative democracy. They do not believe in representative democracy; they wish to destroy it. The present bill is but one step to that end. Do not say to yourself in justification we will take this step today but we will draw the line on taking the next one. There was never a wiser saying than the old Chinese proverb, "A journey of a thousand miles is commenced by one step."

Our representative democracy is a priceless heritage. No nation as large and as diversified as ours can be successfully ruled and governed from Washington, in all of its local undertakings. No statesmen we have produced have been wiser than those who framed the checks and balances of our Federal Constitution, in which all powers not specifically granted or by necessary implications granted to the Federal Government were reserved to the States that agreed to form a Federal Union. You are being called upon today to plunge a knife into what next to the Bill of Rights is the most vital and essential provision of our form of government, and without which the essential Bill of Rights would soon become a dead letter on our statute books. I beg you not to take that step unless you can successfully answer these questions propounded by Daniel Webster on the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of George Washington:

> Who shall reconstruct the fabric of demolished government? Who shall rear again the well-proportioned columns of constitutional liberty? Who shall frame together the skillful architecture which unites National sovereignty with State rights, individual security, and public prosperity?

The answer Daniel Webster gave to his own questions was—

> If these columns fall, they will be raised not again.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SLAUGHTER].

Mr. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Chairman, the very able gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE] has referred to judicial decisions and judicial constructions. It is a primary rule of law, as every Member of this House who is a lawyer knows, that the only time you need a construction is where there is ambiguity. I challenge any Member who feels that this act is constitutional to explain away the plain and simple words of article I, section 2, of the Constitution and the seventeenth amendment to the Constitution, adopted in 1913.

It has always been the rule in this country, and it has always been the feeling as shown by the framers of the Constitution, that the right of suffrage and the qualifications to be laid down in connection therewith belong to the States. How can there be anything ambiguous in that section of the Constitution that provides that the qualifications for voters or electors for the House of Representatives of the United States shall be the same as the qualification for voters of the most numerous house of the State legislature? That was back in the days of the founders, but it was reiterated and readopted in 1913 when the seventeenth amendment to the Constitution was adopted, that amendment providing for the direct election of United States Senators; and the wording is identical. Yet this bill, if adopted, would wipe out the provisions of the seventeenth amendment in the same way that it would article I, section 2, of the Constitution itself.

There is a perfectly legal and perfectly proper way to approach this problem and that is by constitutional amendment. I hold no brief for the poll tax. I do not come from a State that has a poll tax. If I were a member of the legislature of a State that had a poll tax I would be the first to vote to abolish it or to speak against it, and that is the place to start, unless the proponents of this sweeping change are willing and ready to go about it in the regular and orderly manner and submit and propose a constitutional amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

As you all know, when that is done there is no change, no matter how sweeping, that cannot be proposed, but to try to do it by the ipse dixit of this body, by statute, if you please, which in one fell swoop tries to wipe out two of the most vital parts of our organic law, goes right back to the proposition that my friends on the Republican side of the aisle are crying about every day—and I agree with them—in their frequent attacks on bureaucracy. If this body presumes by a bill to override and wipe out and completely ignore the constitutional provisions provided for in the Constitution of this country and the amendments thereto, there is nothing that we cannot do. It seems to me that this is an old-fashioned principle involving the oath of office—our oath to support the Constitution. One of the gentlemen—I believe it was the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MCMURRAY]—was very frank when he said that some Members are motivated by personal political expediency. To those Members I will say there are worse things than being defeated for reelection to Congress, and in the last analysis we have to live with ourselves and with our oath of office.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCANLON].

Mr. SCANLON. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this measure. We have heard considerable debate, and, before the time allotted for debate expires, we shall hear considerably more debate on this bill from the constitutional standpoint. The RECORD will be full tomorrow of legalistic discussion. I am not a lawyer. It would be foolish for me to attempt to argue that this bill is either constitutional or unconstitutional from the standpoint of the legal technicalities of that great document. But as a layman—as the proverbial "man in the street," if you please—this bill is constitutional.

To me the Constitution means one thing and one thing only. It is the pact between the several States to effect in the most practical manner the principles of our Government as laid down by the Declaration of Independence. That great statement of human principles is based upon an equality of privilege and rights. This bill to repeal the poll tax as a qualification for voting, to me, a layman, further implements these principles and is, therefore, constitutional.

Our Declaration of Independence and our Constitution grew out of a war fought, among other things, to eliminate "taxation without representation." The poll tax is taxation without representation, and this bill to repeal it is one more step to bring about those ideals for which our founding fathers fought and died.

Under the poll tax, before a man can vote, he must pay a tax. In many States he must pay all accrued taxes before he can cast his vote. It seems clear to me that this is "taxation without representation."

The poll tax also places a penalty on those who have been less fortunate, economically. It discriminates against that man in favor of the man who has been fortunate in business, or whose crops turned out well, or who has been able to get a job and keep it. Our Constitution and our Declaration of Independence both intended just the opposite.

There is still another reason why I favor this bill to repeal the poll tax. We are today fighting a desperate war on two fronts. One of our enemies, Japan, has conquered vast territories and an equally vast number of people, all of whom are not members of the white race. They are brown and yellow. The Japanese are clever propagandists, and they appeal to these subjugated peoples that this war is a war to end the domination of the white races. Their appeal is strictly on a color basis. Nothing we here can do in the way of legislation can stop Jap propaganda. That can only be accomplished by crushing blows administered by our fighting forces. But we can give the lie to their propaganda by proving to the world that racial discrimination in official business does not exist.

The poll tax is aimed directly at circumventing the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution—to impose voting restrictions on the basis of race. Opponents of this measure inferentially admitted this yesterday here on the floor when it was charged that this measure was an effort on the part of Republicans to wean the Negro vote. I am a Democrat and a politician, and I do not believe I am naive enough to be taken in on a Republican trick—but that is at present beside the point. As long as we have laws, either on the Federal statute books or on the statute books of any of the States, which are discriminatory toward one race—a colored race—the Japanese can point to these laws and tell the subjugated peoples of the Asiatic islands and countries, "The United States is not interested in liberating you. In the United States itself they discriminate against all those who are not white. Join the Japanese new order in Asia and help kick out the hated whites."

When the Japanese say we discriminate they speak the truth, and the people to whom they speak know it. How easy it would be to kill the effectiveness of their propaganda by repealing every law in our land which is discriminatory on racial bases! Of course, it would not stop the propaganda, but the propaganda would be based on a lie. On the other hand, our counterpropaganda would be given more teeth.

Mr. Chairman, when we begin to apply the pressure on the Japanese we are going to need all the help we can get from these presently subjugated peoples, and we here in Congress should do everything in our power so that MacArthur, Halsey, and Stilwell will get that aid.

I would favor this present measure if there were no war, but because there is a war, I favor it more strongly. And for this reason I appeal to my friends from the South who oppose it to withdraw their opposition so that we may drive one more spike into the Japanese propaganda machine.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, before we can appreciate whether or not this bill would be constitutional, it would be well to dip into the Constitutional Convention and examine something of the debates and the proceedings that led it finally to the adoption of article I, section 2, and article I, section 4. Beyond question, those articles are the results of compromise and clearly indicate that the States can have no unlimited right to determine the qualification of the electors in the States and that Congress has a perfect right to intervene to prevent injustices, abuses, or discriminations. It has the right to pass the pending bill.

Article I, section 2, as finally adopted, reads as follows:

> The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second year by the people of the several States, and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislatures.

You cannot read section 2 of article I in a complete vacuum, without considering it as a part of the Constitution, containing, as it does, other provisions, notably article I, section 4; but before we go to article I, section 4, I should like to give you a bit of the history that led up to the adoption of article I, section 2, relative to the qualifications of electors in the various States. On June 6, 1787, Mr. C. C. Pinckney moved:

> That the first branch * * * be elected by the State legislatures and not by the people.

That is a clear indication that he wanted the Constitutional Convention to say that the legislatures have supreme control over the qualifications of electors and elections of Members of Congress. That provision was rejected.

On Thursday, June 21, 1787, the proposition was brought forward again and, according to Mr. Madison—

> General Pinckney moved "that the first branch, instead of being elected by the people, should be elected in such manner as the legislature of each State should direct."

After considerable discussion that proposal was rejected, since that proposal involved untrammeled power in the State to determine the qualifications of electors.

Finally, on August 7, the question of qualifications of electors was again considered. The Committee of Detail proposed the following:

> The qualifications of the electors shall be the same, from time to time, as those of the electors, in the several States; of the most numerous branch of their own legislatures.

Had that proposal of the Committee of Detail actually been adopted by the founding fathers, it would have been very clear that the State qualifications would control in Federal elections, and I would admit that we could not pass the pending bill because it would be branded unconstitutional. Mr. Madison states that in the discussions of that proposal of the Committee of Detail Gouverneur Morris advanced serious objection. Madison reports him as making the following statement:

> Another objection against the clause, as it stands, is that it makes the qualifications of the National Legislature depend on the will of the States, which he thought not proper.

The proposal of the committee on detail was not accepted.

Finally and conclusively the Convention on June 21, 1787, flatly rejected another proposition that would have placed the qualifications of voters exclusively within the discretion of the State legislatures. On that date, for example, Pinckney moved:

> That the first branch instead of being elected by the people should be elected in such manner as the legislature of each State should direct.

Hamilton opposed that; Wilson opposed it; King opposed it with these words——

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. Just a moment.

King objected. He said that he—> supposed the legislatures would constantly choose men subservient to their own views, as contrasted to the general interest, and that they might even devise modes of election that would be subversive of the end in view. He remarked several instances in which the views of a State might be at variance with those of the General Government.

Finally that proposal was also turned down, and we find that the constitutional fathers adopted the proposal as we now find it in article I, section 2, of the Constitution. It was the result of a compromise, but it was adopted, also, be it remembered, only after the fathers had agreed to put into the Constitution article I, section 4, which provides as follows:

> The time, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the place of choosing Senators.

So when we consider the Constitution in toto and particularly those two clauses, we cannot escape coming to the conclusion that there was a direct limitation placed upon the States as to voting in Federal elections for Members of Congress and the Senate.

Much has been made in the debates as to the meaning of the words "manner of holding elections," as contained in article I, section 4. It has been argued that they should be restricted to the mechanics of election, and that they cannot apply to the substance thereof nor to the qualifications of electors. This view is totally unacceptable in the light of the history of article I, section 2, as I have given it. It was never the intention of the founding fathers to give to the National Government the right only to tinker with the mechanics of election, and at the same time leave within the discretion of the States complete power over the substance of elections of Representatives and Senators. If that were the case, we could readily charge that the fathers were rather short-sighted.

In the Newberry case, Justices Pitney and Brandeis held that the words "manner of holding elections" goes to the whole procedure and essence and not merely the form of conducting elections.

Finally, if there was any question that the founding fathers did not intend to surrender completely to the States the fundamental democratic power of determining the qualifications of voters, it is erased by the plain language of article I, section 8, subsection 18:

> The Congress shall have power * * * to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution * * * all * * * powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States.

Since the requirement of a payment of poll tax before voting is an abridgment of the right to vote, and many are thus disenfranchised, there is denial of the constitutional right of "equal protection under the law." With reference to the denial of that right visited particularly upon Negroes, there is a violation of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution. Finally there is a denial of a republican form of government. Any kind of property qualification is a denial of that form of government. In fact, the rich may not need the vote. To the poor, the vote is the greatest weapon of assurance of rights. Payment of money is a property tax.

Such matter of poll taxes existed in the Northern States many years ago. They have been since discarded. It is interesting to note that Tennessee is about to discard completely its imposition of the poll tax.

We boast of universal suffrage. That boast is hollow when tens of thousands are disenfranchised by the payment of poll taxes as a condition precedent to voting.

The compliance of such condition may be an effective method of collection of the tax. That poll-tax payment can be no excuse for its existence as a qualification for voting.

Frankly, I fail to see how payment of a tax can be considered a qualification. It is really a restriction on voting. It is unlike the literacy test, as in New York. That is a qualification.

In general, the poll tax does not apply to the deaf, blind, dumb, and incapacitated. They are exempt. The so-called qualification is thus inapplicable to them. If it is a qualification, it must apply to all. Otherwise the imposition of the tax is discriminatory. Since the poll tax in seven States is discriminatory, Congress has the right under article I, sections 2 and 4, of the Constitution to intervene and prevent discrimination.

In Mississippi the highest court of that State has declared that the tax—poll tax—is intended there as "a clog on the suffrage" (Ratcliffe v. Beale (20 So. 868)).

See page 37, hearings on anti-poll-tax bill before the Senate Judiciary Committee, where we read:

A reliable witness from Alabama reported that after the poll-tax provisions had been safely enacted in that State that they were intended to bring about the ultimate disenfranchisement of voters. (F. G. Gaffey, Suffrage Limitations in the South, Political Science Quarterly, March 1905.)

Mr. BALDWIN of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentlewoman from Ohio [Mrs. BOLTON].

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Chairman, we have before us, as has been said by a number of speakers, one of the most serious pieces of legislation that has come to this House in many years. In spite of the suggestions that have been made that those of us who are for this measure were acting solely in a political capacity, I should like to preface my remarks by saying that there is such a thing as an American point of view; there is such a thing as a patriotic American desire to see America true to herself.

Mr. McMURRAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. BOLTON. I cannot yield; I am sorry. I am quite aware that there may be criticism of many of us at future times when the constitutionality of bills is questioned. We will be accused of having tried to emasculate the Constitution and we will be accused of not having been faithful to our oath of office. But I must take that chance, Mr. Chairman. I am in the position where I propose to let the Supreme Court decide the constitutionality of this measure, if that becomes necessary.

Now I ask you to follow me in a rather different point of view from those that have been expressed: To my mind this issue is one that transcends every other issue we have had because it takes up the great problem that will face the world after this war—Race. Whatever we do is going to affect our children's children far more than most of the Members of this House appreciate. If we cannot change our attitude about race, we are going to bring upon the heads of our children or upon the heads of their children, a cataclysm that will make this present war pale in comparison.

Races are the result of biological changes brought about by climate, by food, and so forth. What is man? He is the product of his food, of the climate he is subjected to, he is the wind that blows through his nostrils, he is the result of sunlight or the dearth of it. Let us remember also that as a man thinketh, so is he.

Though this legislation affects a great many white people throughout certain sections of our country, the main problem, one most of our people are afraid to touch on frankly, is the problem of the Negro. I know something of this problem. I have worked with Negroes for many years. I have great respect for them. I know their weaknesses and they know that I know those weaknesses, and they honor me and respect me for my frank statement of what I consider them to be. I know also some of the weaknesses of my own kind. I hold no brief for the things the North did to the South after the Civil War, and I also hold no brief for the South that continues, in certain parts of her land, to live in a past that is dead or should be.

Let me remind you gentlemen that the so-called Negro problem is no longer a southern problem, but a national and an international one. In his transplanting to the harsh northern climate the Negro died in great numbers. But in a generation he has hardened and in the hardening of his body he has learned many things and he has developed in all phases of his being. You tell us of the North to keep out of your affairs. I beg to tell you what is self-evident to us: That they have become our affairs, too.

Perhaps because it is a new problem to us we approach it with different eyes from yours. What we see is that America cannot be less than herself once she awakens to the realization that freedom does not mean license and that license can be the keeping of others from sharing that freedom. Even at painful cost, America must be true to her own vision, to her own soul, to her responsibility to tomorrow's world. We talk so much of democracy, of freedom. Can we have either so long as great sections of our land withhold freedom? Is not such withholding just as real a form of license as any other? Might does not make right under the great laws of evolution.

You will never help the matter if you press them down. That just puts a whole lot more steam under the cover that you are trying to lock down and makes it all the more dangerous. Bitterness begets bitterness; intolerance produces intolerance.

I beg you to look at this thing from a very much larger point of view than you are inclined to. Look at it from the ageless, from the timeless experiences. Evolution has taken hold of one race after the other. It has taken hold of the Negro race. You people talk about making these people happy in the South. Happy? Happy when you cannot come here and you cannot go there. Is it happiness that a Negro from my district, being sent down under the draft to the South, is arrested because he goes down a certain street, taken in charge because he cannot go here and he cannot go there?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlewoman has expired.

Mr. BALDWIN of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentlewoman 3 additional minutes.

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the time has come when the South must recognize that the North, also, has a right and the responsibility to strive to meet this great problem of races. It seems to me it is time when all Americans must recognize their responsibility to the world at large in connection with the whole problem of race. Who are we that we talk democracy and freedom if we permit freedom to be licensed? And what is the difference between the license which knocks somebody over the head in one way or does it in another? Is it freedom for one group to suppress and repress another group? I am not saying that the adjustment that lies ahead is going to be pleasant. I am not saying that the innocent are not going to have a very difficult time of it and that they will not carry a great deal of the burden, which they always have to do, but I am saying that until we face this whole problem of race from one end of this world to the other we are not facing life realistically and we are not facing the laws of God with any kind of humility, with any kind of good sense, or with any intelligence. And I plead with you to recognize the great laws of the Infinite far more than you are inclined to do. If we do not do so, Mr. Chairman, the laws of evolution are going to roll over us inevitably. We have a light to give to the world, but we must keep the light burning with decency and clarity and we must not be afraid to face the iniquities of our own souls frankly. We must be willing to take the results of what we have done and say, "We have been wrong here, right there, wrong there, and right here. Now let us clean it up and start again together."

That is all the Negro asks, to work together. He plays his part in the sun beside us, he is dying beside us, and he is dying with the flag of our country at his lips if he can get it. What do we do? Ah, we should be ashamed that we do so little. We draft him and send him out to his death, we expect his loyalty, his patriotism. Gentlemen I beg you to enlarge your vision and look at this from the broad aspect of a world which is a part of the universe of Almighty God.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlewoman has expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I agree with the speakers who have preceded me that this is one of the most important questions which has come for a long time before this Congress. Especially is that true when we consider the circumstances under which it comes. The country is at war. We have had poll-tax requirements for many years. That requirement is rapidly disappearing by State repeal.

I will say to my good friend who has just left the floor, that for a nation fighting for its life, which needs the strength that unity gives, this preachment on the part of people behind this bill that an able-bodied citizen is being abused and disfranchised because each voter by the action of the legislature of his State, or a provision in its constitution, is required to pay a dollar or two toward the expenses of his government before participating in the election of those who are to be its public officials, is a bad thing. Going over this country trying to arouse in the hearts of patriotic colored people in the country the notion that they are being abused, being mistreated, because they are required before voting to do exactly what their white neighbors are required to do, driving the lines of racial cleavage when every interest of the country requires that we stand in solidarity, is a bad thing. There may be good reasons for the abandonment of this tax, but it is not a good service in a democracy to establish the notion among any class of the able-bodied citizens that they are being abused if they are required to pay a little part of the expenses of maintaining their government.

There is another thing that makes this an important matter. I wonder if everybody in this country is not conscious of the danger resulting in this Nation from a concentration of power in Federal organizations? This is remarkable legislation at this time when we know that it is an open question in this struggle between democracy and bureaucracy as to which is to survive. In such a situation as that, without constitutional warrant, are we willing to take from the States, in which the hope of our democracy to survive is centered, this fundamental power incident to sovereignty and transfer it to the Federal Government—that one of the most important rights preserved to the States? Regardless of what may happen in the Senate or in the Supreme Court such an indication of willingness on the part of the House of Representatives to make this shift of power from the States to Washington would be mighty important now when we are on the pivot with the possibility of reestablishing democracy on the one side and the certainty of bureaucratic government on the other if we permit our States to be destroyed as the sovereign units of general government.

The language of the Constitution is plain. Its construction by those who participated in its formation is plain. The decisions of the Supreme Court all hold against the constitutionality of this bill, and yet it is here.

These are the applicable provisions of the Constitution:

Article I, section 2: The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second year by the people of the several States, and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature.

Article I, section 4: The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof, but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

The time of holding the elections for Members of Congress, the place of holding such elections, and the manner in which they are to be held Congress may determine. That is provided by this latter section of the Constitution.

Mr. Madison and Mr. Hamilton wrote under the common title "Publius." In the Federalist of February 19, 1788, this appears under that title:

Who are to be the electors of the Federal Representatives?

They are to be the same who exercise the right in every State of electing the corresponding branch of the legislature of the State.

On February 8, 1788, in the Federalist, this appears written by either Madison or Hamilton or both, under their common pen name:

The first view to be taken of this part of the Government relates to the qualifications of the electors and the elected.

Those of the former are to be the same with those of the electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature. The definition of the right of suffrage is very justly regarded as a fundamental article of republican government. It was incumbent on the Convention, therefore, to define and establish this right in the Constitution. To have left it open for the occasional regulation of the Congress would have been improper for the reason just mentioned. To have submitted it to the legislative discretion of the States would have been improper for the same reason, and for the additional reason that it would have rendered too dependent on the State governments that branch of the Federal Government which ought to be dependent on the people alone. To have reduced the different qualifications in the different States to one uniform rule would probably have been as dissatisfactory to some of the States as it would have been difficult to the Convention. The provision made by the Convention appears, therefore, to be the best that lay within their option. It must be satisfactory to every State, because it is conformable to the standard already established, or which may be established by the State itself. It will be safe to the United States because, being fixed by the State constitutions, it is not alterable by the State governments, and it cannot be feared that the people of the States will alter this part of their constitutions in such a manner as to abridge the rights secured to them by the Federal Constitution.

Mr. King, of Massachusetts, served with Hamilton on the Committee on Style and this is what he says—volume 2, page 51, Elliot's Debates:

The power of control given by this section (art. I, sec. 4), extends to the manner of election, not to the qualifications of the electors.

The word "manner" is sought in this debate to be twisted into some sort of relationship to qualification.

Mr. Nicholas, of Virginia, a delegate to that State's convention—volume 3, page 8, Elliot's Debates—to the same effect says the following, and these were the people who helped to construct the document and the people who sat in the State conventions and passed on the question of whether or not it would be approved:

In this plan there is a fixed rule for determining the qualifications of electors, and that rule the most judicious that could possibly have been devised, because it refers to a criterion which cannot be changed. A qualification that gives a right to elect representatives for the State legislatures, gives also, by this Constitution, a right to choose representatives for the general government. As the qualifications of electors are different in the different States, no particular qualifications, uniform through the States, would have been politic, as it would have caused a great inequality in the electors, resulting from the situation and circumstances of the respective States. Uniformity of qualifications would greatly affect the yeomanry in the States, as it would either exclude from this inherent right some who are entitled to it by the laws of some States at present, or be extended so universally as to defeat the admirable end of the institution of representation.

In the North Carolina convention—volume 4, page 71, Elliot's Debates—Mr. Steele said:

The power over the manner of elections does not include that of saying who shall vote (that never left State control): the Constitution expressly says that the qualifications (are those) which entitle a man to vote for a State representative.

Mr. Davie, in the same convention—volume 4, page 61—said:

They may alter the manner of holding the election. * * * They cannot alter the nature of the elections; for it is established, as fundamental principles, that the electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature shall elect the Federal representatives, * * * power is given to Congress, and extending only to the time of holding, the place of holding, and the manner of holding the elections. Is this not the plain, literal, and grammatical construction of the clause? Is it possible to put any other construction on it, without departing from the natural order, and without deviating from the general meaning of the words, and every rule of grammatical construction? Twist it, torture it, as you may, sir, it is impossible to fix a different sense upon it.

The ratification of the seventeenth amendment was the last expression of popular judgment as to what should be the qualification of electors. It was the identical arrangement as to the electors of the Members of the House of Representatives embodied in article I, section 2, of the Constitution. It is as follows:

The electors in each State—

shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislatures.

With the clear, uninvolved language of the Constitution squarely against the construction which the proponents of this bill would have us accept, and with the clear-cut statements of such contemporaries as Madison and Hamilton, King, Nicholas, Steele, and Davie, which I have quoted, clearly against its constitutionality, this is a most remarkable proceeding, remarkable even if there were no pronouncements by the courts of the land against its constitutionality. Many times the shadow of this question has come within the notice of the courts. Not once insofar as I know has the court indicated a belief in its constitutionality.

I direct consideration now to a clear-cut decision of the Supreme Court of the United States against the constitutionality of this bill with the identical question here indicated squarely before it. I refer to the case of Breedlove v. Suttles (302 U. S. 277), a unanimous opinion, delivered by Mr. Justice Butler. The case arose in Georgia. I quote from the opinion:

A Georgia statute provides that there shall be levied and collected each year from every inhabitant of the State between the ages of 21 and 60 a poll tax of $1, but that the tax shall not be demanded from the blind or from females who do not register for voting (Georgia Code, 1933, sec. 92-108). The State constitution declares that to entitle a person to register and vote at any election he shall have paid all poll taxes that he may have had opportunity to pay agreeably to law (art. II, sec. 1, par. III; Code, sec. 2-603). The form of oath prescribed to qualify an elector contains a clause declaring compliance with that requirement (sec. 34-103). Tax collectors may not allow any person to register for voting unless satisfied that his poll t s have been paid (sec. 34-114). Appellant brought this suit in the superior court of Fulton County to have the clause of the constitution and the statutory provisions above-mentioned declared repugnant to various provisions of the Federal Constitution and to compel appellee to allow him to register for voting without payment of poll taxes. The court dismissed his petition. The State supreme court affirmed (183 Ga. 189; 188 S. E. 140).

The pertinent facts alleged in the petition are these: March 16, 1936, appellant, a white male citizen 28 years old, applied to appellee to register him for voting for federal and State officers at primary and general elections. He informed appellee he had neither made poll-tax returns nor paid any poll taxes and had not registered to vote because a receipt for poll taxes and an oath that he had paid them are prerequisites to registration. He demanded that appellee administer the oath, omitting the part declaring payment of poll taxes, and allow him to register. Appellee refused.

Appellant maintains that the provisions in question are repugnant to the equal protection clause and the privileges and immunities clause of the fourteenth amendment and to the nineteenth amendment.

You are all familiar with the equal protection clause of the fourteenth amendment and also with the nineteenth amendment, the woman's suffrage amendment:

1. He asserts that the law offends the rule of equality in that it extends only to persons between the ages of 21 and 60 and to women only if they register for voting and in that it makes payment a prerequisite to registration. He does not suggest that exemption of the blind is unreasonable.

Then follows some discussion of the history and nature of the poll tax, which I will omit, though very interesting and illuminuating and is of weight. I further quote from this opinion at page 281, as follows:

2. To make payment of poll taxes a prerequisite of voting is not to deny any privilege or immunity protected by the fourteenth amendment. Privilege of voting is not derived from the United States, but is conferred by the State and, save as restrained by the fifteenth and nineteenth amendments and other provisions of the Federal Constitution, the State may condition suffrage as it deems appropriate. Minor v. Happersett (21 Wall. 162, 170 et seq.); Ex parte Yarbrough (110 U. S. 651, 664-665); McPherson v. Blacker (146 U. S. 1, 37-38); Guinn v. United States (238 U. S. 347, 362). The privileges and immunities protected are only those that arise from the Constitution and laws of the United States and not those that spring from other sources (Hamilton v. Regents (293 U. S. 245, 261)).

Next the Court makes some analysis of the contention that this Georgia law violates the nineteenth amendment and holds—bottom page 283:

Its purpose is not to regulate the levy or collection of taxes. The construction for which appellant contends would make the amendment a limitation upon the power to tax. (Cites cases.) The payment of poll taxes as a prerequisite to voting is a familiar and reasonable regulation long enforced in many States and for more than a century in Georgia.

The Supreme Court was then composed of Chief Justice Hughes and Associate Justices McReynolds, Brandeis, Sutherland, Butler, Stone, Roberts, Cardozo, and Black.

Since that decision this identical question, stripped of every detail which could possibly aid the most skilled expert in the art of confusing, reached the Supreme Court of the United States by application for a writ of certiorari. That case is Pirtle v. Brown (118 F. (2) 218). It was decided March 8, 1941, by the circuit court of appeals. On July 19, 1941, Senator PEPPER, of Florida, appeared before the Senate Judiciary Committee in support of S. 1280, "a bill concerning the qualification of voters or electors within the meaning of section 2, article I, of the Constitution, making unlawful the requirement for the payment of a poll tax as a prerequisite to voting in a primary or general election for national offices," the same subject matter as the bill here under discussion.

In the Pirtle case the question was squarely presented as to whether or not the State could condition the right of a citizen to vote for a Congressman in an election, not the primary, but a special election called to elect a Member of the House of Representatives, because that citizen had not complied, or had failed to pay a poll tax, thus allowing him to vote. Notice that this was not for a State election nor any primary and that it was admitted that he had done everything to qualify but pay the poll tax.

Now, that is Senator PEPPER's explanation of the facts.

I continue to quote from Senator PEPPER, page 9, Senate hearing:

Behold the suggestion that the right to vote for a Member of Congress of the United States, the President of the United States, the Vice President, or the electors, is conditioned by the State upon such terms as the State wants to impose; that the right "is conferred by the State and, save as restrained by the fifteenth and nineteenth amendments" regarding race, color, or previous conditions of servitude and other provisions of the Federal Constitution, the State may condition suffrage as it deems appropriate. * * *

So that in that case the Circuit Court of Appeals, Sixth Circuit, held that the State still had the right to condition the exercise of the franchise in any way it wanted to do so.

I continue to quote from the Senate committee hearings; this colloquy took place:

Senator O'MAHONEY. Was there any dissent in that case?

Senator PEPPER. No; it was a unanimous decision of three judges, and now it appears that there is a writ of certiorari pending before the Supreme Court relative to that case, and I venture to predict that that petition for certiorari will be granted, and I do not expect that decision to stand.

On the 13th day of October 1941, the Supreme Court of the United States, with the application of the writ of certiorari seeking to bring the questions involved in the Pirtle case before it, refused to grant the writ. It could not do otherwise.

Whatever may be the opinion of members of that Court with regard to the poll-tax qualification, it is their business to interpret the Constitution as it is written. As it is written the States cannot deprive a person of the right to vote on account of sex, because the Constitution has been amended. The Supreme Court so holds, of course. The States cannot deprive a person of the right to vote because of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. The Supreme Court so holds. The States cannot deprive a person of the right to vote for Members of Congress if he is qualified to vote under the laws of his State for the members of the most numerous branch of the legislature. The Supreme Court so holds.

By the decision in the Classic Case (313 U. S. 299) it was held that included in the rights secured by the Constitution are the rights of a qualified voter to have his physical opportunity to vote undisturbed and to have his vote counted, within the protection of sections 19 and 20 of the Federal Criminal Code.

The citizen is entitled to Federal protection as to the time of holding elections, the place of holding elections, and the manner in which elections are conducted, conditioned only that the voter is qualified to vote for a member of the most numerous branch of his own State legislature. Now it is contended that even though he may not be qualified to vote for a member of the most numerous branch of his own State legislature—that standard of qualification which is set up in the Constitution—Congress can get rid of that standard by making it unlawful. That seems to be on the theory that its enforcement would deprive the non-poll-tax payer of a Federal constitutional right which Congress would have the right to enforce by appropriate legislation.

Deleting from section 20 of the Criminal Code that part thereof made nonapplicable by the decision in the Classic case, it reads as follows:

Section 20 of the Criminal Code (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 52):

"Whoever, under color of any law, statute, ordinance, regulation, or custom, willfully subjects, or causes to be subjected, any inhabitant of any State, Territory, or District to the deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured or protected by the Constitution and laws of the United States * * * shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both."

In other words, if this bill is constitutional, corrective legislation, from the standpoint of the proponents of this legislation, is already on the statute books. If a person has a constitutional right to vote without paying a poll tax, he is protected by existing law. Whatever constitutional rights the citizen has to vote without complying with the poll-tax requirement of a State have been protected. Furthermore, existing legislation covers the whole field of the citizen's constitutional rights.

Each time where in our governmental history before this effort it has been deemed advisable to establish a new limitation upon the power of States to control election qualifications it was recognized that it could not be done as here attempted, by act of Congress, but had to be done by the States themselves.

After the Supreme Court refused to disturb the circuit court's holding in the Pirtle case, the proponents fell back on the Classic case. But in the Classic case there was not involved one single question which could arise in a case testing the general constitutionality of this proposed legislation.

So we have this situation. We have the clear language of the Constitution and we have the interpretation of the men who helped to fashion the Constitution and the men who discussed it when the States ratified it. We have the philosophy of democratic government and we have the clear-cut decision of the Supreme Court holding that this proposed legislation is unconstitutional.

Now, let me make this observation, and I do this in all earnestness and seriousness. If you do succeed in breaking through the constitutional barrier, ignoring the interpretation made by the contemporaries of the Constitution, its practical interpretation and the decisions of the Supreme Court, and should secure judicial approval you would then have a situation under which there would be no effective restraint upon the power of Congress to fix the qualifications of those who vote. The power to fix it down is the power to fix it up. You would be putting into what is coming to be a great Federal bureaucracy the power to deny the States the right to control suffrage. They are the organizations that are close to the people.

This attack is being made upon the Constitution in the name of the poor man. I want to call to witness the history of the ages, that they are the sort of people who suffer most when constitutional government is destroyed.

Men and women of America, if we hold our Constitution in disrespect, the Constitution is doomed. You think it could not happen to us. How can we maintain constitutional government without a constitution? How can we maintain a constitution unless the people hold it in reverence and unless those who are charged with the solemn responsibility of guarding it, protect it? You think you have only a few States to deal with now. You think you are strong enough to do it now, because you have the might of votes now, but whenever the constitutional rights of the few are not respected, the time is not far distant when those who were strong at the moment will appeal in vain for the protection of the Constitution that they have destroyed. If the constitutional rights of the meanest persons are not maintained and protected, the constitutional rights of the best are not safe.

That is true. The men who fashioned this Constitution and who read deeply into the mysteries of life knew that there would come a time when the institutions of freedom would be imperiled. They did the best they could. They required that before we entered this Chamber we pledge ourselves by our solemn plight that we will defend the Constitution. Now is the time and this is the hour.

Mr. Chairman, I look over my country. I see the picture in the world today. I recognize that my country, perhaps, stands as the last great independent constitutional government in the world. I see a time that has come now in the history of my country when the Constitution is no longer revered among the people—not much. I wonder, too, if your Nation and my Nation is to be added to the list of those from which freedom has departed. It departs with the departure of constitutional government.

I know from all that I have been able to learn that freedom cannot endure among any people who do not have fundamental laws that hold them true to the course of that destiny against the pressure of expediency and the whim of the moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Let me call your attention to another thing: The statement that is being made that these poll-tax laws are a disfranchisement of the colored people of this country I say to you is a reflection upon the colored people themselves because it is a statement that these millions of colored people cannot or will not contribute a dollar or two in the course of a year to the maintenance of their State governments. They say that this requirement that each person, white or colored, shall pay say a dollar and a half or two dollars to maintain the free schools of this country, disfranchises them. That is bad talk. That is not true. It is not calculated to develop self-respect, a sense of responsibility, a pride of citizenship, a fitness to be a citizen in a great democracy, anxious to pay something, however small, for the maintenance of his government. A democracy is simply a group of people who get together to operate a system of self-government, somewhat like a club or a lodge. There is some expense about it. If we are going to maintain a democracy in this country, we have to maintain it by people who have some self-respect and willingness to pay something. I doubt that an individual who is not willing to pay a dollar and a half or two dollars in the course of a year to maintain the government where his children are educated, and where he gets police protection, and so forth, is quite fit to be a citizen in a free democracy, white or black. I know this is not in line with the style of these times when we have armies of people running around over this country doing their best to make us a nation of panhandlers. It is not a good thing for any able-bodied person to get a free governmental ride. Paying a little something is good for him, even if the Government does not need it.

The States are abolishing this particular tax. There may be good reason why that tax ought to be abolished, but that reason is not because each citizen, before he may sit in the council of the Nation, is required to make some contribution to the Government. It makes a better citizen of him.

It is less difficult for me, and I am not strutting my courage, I do not want to be offensive, but I have examined our drift in this country. I believe I know what is happening to our democracy. I am sure we must decentralize governmental powers, reestablish our States, or be governed by a great Federal bureaucracy. We have a chance now; none too good a chance, but there seems to be coming up from the body of the American people that thing which Mr. Wilson said he saw as he examined history.

May I quote what he said:

> When I look back on the processes of history, when I survey the genesis of America, I see this written over every page: That the nations are renewed from the bottom, not from the top; that the genius which springs up from the ranks of unknown men is the genius which renews the youth and energy of the people. Everything I know about history, every bit of experience and observation that has contributed to my thought, has confirmed me in the conviction that the real wisdom of human life is compounded out of the experiences of ordinary men. The utility, the vitality, the fruitage of life does not come from the top to the bottom; it comes, like the natural growth of a great tree, from the soil, up through the trunk into the branches to the foliage and the fruit. The great struggling unknown masses of the men who are at the base of everything are the dynamic force that is lifting the levels of society.

Are we doing our part to help this movement? In which direction does this proposed legislation move? That is the question that is involved in this matter.

Think of a Member of Congress who comes up from a State, elected by the people of a State, who want to transfer this power of theirs to a great Federal bureaucracy. We do not know what is going on in this great Federal Government now. There is not a man or woman here now who knows what is going on in it. It is too big. There is too much governmental power here now. This is not just dealing with the poll tax, this is an attempt to establish a principle and a policy of government under which the Federal Government takes charge of the qualification of the voters in this country. Are you willing to do it?

As I see it, we are going the only route which we could go and effect the destruction of our democracy. I do not mean it is intended, but the operation of the laws of cause and effect is not controlled by intentions. The conviction that we are moving toward disaster for our democracy impels me to say these things on this occasion, which I wish I could avoid without the sacrifice of duty.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DAWSON].

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Chairman, on one other occasion I have addressed this House since becoming a Member. The reason for doing that at that time was that I knew the person involved and I believed that I knew more about the subject matter than any other man in this assembly.

I am standing before you once again believing that I know more about what is the real ground of this subject matter than any man in this assembly.

I am a Negro. I am an American. I was born in Georgia. Down my way when I was a boy public schools were opened only about 3 or 4 months out of the year—when they did not need the kids in the fields. I had to go to a missionary school, a pay school, in order to obtain the fundamentals of learning. My mother and grandmother worked and slaved to pay the necessary fee that I might get an education such as that school afforded. I went from there to college, and I paid my way by working on the railroads and in the hotels.

I say that I, like thousands of other American Negroes, took advantage of all opportunities that were offered, whether freely given or whether they had to be paid for, to try to get into position to be all that an American citizen should be in spirit, in mind, and in thought.

I can stand here before you now in this fifty-seventh year of my life and tell you that I do not believe that in all America there are those who have a deeper love and appreciation for the country of their birth than does the American Negro.

Why should we put a school tax on a man's right to vote? Let us be honest about this thing. This Congress is not going to become a bureaucracy because it undertakes to make the Constitution a living thing. You know that that same Constitution meant to give every citizen in this country the right to vote. You know that. You know that any method used to try to keep a citizen from exercising that right is against the true spirit of the Constitution of the United States. You know that.

I am a lawyer, but I shall not attempt to argue the constitutionality of this question because I know that the shelves are full of lawbooks where those steeped in the knowledge of the law have differed over what is constitutional or what is not constitutional. I will leave that matter to the Supreme Court to decide. I want to talk to you about the human side of this thing.

A democracy is that government that exists by the consent of the governed, and that is the thing we are trying to do here today—to give certain citizens the right to say who shall govern them. As I look over this body, I believe that after this law will have been passed the same men who are here now will return here, because I believe they will face that situation and with the milk of human kindness in their hearts and understanding in their minds will gain the confidence of their voters wherever they may be. In the cause of the 13,000,000 patriotic and loyal Negro citizens I beseech the passage of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BALDWIN of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to thank those in charge of yielding time on this measure for kindly extending to me the allotment just granted. I deeply appreciate this courtesy. Directing your attention to the measure which is now before the House, H. R. 7, which is commonly referred to as the anti-poll-tax measure, I wish to say that this bill presents a question of the construction of our Constitution—and especially is this important since those of the opposition have laid particular stress upon the contention that this measure is unconstitutional. I, however, take issue with all those who declare this pending measure to be in conflict with our Federal Constitution—because to my mind there are at least three specific provisions of our Constitution which give both vigor and life to this pending bill under its provisions, and which undoubtedly assure the constitutionality of this proposed legislation. I refer to the fourteenth amendment, to article I, section 4, and to article I, section 2, of our Federal Constitution.

Under the fourteenth amendment to our Constitution, we find the provision that no State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States"; and this amendment further extends that protection to all citizens of the United States by the further provision "nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." There can certainly be no doubt of the full protection of "all citizens" under that amendment. It is my opinion that the pending measure is afforded full constitutional protection under this amendment, and that the proposed legislation comes squarely within the provisions of our fundamental and organic law.

The second provision of our Constitution, to which I have referred, is article I, section 4, which refers to the time, place, and manner of holding elections, all of which shall be "prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof." And, the third constitutional provision, to which I have directed your attention, is article I, section 2, which commands that Congressmen shall be chosen by the people of the several States by electors the qualifications of which it prescribes.

Mr. Chairman, under the pending bill, by its very terms and provisions, it is sought to outlaw the requirement that poll tax be paid by the citizens as a prerequisite to voting for Federal officers. This is a very important matter, and this legislation should command the very careful attention of every Member of the House of Representatives. We have before us the question as to whether or not certain of our citizens, who have not paid their poll tax, in those States where that payment is required before the citizen has the right to vote, can be deprived of the right of voting, in that manner, under our Constitution? That is the precise question that is to be determined by the pending measure.

In those States in which a provision of law exists which prohibits any citizen from voting at any election at which Federal officers are to be chosen, unless conclusive evidence is furnished by which it is shown that such citizen has paid his or her poll tax has, undoubtedly, prevented many citizens and voters—all of whom were qualified voters in every other respect—from casting their votes at such elections. Therefore, this measure directly affects the right of the people—the common people—to participate in our governmental affairs. Many people in our Nation who are honest, sincere, and patriotic Americans—who are facing the eternal struggle to earn their livelihood and to support those who are dependent upon them for support—yet, if they have failed to pay their poll tax, either by reason of their inability, or by inadvertence, in the amount assessed against them, then they are denied that inherent right of an American citizen to cast their vote on election day.

Mr. Chairman, we have ever looked upon our elections in the same light of their reference—that they are free and equal among our citizens. The right of franchise is a natural one, and it is respected as an inherent right in all of our people who have reached the required age and who have attained their residence at a fixed place for the required length of time. The age and the length of residence constitutes the legal requirements of the voters. These determine the qualifications of the voter to vote. Any other rule or regulation imposed by any State is only a matter respecting the manner or method of holding an election. Those States which have sought to add additional regulations which upon their face are strong evidence of the fact that the same is intended as a bar against certain classes or individuals exercising their right to vote, and the same operates as a discrimination against those citizens and classes of our citizens who, by reason of misfortune or inability, are unable to comply with the stringent requirements imposed. Such a policy should not obtain in this country in elections in which Federal officers are to be voted upon and elected. All elections should be entirely free and equal, and no elector or class of electors should be required to suffer the penalty of losing his or her vote for Federal officers because they have not been able to pay their poll tax.

Let us pursue this argument further, and let us analyze the length to which this policy may be extended. If a State may legally require the payment of poll tax as a prerequisite to voting for Federal officers, then many other abridgements might be imposed—the requirement that one belong to a certain church or lodge or that he or she be identified as following a certain and specific avocation might be established as a prerequisite to voting for Federal officers.

No one will seriously contend that any such abridgements would be countenanced by our Federal Government, although there is no constitutional prohibition which directly prevents it. We are at a loss to know why the poll tax was selected as the barrier which stands between the citizen and the right to vote. May I say that it might as well have embraced the payment of all taxes; or it might have been predicated upon the payment of all personal property taxes; or, perhaps, to the payment of all taxes assessed against the real estate owned by that certain person. I am very confident no one will make any attempt to justify either, or any, of the latter suggestions as a basis upon which to predicate the right to vote only when the same are fully paid and discharged. If those suggestions cannot be justified, then, pray tell me, how can anyone justify the requirement that all poll taxes be paid before the citizen can be considered as a legal voter for Federal officers in elections? And, pray tell me where the line of demarcation will be drawn, and what abridgements, if any, could be established in such cases which would meet the positive pronouncements of the Constitution? If the prerequisite to voting can be predicated upon the payment of the poll tax, then there is no limit to which that barrier or requirement may be extended. Such a prerequisite was never in contemplation under our Constitution, and that is certainly not the proper construction to be placed upon our Constitution now.

Mr. Chairman, the case of United States v. Classic (313 U. S. 299), decided on May 28, 1941, is directly in point on the question here presented. It is claimed by some of our Members that this proposed measure is unconstitutional, because it would be an impingement upon the right of the several States to fix the qualifications of electors. The distinction comes at this point—and may I urge that the payment of the poll tax as a prerequisite to voting is certainly not a qualification of a voter. That certainly, at most, is merely a regulation respecting the method and manner of holding elections. When the voter has attained the age, as fixed, and the length of residence as required, then he or she is a legal voter. Any other requirement can relate only to the method or manner of holding elections; that is merely a regulation which points out those whose ballots are entitled to be placed in the ballot box at the voting place. The age and residence fully determines the qualifications of all voters, if they are citizens of this country.

Mr. Chairman, in the Classic case, above cited, the Court says:

> Section 2 of article 1 commands that Congressmen shall be chosen by the people of the several States by electors, the qualifications of which it prescribes.

That language is certainly conclusive. There is no doubt remaining. The Federal Constitution prescribes the qualifications of Federal electors.

And in that same case—United States against Classic, supra—the Court holds both decisively and finally that—

> The right of the people to choose * * * is a right established and guaranteed by the Constitution.

This being true, Mr. Chairman, we must inevitably conclude that it is "a privilege or immunity of citizens of the United States" within the meaning of the first section of the fourteenth amendment, and, as such, under the fifth section thereof—

> Congress shall have power to enforce, by appropriate legislation, the provisions of this article, including abridgements of privileges * * * of citizens of the United States.

This language is both strong and positive. No doubt can remain after reading that language. This language certainly distinguishes the cases of Breedlove v. Suttles (302 U. S. 277, decided in 1937), and Pirtle v. Brown (118 Fed. (2d) 218, C. C. A. 6, 1941). Thus, we are confronted with the law as it is—that the State cannot abridge the right or privilege of citizens of the United States to exercise the right of franchise in Federal elections.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, it is my firm conviction that H. R. 7, which is now pending before the House, is wholly within the provisions of the Constitution, and that the same is constitutional, and that this measure should be enacted into law. We must remember as we ponder over this measure that our people who are qualified voters by reason of age and residence should not have the right of franchise taken away from them to vote for Federal officers by the unauthorized action of any State. It is my hope that this measure will be passed by the House, and that the right to vote for Federal officers at our elections will not be limited or abridged by the State in its efforts to place added regulations regarding the method and manner of holding elections. Let our elections be forever free and equal among all of our citizens.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HARE].

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, this is not a race question we are trying to settle today, but one far more important and far reaching in its objective. If it were a race question, as some would have us believe, it would affect only about 10,000,000 people, which approximately represents the colored population in the United States. However, it is a question in which the security of 130,000,000 people, the population of the entire United States, is involved. It is a question which goes to the very heart and core of our constitutional and representative system of Government provided for by the people of the Thirteen Original States when they ratified the Constitution establishing our dual system of government, one generally referred to as the Federal Government and the other known as the State system of government. I am sure that any student of political history knows that in ratifying the Constitution the people intended to grant the Federal Government with delegated powers and stated definitely within the Constitution that powers not delegated therein to the three coordinate departments of government were definitely reserved to the several States and the people.

One of the powers reserved was that the States would retain the right to determine and fix the qualifications of electors by the States themselves and not until last year when this body undertook to pass what is known as an anti-poll-tax bill that the right referred to was ever questioned. Should this bill, which undertakes to deprive the States of the right to fix the qualifications of electors be enacted and become a law, it will mean the hasty disintegration of our constitutional and democratic system of government and I cannot believe but that there are only a few Members who would welcome the transition. However, in view of the action taken on yesterday by the House of Representatives it is purely and solely a political movement coupled with the hope that it may never become law; yet if the Senate, the Chief Executive, and the Supreme Court should be similarly motivated in their actions if an opportunity were afforded the crime of murdering or destroying the Constitution will have been consummated.

I am quite certain that no argument that I or anyone else might make would obviate the action that this body will take today and my primary purpose in requesting this time is not to argue the question in any great detail, but that I might disabuse to some extent the unprejudiced mind which unfortunately has allowed itself to be influenced and guided by misinformation and propaganda so adroitly disseminated within the last few years.

We were very much disturbed a few weeks ago upon reading press accounts purporting to be the result of a survey made among college students throughout the country showing the lack of information among such students in respect to the history of the United States, but as I listened to the speeches on this subject today I am not greatly alarmed over the college students' ignorance of history, because this is not a difficult subject, and these college boys will have plenty of time to fully advise themselves from the time they finish college until they get to Congress, where they will be able to demonstrate as much familiarity with the political history of our country as has been displayed here this afternoon. It has been suggested by several speakers that the poll-tax law in some of the States was designed and enacted primarily for the purpose of disfranchising the colored man. Those of you who are familiar with United States history know that for 10 years after the Civil War my home State, the State of South Carolina, along with a number of others, was under military rule. Martial law prevailed. During that time the colored people and their political friends, whom we often refer to as carpetbaggers and scalawags, had control of the State legislature. Now, in 1868 they adopted and ratified a constitution, and for the benefit of those who may be in the same grade of the college students referred to in the survey to which I have alluded, I desire to read article IX, section 2 of that constitution. It is as follows:

The general assembly may provide annually for a poll tax not to exceed $1 on each poll, which shall be applied exclusively to the public-school fund, and no additional poll tax shall be levied by any municipal corporation.

That constitution was prepared, adopted, and ratified by the colored people of my State and not by people who wanted to deprive them of their right of suffrage, as has been alleged here this afternoon.

They did not stop there because they had control of the legislature for 8 years after that, and I am still referring to the colored people and their professed political friends. In 1873 they passed a law providing that it would be unlawful for any one to refuse to pay a poll tax, and if after he failed and refused to pay the tax, white or black, he could be arraigned before a commissioner and found guilty of a misdemeanor and sentenced to jail for a term of not less than 10 days.

This was the first time in the history of that Commonwealth that the State legislature enacted a law levying a tax and making it a criminal offense not to pay it.

For the benefit of those who claim to be familiar and greatly interested in the solution and correction of the illegal and unlawful imposition of the poll-tax law on the colored people in my State I want to quote this statute found on page 357 of a publication obtained from the Congressional Library entitled "South Carolina Laws 1872–1873," purporting to record the "acts and joint resolutions of the General Assembly of the State of South Carolina passed at the regular session of 1872–73. Printed by order of the general assembly, and designed to form a part of the fifteenth volume of the Statutes at Large, commencing with the acts of 1871–72, Columbia, S. C., by Republican Printing Co., State printers, 1873. The statute explains itself. It is as follows:

TO ENFORCE THE PAYMENT OF THE POLL TAX

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of South Carolina, now met and sitting in general assembly, and by the authority of the same, that there shall be assessed on all taxable polls in the State an annual tax of $1 on each poll, the proceeds of which shall be applied to educational purposes; and if any person shall refuse or neglect to pay said tax, before the expiration of the time fixed for the payment of all taxes, the county treasurer shall, within 20 days thereafter, furnish a list of all delinquent polls to the county commissioners of the county. Where the persons so taxed and delinquent have no property to be distrained for the payment of said poll tax, as authorized in the act providing for the assessment and taxation of property, approved September 15, 1868, the person or persons so delinquent shall be subject to a penalty of double the amount of their poll tax; and on failing to pay the same, when notified of the fact, within 10 days after such notice, such person or persons shall be required to work upon the highway or roads, in their respective counties; as the county commissioners may direct, not exceeding 3 days.

SEC. 2. That said county commissioners shall, after receiving the delinquent poll lists, summon such delinquents to appear at their office and then and there give them the opportunity to pay the double tax; and, on failing to do so, such delinquents shall be required to work upon the highways and roads of their respective counties as the county commissioners may direct; and if the said delinquents, being personally warned by the said commissioners, or by written notice, served at their place of residence, shall refuse or neglect, having had 10 days' notice, to attend by themselves, or substitutes equally able to perform said duties as themselves, or to pay the double tax in lieu of said duties, or, having attended themselves, shall refuse to conform to the requirements of this act, or obey the directions of the county commissioners, they shall be considered guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, be imprisoned for the same, in a county jail, for a term not less than 10 days (Public Law 287 A. D. 1873).

Mr. Chairman, my purpose in reading the law and giving the source of my authority is to prove to the unprejudiced mind that the poll-tax law in my State was not enacted by that class of people referred to here today as the oppressor of the colored man, saying that we enacted a law primarily for the purpose of disfranchising him and then requiring him to present a poll-tax receipt in an election before he is allowed to vote.

I listened with a great deal of interest to the gentlewoman from Ohio when she attempted to revile those of us who happened to be from the South and to admonish us what we should do, to which I will not attempt to make reply. I prefer to follow the example of Him, "who, when he was reviled, reviled not again."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BURCH].

Mr. BURCH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the bill now under consideration would make it unlawful for any State, municipality, or other governmental subdivision to require payment of a poll tax as a prerequisite for voting at a Federal election. This proposal is clearly an invasion and violation of the rights of the sovereign States. It violates and is in direct conflict with article I, section 2, of the Constitution of the United States, which reads:

The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second year by the people of the several States and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature.

The right of suffrage is a privilege granted by the States. Each State has the constitutional authority to prescribe the qualifications of voters. These qualifications may include limitations as to age, residence, tax payments, and citizenship. Tests as to literacy and education may also be prescribed. Poll taxes are levied in many States and as a requisite for voting in seven. In Virginia the revenue derived from this tax is used for educational purposes.

The United States Supreme Court has held that the poll-tax requirement is not in violation of the Constitution and as late as 1937 specifically held that the privilege of voting is not derived from the United States but is conferred by the States. The proponents of this legislation are wrong in advocating a Federal statute to abolish the poll-tax requirement.

In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of September 22, 1942, there was inserted an able argument by the Honorable Abram P. Staples, the attorney general of Virginia, in opposition to the proposal to abolish State poll taxes. Mr. Staples was invited to discuss the constitutional power of Congress to enact legislation of this kind. Because of the transcending importance of the question and its vital effect upon the integrity and even continued existence of the governments of the States as established by the Constitution, Mr. Staples felt it his duty to undertake to maintain the following propositions:

First. The Constitution reserves in the States the exclusive power to determine the manner of choosing its electors to vote for President or Vice President of the United States and confers no power whatever on Congress to legislate on this subject.

Second. Article I, section 2, of the Constitution, and the seventeenth amendment, reserve unto the States the exclusive power to prescribe the qualifications of the electors for Members of the Senate and House of Representatives, and this power is in no way modified or impaired by the power delegated to Congress by article I, section 4, to regulate the time, place, and manner of holding elections.

Third. The requirement of the payment of a poll tax as a prerequisite to the right to vote is a qualification of an elector within the meaning of article I, section 2, of the Constitution and of the seventeenth amendment.

Fourth. Even if the requirement of the payment of a poll tax be deemed not to be a qualification of electors it is nevertheless a proper exercise of the reserved powers of the States over suffrage, as well as of the taxing powers of the States.

Fifth. The Constitution protects the right to vote of only those who are qualified to vote under State statutes.

Sixth. Whether a State has exercised its constitutional power to prescribe the qualifications of electors in an unconstitutional manner so as to deprive citizens of rights guaranteed to them by the Constitution is a judicial question, and is for the courts, not the Congress, to determine.

The foregoing propositions were clearly discussed by Mr. Staples in the order set out and I earnestly invite my colleagues to read his able and convincing argument which, as stated, is in the Appendix of the RECORD of September 22, 1942. He concluded his argument with the following:

The Constitution has not delegated to Congress any regulatory power whatever over suffrage requirements prescribed by the States. The courts possess ample power to protect against any denial of constitutional rights which might result from voting qualifications or conditions which the States may impose. The proposed bill is clearly unconstitutional.

There is no race discrimination in Virginia by reason of the poll-tax requirement. No person is disfranchised by the levy. All persons must meet other requirements before becoming eligible to vote. Such requirements obtain in States other than poll-tax States. The payment of a poll tax as prerequisite to vote is as legal as the requirement that a prospective voter must pass a literacy test. No one is advocating the abolishment of the literacy test in such States where same is required. The payment of $1.50 is no serious obstacle to anyone who wishes to exercise the solemn right of franchise.

Each State and locality has its peculiar problems. The Federal Government should not interfere in matters of this kind when it is plain that the question of States' rights is involved. This is a flagrant infringement on the rights of the States.

Unity is greatly desired in this critical period. It is imperative that we have unity. Let us handle this matter in an orderly manner and pursuant to constitutional procedure.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON].

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, it is generally conceded that voting is a State function; that suffrage is not a matter of right, but a privilege to be conferred by the States. In Federal elections qualifications of voters for Members of Congress are in article 1, section 2, of the Constitution. They are the qualifications for the electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature. Those qualifications are to be prescribed by the State, but it is said under article 1, section 4, where Senators are mentioned, although not referred to in article 1, section 2, that under the power to regulate the time and place and manner of choosing Senators and Representatives, the Congress reserved the power, under the term "regulation," to prescribe qualifications.

I assert that if that argument were true, for 123 years the Congress would have had the power to prescribe qualifications of members of the State legislatures, or electors for members of the State legislatures, who voted for United States Senators. It never undertook to exercise any such power. It thus admitted it had no such power. It must follow that Congress has no such power as to voters for Representatives.

Among the qualifications for voting are sex, residence, age, taxes, including poll taxes. It has been said that, under the Classic case, for the first time the Supreme Court of the United States has indicated that it would go into the matter of the qualifications of voters. That case involved a primary election on the facts in that case. That case decided that under the necessary and proper clauses of the Constitution, under the clause of the Constitution guaranteeing a republican form of government, the Federal Government would protect a citizen in the exercise of his right to vote for Representatives.

I call attention to this language in the Classic case:

> Obviously included within the right to choose secured by the Constitution is the right of qualified voters within a State to cast their ballots, and have them counted in congressional elections.

There was no question of the qualifications of voters involved. It was a question there whether a man who is qualified would be permitted to cast his vote.

The Supreme Court has decided that State poll taxes are not unconstitutional. In 1937 the Supreme Court of the United States in the Breedlove case upheld the validity of a statute requiring the payment of a poll tax to vote in a Federal election. After the Classic case the Supreme Court of the United States, as constituted at present, in the Pirtle case, involving the poll tax in a Federal election refused a writ of certiorari, thus upholding the doctrine in the Breedlove case, to wit, that the qualifications of voters in senatorial and congressional elections is a matter for the States.

The bill under consideration undertakes to say that that which has been deemed to be a qualification from time immemorial, to wit, the payment of a poll tax, shall not be a qualification. It is admitted, therefore, that section 4 of article 1 does not apply. The bill admits that poll taxes are a qualification, and under the guise of denominating the payment of a poll tax a hindrance, the advocates of the pending bill are hard pressed to declare that payment of taxes, that sex, that age are in the same category as fraud, intimidation, and corruption. We cannot make white black by calling it so.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we took an oath to support the Constitution. If we believe that a bill is unconstitutional we should oppose it. We cannot salve our conscience by saying, "We will pass it up to the Supreme Court." The Congress of the United States has held that only by constitutional amendment can qualifications of voters be changed. Sex was abolished as a qualification by the nineteenth amendment, and the payment of a poll tax as a qualification for voting can only be abolished by an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

The bill not only admits that poll taxes may be a qualification for voting by providing that such a requirement shall not be deemed a qualification, but the bill also provides that such a requirement shall be deemed an interference which is the equivalent of a pernicious activity. As stated, Congress has never undertaken to restrict or limit qualifications except by constitutional amendment. The fifteenth amendment provides that the right to vote shall not be denied or abridged on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. The nineteenth amendment prescribes that the right to vote shall not be denied or abridged on account of sex.

In the pending bill the qualifications for voting in seven of the States are proscribed. If Congress can proscribe, then Congress can prescribe. If Congress can prescribe poll taxes in 7 of the States, then Congress can prescribe qualifications in all of the 48 States. The functions of the States with respect to suffrage would thus be abolished.

I revise my remarks by saying that the bill is in violation of the rights of the States. It is in violation of the Constitution of the United States which Members of Congress have sworn to uphold. We cannot discharge our obligations under our oaths by lightly passing by the unconstitutionality of the pending measure and saying that we leave that question to the Supreme Court. We cannot thus salve our consciences. We make sorry spectacles of ourselves when we ignore the question of constitutionality. Poll taxes, like sex, as a qualification for voting can only be abolished by an amendment to the Federal Constitution. They cannot be abolished as proposed by statute.

In the Seventy-seventh Congress, second session, the House considered and passed H. R. 1024, known as the Geyer bill. At that time there was pending in the Senate S. 1280, known as the Pepper bill. The Geyer bill was amended by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, and as amended was reported to the Senate. The bill, however, was not passed by the Senate. The Judiciary Committee of the Senate substituted an entirely new bill for the Geyer bill. The pending bill, H. R. 7, is an exact copy of the substitute proposed by the Senate Judiciary Committee of the Seventy-seventh Congress, second session, for the Geyer bill.

I made a number of speeches in the Seventy-seventh Congress, second session, in opposition to the Geyer bill. In revising my remarks I can do no better than repeating substantially, word for word, the remarks I made when the Geyer bill was before the House on October 12, 1942. My argument in opposition to the Geyer bill applies with equal force in opposition to the pending bill. I spoke in opposition to the Federal control of elections on September 6, 1942, and July 23, 1942. I also spoke in opposition to Federal anti-poll-tax bills on October 13 and on June 8, 1942.

I call attention to the fact that the proponents have not attempted to submit any authorities in support of the validity of the bill. I opposed the rule, and I oppose the bill. I am gladly giving my reasons for my opposition. I shall confine myself to a discussion of the bill and shall undertake to demonstrate beyond a doubt that suffrage is a State function.

I shall call attention to the pertinent constitutional provisions, including provisions respecting Senators, Representatives, and Presidential electors. I shall show that qualifications can only be changed by constitutional amendment, as was done by the fifteenth and nineteenth amendments. I shall show that the Classic case did not involve the qualification of voters. I shall emphasize that registration for voting is required in many States and that a small vote is no reason for the passage of the bill. I shall show in reason and upon authority that voting is a State privilege and that legislation changing or abolishing the qualification of voters is not permissible under the Constitution.

I shall undertake to demonstrate that under the Constitution the qualification of voters for Senators and Representatives is in the States and that the anti-poll-tax bill is in violation of the right accorded to the States by the Federal Constitution. I shall further demonstrate that the poll tax is universally recognized as a qualification and that Congress is without power to provide that it shall not be requred as a requisite for voting.

I. SUFFRAGE A STATE FUNCTION

The whole subject of the regulation of elections, including the prescribing of qualifications for suffrage, is left by the National Constitution to the several States, except as it is provided by that instrument that the electors for Representatives in Congress shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature, and as the fifteenth amendment forbids denying to citizens the right to vote on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Participation in the elective franchise is a privilege rather than a right, and it is granted or denied on the grounds of public policy. (Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, 8th ed., vol. 2, p. 1360.)

Suffrage is not a universal right but is a privilege to be extended or denied by the States. (Story's Commentaries on the Constitution, vol. 1, 5th ed., secs. 579-584.)

The privilege to vote is generally derived from the States. The right is not conferred but is protected by the Federal Constitution. The fourteenth amendment does not have the effect of conferring such rights.

Subject to the limitation contained in the fifteenth amendment of the Constitution, the power to fix qualifications of the voters is vested in the States. (McCrary's American Law of Elections, sec. 1.)

The elective franchise is not a right, privilege, or immunity incident to citizenship. The Constitution left to the States the qualification of voters. (Paine Law of Elections, secs. 76 and 78.)

At the time of the adoption of the Constitution, all of the Thirteen Original States not only prescribed qualifications for voting, but they were jealous of the exclusive rights of the States as to suffrage. The qualifications, while similar, were by no means uniform. Among those generally required in the Thirteen Original States, as well as among the States today, are citizenship, residence, age, in some States the payment of taxes, and in many States, registration.

There was much debate in the Constitutional Convention as to the qualifications of the electors for Members of Congress. The members of the convention could not agree upon uniform qualifications for voters for Representatives in Congress and the matter of qualifications was, therefore, left to the States, with the restriction that Members of Congress should have the same qualifications required for those voting for Members of the most numerous branch of the Legislature.

The Constitution provided for the election of Members of Congress, and while the qualifications of electors was left to the States, Congress was given the power of making or altering the regulations as to the time, place, and manner of the election of Representatives and Senators, with no power to change the places of choosing Senators. Such power was essential to enable Congress to function or to exist, or to exercise the powers that had been conferred upon it.

A compromise was adopted at the convention. The supreme power of the States in suffrage was recognized by Congress, and to guarantee that the qualified electors would be protected in their voting and Congress was given power to alter or change the time, place, and manner of elections.

II. CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS

Article I, section 2, is as follows:

The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second year by the people of the several States, and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature.

There is common consent and agreement that the States have the right to prescribe the qualifications requisite for electors of Members of Congress, but it is maintained that the poll tax is not a qualification but a regulation.

Article I, section 4, is as follows:

The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

By some it is maintained that poll taxes are a restriction or condition or regulation and not a qualification. It is maintained, therefore, that Congress may eliminate poll taxes. It is asserted by others that poll taxes are a pernicious activity and that they may be eliminated by act of Congress under the guise of preventing pernicious political activity. Statutes preventing pernicious activities have been approved by Congress under section 4 in congressional elections, under the necessary and proper clause, and under the constitutional guaranty of a republican form of government.

Article I, section 8, clause 18, is:

To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers.

Article IV, section 4, provides, among other things:

The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government.

There is a difference between fraud, corruption, ballot-box stuffing, and other pernicious practices and the qualifications of electors. Among the oldest of the qualifications in the mother countries and in the Colonies was ownership of property and payment of taxes. Tax and property qualifications obtained in varying degrees in all of the Colonies at the time of the adoption of the Constitution. The poll tax is probably the oldest of all taxes. Like many other taxes it may not be popular and it may be restrictive. Taxes, whether property taxes or poll taxes, have been the cause of uprisings and of revolutions. The poll tax or head tax was the cause of a peasant uprising in England under Wat Tyler in 1381, and taxation without representation was largely responsible for the Revolution.

It is a prostitution of language to say that a qualification of taxes, whether property or poll, shall now be declared to be a pernicious political activity. Fraud, intimidation, corruption, ballot-box stuffing are crimes. Taxes may be onerous—they may be unpopular—but they are not in the same category with pernicious political activities. The proponents are hard pressed when they now ask Congress to declare a tax that has obtained through the centuries to be a pernicious political activity. No better proof could be desired of the weakness and invalidity of the anti-poll-tax bill.

The Constitution was not only mindful of the rights of the States with respect to suffrage, and not only recognized these rights, but it recognized the rights of the State legislatures. The language in article I, section 4, "except as to the places of choosing Senators" is unique.

The Constitution left to the State legislatures the places for their meetings. The rights of the States were again safeguarded. (Story, vol. 1, sec. 828.)

The language giving to Congress the power to make or alter such regulations does not seem to have attracted much attention or to have encountered any opposition during the Convention, but the provision was assailed in the State conventions, and a majority of the Original Thirteen States tentatively proposed amendments to the effect that the Congress would not be authorized to make regulations unless the States failed or refused to provide the qualifications of electors or for the elections. It was finally agreed that Congress should have the regulation as provided in section 4 to provide for its preservation. The debates on this section are most informative.

Neither the members of the Convention or the Thirteen States in their ratifying conventions purported to take away entirely the alterative power of Congress, but proposed to restrict it to cases where a State neglected, refused, or was disabled to exercise the power of regulating elections. (Story, vol. 1, sec. 827.)

Mr. Madison, in commenting on article I, section 4, said, and I quote:

To give the National Legislature a power not only to alter the provisions of the States but to make regulations in case the States should fail or refuse altogether. (Fifth Elliot's Debates, 402.)

Madison's reasoning is easily explained. The States would not have ratified the Constitution if it had not been generally understood that the qualifications of electors would be the function of the States. In the Federalist, Hamilton said that the propriety of the clause in question rested, and I quote:

Upon the evidence of the plain proposition that every government should contain in itself the means of its own preservation.

In the ratifying conventions, as I have stated, a majority of the States proposed to limit the action of Congress to cases of neglect or refusal, but that proposal was abandoned upon the ground that there would be no occasion for congressional interference so long as the States performed their duty.

In the Virginia Convention, Madison, who had kept a record of the debates in the Constitutional Convention, advocated the ratification of the Constitution. Alexander Hamilton, who really favored a more centralized government, is responsible for the ratification of the Constitution by New York. In all of the conventions, section 4 of article I was assailed. It was most bitterly attacked. Hamilton's interpretation leaves no room for doubt. I quote from him:

> Its authority would be expressly restricted to the regulation of the times, the places, and the manner of elections. The qualifications of the persons who may choose or be chosen, as has been remarked upon other occasions, are defined and fixed in the Constitution and are unalterable by the legislature. (The Federalist, LIX, LI.)

> The history of the times indicates beyond reasonable doubt that if the Constitution makers had claimed for this section the broad regulation for which some now contend, the Constitution would never have been ratified (Story on the Constitution, vol. 1, sec. 814, et seq.)

As Justice Field in his dissenting opinion pointed out in Ex parte Clark (100 U. S., p. 418), and I quote:

> And the regulations as to the manner of holding them cannot extend beyond the designation of the mode in which the will of the voters shall be expressed and ascertained.

Again I quote from the same page:

> The power does not authorize Congress to determine who shall participate in the elections or what shall be the qualifications of voters. These are matters not pertaining to or involved in the manner of holding the election, and their regulation rests exclusively with the States. The only restriction upon them with respect to these matters is found in the provision that the electors of Representatives in Congress shall have the qualifications required for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature, and the provision relating to the suffrage of the colored race. And whatever regulations Congress may prescribe as to the manner of holding the elections for Representatives must be so framed as to leave the election of State officers free.

The language employed in section 4 is simple and easy to understand. I quote from Chief Justice Fuller, in McPherson v. Blacker (146 U. S., p. 27):

> The framers of the Constitution employed words in their natural sense and, where they are plain and clear, resort to collateral aids to interpretation is unnecessary and cannot be indulged in to narrow or enlarge the text; but where there is ambiguity or doubt or where two views may well be entertained, contemporaneous and subsequent practical construction are entitled to the greatest weight.

In all the 153 years of the history of the United States, Congress has never previously undertaken by statute to prescribe the qualifications of voters for Senators and Representatives. The seventeenth amendment provides for the election of Senators, but the same language with respect to the qualifications of electors that obtains in article I, section 2, is found in amendment XVII. I quote from amendment XVII:

> The electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislatures.

> There is a difference between manner and qualifications. Constitutional authority given to the legislature to prescribe the time and manner does not include the power to determine what shall constitute a legal voter (Livesly v. Litchfield, 83d Pac. 142; 47 Oreg. 248; 114 American State Repts. 920; Words and Phrases, vol. 26, p. 358).

Under article I, section 4, Congress has the right to make either new regulations or add to or modify State regulations. Ex parte Seybold (100 U. S., p. 371). This involved the enforcement acts passed May 31, 1870—Sixteenth United States Reports, page 144—and amended on July 14, 1870—Sixteenth United States Reports, page 254—and again amended on June 10, 1872—Seventeenth United States Reports, page 347. These acts relate to elections of Members of Congress and were passed to secure purity of elections and the right of citizens to vote without molestation.

Following the ratification of the Constitution, there was no effort on the part of Congress to regulate time, place, and manner of elections until 1842. Some States elected their Representatives in Congress by districts and others from the State at large. Some nominated by districts and elected all Members from the State at large. But uniformity with respect to elections was desired, and the act of 1842 (5 Stat., p. 491) provided for the election of Members of Congress by districts. It was not until after the War between the States and after the ratification of the fifteenth amendment that Congress undertook to pass regulations with respect to the time, places, and manner of electing Representatives. Congress had provided immediately following the War between the States, for uniformity of date as to the election of Senators (14 Stat., p. 243). I may remark in passing that after passing the seventeenth amendment Congress passed a temporary law that expired in 3 years for the election of Senators (38 Stat., p. 384). But when passions were high following the War between the States, with freedom for former slaves, the enforcement acts were passed to prevent fraud, corruption, ballot-box stuffing, and intimidation in connection with congressional elections. Temporarily the landmarks of the fathers were forgotten. There was strife, and, finally, on February 8, 1894 (28 Stat. 36), the enforcement acts were practically repealed, and Congress again left to the States, as it had for 80 years previous to the passage of the acts, not only the qualifications of voters for Members of Congress but the times, places, and manner of elections. Human nature is very much the same. The results in the Southern States were not what the advocates of the enforcement acts anticipated. There was reflex action. The same rules obtained in all of the States, and there was undesirable interference and intimidation with elections in other States than in the South, all of which resulted in the repeal of the enforcement acts, except the conspiracy sections, which remain.

These acts were based upon section 4 of article I. There was never any attempt to eliminate taxes, either poll or property, as all agreed Congress had no power to prevent the States levying taxes. There was never any attempt on the part of the Congress, when passions ran high following the War between the States, to prescribe qualifications for voters in congressional elections. The whole purpose was to guarantee that the legal and qualified voters in the several States should be protected in their right to vote. In its fundamental sense the privilege of suffrage is derived from the States, but the right of voting for Members of Congress is also found in the Constitution. Electors owe their right to vote to the Constitution, but the qualifications must be prescribed by the State (Ex parte Yarbrough, 100 U. S. 651; American Jurisprudence, vol. 18, p. 210).

No one disputes now that in State elections a poll tax may be required before the citizen can vote. While the requirement has been abandoned in many States, poll taxes and property taxes still remain, and these taxes obtain under the heading of qualifications. (American Jurisprudence (1938, vol. 18, p. 212, 226, 227, and 228.)) I may remark in passing that literacy, and the ability to read or understand the Constitution, are among the qualifications in many States, including Massachusetts and New York. If Congress can eliminate the qualification of the poll tax requirement, it can eliminate the qualification of literacy, or the educational qualifications.

Under section 4 of article I, Congress may make regulations as to the conduct of elections or may supplement the State regulations. It may impose additional penalties. Our legislative history from 1870 shows that except for a period of about 24 years it was the policy to leave regulations to the States for the first 80 years of the history of the Republic (U. S. v. Mosely (238 U. S., p. 383); U. S. v. Gradwell (243 U. S., p. 476); American Jurisprudence, vol. 18, p. 187).

The enforcement acts following the War between the States confined themselves to elections for Members of Congress. There was no reference to Presidential electors and there was a reason why Presidential electors were not included within the terms of the statute. The justification for the enforcement statutes was the regulation authorized by section 4 of article I. There was no such regulation authorized with respect to Presidential electors.

III. PRESIDENTIAL ELECTORS

Article II, section 1, provides, and I quote:

> Each State shall appoint, in such manner as the legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors, equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in Congress; but no Senator or Representative, or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, shall be appointed an elector.

The legislature appoints the electors. It may appoint them directly, as was done in the early history of the country, or it may provide for their election. The State legislature is vested with the power of appointment or election. It is significant that Congress was not authorized to make or change the regulations with respect to the appointment of electors. Congress was authorized to determine the time of choosing the electors and the day on which they shall give their votes, which day shall be the same throughout the United States (art. II, sec. 4). Congress has passed an act to provide for the time of choosing electors. All of the States complied, including the State of Maine, but Congress did not undertake to regulate the manner of the election of Presidential electors. It did not undertake to supervise such elections. No such power is given to Congress with respect to electors. Hence, I repeat, the enforcement acts following the War between the States made no reference to Presidential or Vice Presidential elections, or the elections of Presidential and Vice Presidential electors. Under the Constitution the legislature of each State directed the manner of appointment of Presidential electors. It is significant that in the Constitution the power to regulate the appointment or election of Presidential electors is not given to Congress (In Re Green, 134 U. S. 377). The legislatures have exclusive power to direct the manner of Presidential elections (McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U. S., p. 1). I quote from the opinion by Chief Justice Fuller, on page 38:

> The fifteenth amendment exempted citizens of the United States from discrimination in the exercise of the elective franchise on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. The right to vote in the States comes from the States, but the right of exemption from the prohibited discrimination comes from the United States. The first has not been granted or secured by the Constitution of the United States, but the last has been (U. S. v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 542; U. S. v. Reese, 92 U. S. 214).

As I have stated, in 1866 Congress provided for a uniform time for the election of Senators by the legislatures—Statutes at Large 14, page 243. But it is significant that Congress, in passing the statute for congressional elections, recognized the right of the States, and the act of Congress fixing the time for the election of Representatives distinctly provided that it did not apply to any State whereby under the constitution State officials were elected at another time. Hence it is that Maine, where under the constitution State officials are elected in September, still elects her Senators and her Representatives during the month of September. The act of 1875—Eighteenth Statutes, page 400—provided for a uniform time for the election of Representatives, but exceptions were made that enable Maine, because of the constitutional September election, to elect Senators and Representatives at a different time from any other State in the Union. However, in Maine, because the Constitution authorizes Congress to provide a certain day for Presidential electors, Maine still votes for Presidential electors in November.

The bill embraces not only senatorial and congressional elections but elections for Presidential electors. The same may be said of the Hatch acts, the original of which was passed in 1939.

A statute was passed in 1907 preventing contributions by corporations in elections of Presidential electors, as a pernicious political activity. The acts of 1910, 1911, 1912, and 1918 were confined to pernicious political activities in senatorial and congressional elections. The Corrupt Practices Act of February 28, 1925, which repealed practically all of the prior acts, applied to expenditures and practices in connection with the election of Senators and Representatives, but it also prohibited contributions in connection with any election of Presidential electors.

Presidential elections are authorized, as are the election of Representatives in Congress, by the Constitution. There is the power of regulating the time, place, and manner of the elections of Representatives and Senators, but no power for regulating the time, place, and manner of elections of Presidential electors, under article I, section 8, clause 18, and I quote:

> To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof.

Congress thus has a right to protect and safeguard from fraud and corruption the election of Senators and Representatives as well as Presidential electors, but the power in Presidential electors does not come from the power of regulation, as in the case under article I, section 4, which is limited to Senators and Representatives.

If the advocates of the bill who assert that poll taxes are regulations are correct, then I maintain that Congress is without authority to provide for the elimination of poll taxes in the election of Presidential electors. The argument that a poll tax is a condition, a restriction, or a regulation and not a qualification falls to the ground, for if it be sound then the bill is unconstitutional in undertaking to regulate the election of Presidential electors. On the other hand, if Congress has a right to pass legislation to prohibit and prevent pernicious activities in congressional and Presidential elections, section 4, article I, is not applicable or the source of power. If the power of regulation for congressional elections is derived from section 4, then there is no power of regulation for Presidential elections.

IV. NINETEENTH AMENDMENT

It is universally agreed that the States can prescribe qualifications for voting. Women were qualified in some States. In other States they were disqualified. It would be just as logical to have maintained that Congress could have passed an act prohibiting disqualification on account of sex, and call it pernicious political activity as it is to say that Congress can denounce the payment of poll taxes as a political activity. It took a constitutional amendment to enfranchise women. It will take a constitutional amendment to eliminate the poll tax. Congress cannot change the qualification of voters in the States. The advocates of the pending bill limit the poll tax to Federal officials. They deny that the poll tax is a qualification. This is a mere ruse. The fact is that when the Constitution was adopted all of the States had property or tax qualifications for voters. It was a qualification and not a manner at the time the Constitution was adopted, and it is a qualification still.

If Congress has the right to strike down a qualification for voting prescribed by the State, then it is in the power of Congress to impose additional qualifications for voting for Members of Congress. If Congress has the right to restrict, it has the right to broaden. Article I, section 2, provides that the States shall prescribe the qualifications. If Congress now attempts to say that persons not qualified to vote under the State's laws may vote for Members of Congress, it would be equally in violation of the fundamental law. The bill is unconstitutional in dealing with qualifications under the guise of pernicious activity.

V. POLL TAX A STATE QUALIFICATION

Poll taxes as qualifications for voting have been upheld by the Supreme Court of the United States. Breedlove v. Suttles (302 U. S. 277). Pirtle v. Brown (118 Fed. 2, 218), certiorari was denied by the Supreme Court (62 Sup. Ct. Rept. 64, 314 U. S. 621). The privilege of voting in the State is conferred upon the State except as the same is limited by the fifteenth and the nineteenth amendments of the Federal Constitution. The State may condition suffrage as it deems appropriate.

VI. CLASSIC CASE

The proponents of the bill rely upon the recent case of United States v. Classic (313 U. S. 299). This case, however, is not important. It does not involve the qualification of voters. It is a criminal prosecution to prevent a conspiracy to deprive a citizen of Louisiana from voting in a congressional election. In Louisiana the primaries elect the choice. The State conducts and pays the cost of the primary elections. The primary election was involved in the Classic case. The Court held in the Classic case that a citizen had a right to be protected in having his ballot cast and counted in a primary election for Representative in the State of Louisiana under the facts in that case. It is sometimes loosely said that the Classic case is authority for the passage of the pending Geyer bill. I quote from the opinion of the Court, from page 315 of the Superior State Court in that case:

> While, in a loose sense, the right to vote for Representatives in Congress is sometimes spoken of as a right derived from the States (see Minor v. Happersett (21 Wall. 162, 170), United States v. Reese (92 U. S. 214, 217–218), McPherson v. Blacker (146 U. S. 1, 38–39), Breedlove v. Suttles (302 U. S. 277, 283)), this statement is true only in the sense that the States are authorized by the Constitution to legislate on the subject as provided by section 2, of article I, to the extent that Congress has not restricted State action by the exercise of its powers to regulate elections under section 4, and its more general power under article I, section 8, clause 18, of the Constitution "to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers." (See Ex parte Siebold (100 U. S. 371), Ex parte Yarbrough, supra (663, 664), Swafford v. Templeton (185 U. S. 487), Wiley v. Sinkler (179 U. S. 58, 64).)

Obviously included within the right to choose, secured by the Constitution, is the right of qualified voters within a State to cast their ballots and have them counted at congressional elections. This Court has consistently held that this is a right secured by the Constitution (Ex parte Yarbrough, supra; Wiley v. Sinkler, supra; Swafford v. Templeton, supra; United States v. Mosley, supra; see Ex parte Siebold, supra; In re Coy (127 U. S. 731); Logan v. United States (144 U. S. 263)). And since the constitutional command is without restriction or limitation, the right, unlike those guaranteed by the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments, is secured against the action of individuals as well as of States (Ex parte Yarbrough, supra; Logan v. United States, supra).

The court was passing upon the legality of a prosecution for conspiracy to prevent a citizen voting in a congressional election. The qualifications of the voter were not involved. It was admitted. There is no justification in the language quoted from the Classic case for the pending bill. The right to vote is derived from the States. The right to vote for a Member of Congress is guaranteed by the Federal Constitution, but the qualifications of electors is prescribed by the State. I call attention to the fact that the rights of qualified voters were under consideration. As stated, the right of qualified voters within a State to cast their ballots and have them counted at congressional elections was involved. The fact that then Chief Justice Stone spoke, as I have quoted, in the Classic case of the rights of qualified voters to be protected shows conclusively that while any statement as to qualifications of voters would have been obiter dicta in that case, nevertheless the opinion in expressed terms referred to qualified voters. Qualified voters are the voters qualified by the States.

VII. QUALIFICATIONS OF VOTERS FOR THE STATES

The Supreme Court of the United States in the Breedlove case, decided in 1937, held that the payment of a poll tax as a requirement or qualification for voting in elections for Representatives is not in violation of the Federal Constitution and is within the power of the State. The Court, as now constituted, in the Pirtle case denied a writ of certiorari, and thus affirmed the doctrine announced in the Breedlove case.

The bill forbids the collection of a poll tax in Federal elections, to insure honesty and to prevent pernicious political activities, as an amendment to the Hatch acts. The bill prevents the collection of a poll tax as a qualification of voters within the meaning of section 2, article I, of the Constitution. The proponents of anti poll taxes are thus not agreed upon the power of Congress to pass anti-poll-tax legislation. The bill proceeds upon the theory that Congress can prevent the collection as a pernicious political activity. The bill recognizes the right of the States to prescribe qualifications and declares that poll taxes shall not be a qualification. The bill is really "fishing" legislation. The evident purpose is to undertake to secure favorable consideration before the Supreme Court as now constituted.

Some advocates of the bills have asserted that no State constitutions provide the collection of poll taxes as a qualification for voting. They are in error. The constitutions of Mississippi and Alabama, as well as the constitutions of the other States where poll taxes are now required, provide that poll taxes shall be a prerequisite and a qualification. The payment of taxes as a qualification obtained when the Constitution was adopted. They now obtain in the constitutions of at least eight of the States. The wisdom of the poll tax is for the States to decide. The question is whether Congress has the power to change or modify by adding to or taking from the qualifications prescribed by the States. The champions of the antipoll tax are experimenting with the courts and with the Constitution.

Hearings were conducted by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate on the Pepper bill. A subcommittee submitted an unfavorable report. Senator O'MAHONEY, chairman of the subcommittee, introduced Senate Joint Resolution 164 on October 5, 1942, proposing a constitutional amendment forbidding the collection of any tax or property qualification by the States. It is thus admitted that poll taxes cannot be abolished by Congress and that an amendment to the Federal Constitution is necessary to prohibit the States from prescribing the payment of poll taxes as a prerequisite to voting.

The Federal Constitution provides that the States shall determine the qualifications for voters in Federal as well as in State elections. Poll taxes now obtain in 32 States, but in only 8 of the States are they required as a prerequisite for voting. Congress is now asked to denounce as a pernicious political activity the payment of poll taxes as a qualification when such taxes have been prescribed as qualifications for voters from time immemorial. They are among the oldest of all taxes. The contention that poll taxes are a regulation or a restriction or a condition is a mere play upon words. They are qualifications in the constitutions and in the statutes in the States where they are required. They are denominated as qualifications by Story, Cooley, and by all the leading authorities on the Constitution and elections. The requirement may be regrettable, but unconstitutional action is no remedy for the alleged evil. It would be much wiser to rely upon the people to repeal without compulsion from the Federal authorities. The States were jealous of Federal constitutional encroachment at the time of the adoption of the Constitution. The States are still jealous of the rights reserved to them and the threat of unconstitutional encroachment is likely to hinder rather than promote the elimination of poll-tax requirements. At all events, the only remedy is to amend the Federal Constitution as was done in the case of the women's suffrage amendment to the Constitution.

Congress should set the example. No legislation in violation of the fundamental law of the land, no matter what the alleged excuse may be, should be passed by Congress. The people will have little regard for the statesmanship of Congress if Congress itself treats the Constitution as a scrap of paper. The refinements and the alleged distinctions in view of the plain language of the Constitution as to qualifications, including the payment of poll taxes, are distinctions without difference. If Congress can take from the qualifications of voters in Federal elections, it can add to such qualifications. Clearly there is no authority for such procedure under the Federal Constitution.

VIII. SMALL VOTE

Proponents of the bill refer to the small votes in general elections in the eight Southern States where poll-tax requirements still obtain. In Mississippi and the other Southern States the contests are settled in the primary elections. There are no contests in the general elections. In the primaries there are bitter contests. It is as difficult for a candidate to be nominated in a primary as it is for a candidate to be nominated and then elected in many other States. There are bitter contests in the primaries, but generally the primaries are decisive. The votes in the general elections are mere formalities. It is the primary vote that counts.

The number of voters participating in the primary elections in Mississippi and other States, where the poll tax obtains, compares favorably with the participation in primary elections in the States where there is no poll tax. Again, the percentage of qualified voters participating in primary elections in States like Mississippi compares favorably with the number participating in other Southern States like North Carolina and Louisiana, where there are no poll-tax requirements.

The poll tax does not discriminate against the Negro. The Supreme Court would not have upheld it if such had been the case. All are treated alike. Under the constitution of Mississippi voters were required not only to pay their poll tax but to pay all of their taxes before they are permitted to vote, prior to a constitutional amendment adopted in 1934, which only requires now the payment of poll taxes. Under the amendment, Mississippi passed in 1935 a statute requiring only poll taxes to vote. The remedy to eliminate poll taxes, however, is not with the Federal Government. It is a State function. Mississippi has provided that the payment only of a poll tax is requisite to vote in a primary election and that no poll tax shall be required of the man in the armed services.

Small votes, unfortunately, obtain not only in the South but in other parts of the country. This is regrettable, but, after all, democracy will be better promoted by an informed and enlightened franchise than by a numerous franchise. Intelligent voters in small numbers can be more helpful than ignorant voters in large numbers. Informed voters are more important than numerous voters.

Again, indifference in elections obtains not only in the South but, as I have suggested, in other parts of the country. In 1942 generally not more than one-third of the registered voters throughout the country participated in the primary elections. It is estimated that there are 42,191,179 registered voters and that 14,937,346 voted. The percentage of those who did vote is around 33⅓ percent. It varied in several States.

There are a number of factors responsible for the small vote:

First. There are always fewer votes than in Presidential contests. If it be said that voters in the World War No. 2 are apathetic, so were they in the World War No. 1. Then again, the absence of acute issues in many States is responsible.

Second. Millions of voters are away from home in the Army and in the Navy, and millions of voters will not stop working in munitions plants to vote.

Third. There has been much migration of defense workers from one State to another.

Fourth. Long hours of work in war factories tend to keep voters away from the polls.

The Southern States to date have made a far better showing than have been made in many States. Texas, Georgia, South Carolina, and Tennessee stand at the top, with percentages of the registered voters participating in the elections ranging in these Southern States from 59 to 82 percent.

It is easy to charge. It is difficult to prove. With the latest information available, a larger percentage of voters have participated in the primary elections in the South than any other part of the country.

IX. REGISTRATION IS REQUIRED

There are other requirements in addition to age, residence, and the payment of taxes in Mississippi, as well as in other States. Under the Constitution the voter must be able to read or write the Constitution or to understand the Constitution when it is read to him. A literacy test obtains as it does in Massachusetts and many other States. If the Negro does not qualify it is not because of the poll tax. It is primarily because of the literacy test, and the literacy test applies to both whites and blacks. Educational qualifications not only obtain in Mississippi, but in practically all of the States of the Union. I do not recall an exception.

In Mississippi and other States registration is a qualification. The Supreme Court of the United States has recognized that registration is a qualification (Wiley v. Sinkler, 179 U. S., pp. 58, 62, and 64). Whether registration is a qualification or not, it was required and the requirement was upheld. It does not change the requirement by calling it a condition or a regulation. The distinction is without difference. They are all prerequisites to voting, and prerequisities of all kinds are generally qualifications.

X. REASONABLE CONCLUSION

While there have been divided courts and decisions with dissenting opinions, in many of the cases in the Supreme Court of the United States involving pernicious political activities under the Enforcement Acts first passed in 1870 and the Corrupt Practices Act of 1925, the question of the constitutionality of the poll tax in Federal elections has never been passed upon by the Court. No Federal statute preventing the payment of poll taxes has ever been passed, but the decisions of the Court in all of the cases involving pernicious political activities and regulating the time, places, and manner of conducting senatorial and congressional elections lead to the inevitable conclusion that the intent of the founding fathers was to leave the qualifications of senatorial and congressional electors with the State with the power in Congress to make or alter regulations with respect to the time, places, and manner of elections so as to prevent pernicious political activities, in order that the Senators and Representatives, President and Vice President might be honestly elected and that the voters might be protected. The inevitable conclusion is that Congress is without power to prescribe or to abolish any qualification of electors for Senators and Representatives and for Presidential and Vice Presidential electors.

The anti-poll-tax bill is in violation of the rights of the States, vigorously asserted at the time of the adoption of the Constitution and upheld by the Congress for 153 years. The right to vote in a congressional election for Senators and Representatives and Presidential electors is guaranteed by the Federal Constitution. If such a right is secured by the Constitution, Congress can protect the manner of holding the election, but the States must prescribe the qualification of the voters.

It has been said that a right may exist although it has not been exercised. The answer is, however, that acquiescence for more than a century and a half means consent. The States claim the right to prescribe qualifications. The Federal Constitution gave the States the right. Congress has assented by refusal to undertake for a century and a half to prescribe qualifications.

XI. NOT PERMISSIBLE UNDER THE CONSTITUTION

The qualifications of voters are reserved to the States. They are among the powers not delegated to the United States and reserved to the States under the tenth amendment. Members of Congress cannot violate their oath to uphold the Constitution by voting for an unconstitutional bill.

The bill embraces elections for President and Vice President. No persons have a right to vote for President and Vice President. If Congress assumes the power to supervise elections, at least Congress should use accurate language. It is true that similar language is used in the Hatch acts, but I hold no brief for the Hatch acts. Mistakes and errors should not be repeated. The remedy is to eliminate them.

As I have pointed out, Presidential electors are not national officers.

They are no more officers or agents of the United States than are the members of the State legislatures when acting as electors (Green, 134 U. S. 379).

As I have pointed out, the power and jurisdiction of the States as to the qualifications of Presidential electors are exclusive—McPherson v. Blacker (146 U. S. 35). The inclusion in the bill of Presidential electors or elections for President and Vice President is without constitutional authority.

The bill declares that the payment of poll taxes is detrimental to the integrity of the ballot. There is no proof of such a claim. It charges the States where poll taxes are required with fraud. It convicts them of corruption without a trial. It has not been shown that they are evil, but at most only that evil is possible under them—Williams v. Mississippi (170 U. S. 213).

Does Congress have jurisdiction to convict States of fraud? If the State laws operate as a fraud on the United States, the courts have ample jurisdiction. They are authorized to apply the remedy. But the Supreme Court of the United States, in the Breedlove case, has upheld the power of the States to levy poll taxes. Congress would be thus in the position of convicting the Southern States and the court of last appeal of fraud by providing that poll-tax requirements are detrimental of the ballot. It is admitted that poll taxes obtained for 153 years, but it is asserted that conditions have changed and that Congress will be justified in providing that poll taxes are an interference. If they are—if they result in fraud—Congress has ample power under section 4 to regulate the manner of the election. The remedy is not to deprive the States of their rights respecting qualifications.

With the poll tax, the United States has existed and prospered for 153 years and has become the richest and most powerful Nation in the world. The poll tax is not impeding or destroying. The poll-tax States have a better government than they had preceding the poll tax.

The Federal Government has no power to prevent the levy of taxes by the States, and especially taxes for the promotion of public education.

If poll taxes are unconstitutional, if they have violated any rights of citizens, rich or poor, white or black, the Supreme Court of the United States would have so held. The right to vote for Senators and Representatives is derived from the Constitution, but the qualifications of voters are for the States.

The Constitution protects the right to vote only of those who are qualified under the State laws. If he is qualified, his right to vote in congressional elections will be protected. The Classic case so holds.

It is asserted that the poll tax is not a qualification and that it has nothing to do with the capacity of the voter to vote. It has as much to do with his qualifications as residence and as sex. These are among the universally admitted qualifications. At least it was the case with respect to sex before the nineteenth amendment.

The word "qualification" is thus defined by Webster:

A condition precedent that must be complied with for the attainment of a status, the perfection of a right, etc., * * * as the qualification of citizenship.

A "qualified voter" is defined as:

One who possesses certain specific qualifications for voting, especially as to citizenship, age, and residence, and sometimes also as to literacy and the ownership of property.

In the constitutional and ratification debates, Alexander Hamilton used the expression in connection with suffrage "prescribing qualifications of property." In the Yarbrough case the Court said:

It adopts the qualification of those furnished as the qualification of its own electors for Members of Congress.

The Supreme Court has repeatedly held that the States have the right to prescribe who may vote.

The word "qualification" with respect to suffrage both before and after the formation of our Government and continuously down to the present date has been used in the sense of defining the persons who were entitled to vote. The word was so interpreted by the members of the Constitutional Convention. They used the term "the right of suffrage." They used it in connection with the qualification of electors, as it finally appeared in section 2 of article I. And the interpretation of qualifications of voters has persisted to the present time. Volume 29, Corpus Juris Secundum, 1941, in the article on elections and under qualifications of voters includes—section 29, page 51—property, payment of taxes, and, at page 52, the payment of poll taxes. The same thing is true of 18 American Jurisprudence. Among other qualifications it includes "poll and other taxes." In Story, Cooley, and other works on the Constitution, taxes appear among the qualifications. They appear among the qualifications in State constitutions, including the eight Southern States where poll taxes obtain. They appear among qualifications in all of the leading textbooks on elections.

The States have the power to tax, Congress has no veto over the power of the States to tax. Congress has no power to interfere with the collection of State taxes. The repeal of the poll tax would be a prohibition of the collection of such taxes.

When the Constitution was adopted, each State possessed unlimited power over suffrage and generally prescribed qualifications, including property and taxes—Miner v. Happersett (88 U. S. 162):

Whether the requirements to be met in each State be termed qualifications of electors or be referred to by any other term, the State possessed and exercised the unlimited power over suffrage and the granting of the privilege of voting.

In adopting the Federal Constitution the States did not grant to Congress any of their powers over suffrage. They did, however, in article I, section 2, limit their own power over suffrage requirements for Senators and Representatives. If the payment of a tax as a prerequisite of the right of suffrage is a qualification, then the State must prescribe the same for both Senators and Representatives and members of the State legislature. Under the inherent power of suffrage, if the poll tax is not a qualification, then the States have the power to require the payment of the tax for Senators and Representatives without requiring it of those voting for members of their legislatures. The power of the States to impose conditions or requirements for suffrage, other than qualifications, is in no way restricted by either section 2 or any other provision of the Constitution as originally adopted. The absolute power of the States over suffrage, except as it is restricted by article I, section 2, and the fifteenth amendment, has been repeatedly upheld by the Supreme Court of the United States.

In the case of Breedlove against Suttles, the privilege of voting is not derived from the United States, but it is conferred by the State. The right of voting is guaranteed by the Constitution to qualified voters. Congress has no power to regulate or interfere with the exercise by the States of their power to prescribe suffrage requirements or their power to levy and collect a poll tax.

The power of suffrage is in the States—Guinn v. U. S. (23 8 U. S. 362):

The States have the exclusive power to determine the manner of choosing its electors to vote for President or Vice President of the United States, and confers no power on Congress whatsoever to regulate on the subject.

For this reason the bill is invalid. Under the second clause of article II, the legislature appoints the electors. No power of supervision or regulation is given to Congress. Under the fourth clause, Congress can fix the time of meeting. It has no other power—McPherson v. Blacker (146 U. S. 1).

Under article I, section 2, and the seventeenth amendment, the States have the exclusive power to prescribe the qualifications of electors of Members of the Senate and of the House. As I have stated, power under section 2 of article I was a restriction upon the powers of the States. The States had these powers. They reserved them. The Constitution never conferred any power except that of regulating the time, places, and manner of elections upon Congress.

As I have stated, the proponents of the bill undertake to discredit Breedlove against Suttles, and particularly the following language of that decision:

Privilege of voting is not derived from the United States, but it is conferred by the State and save as restrained by the fifteenth and nineteenth amendments and other provisions of the Federal Constitution the State may condition suffrage as it deems appropriate.

The right to vote is based upon article I, section 2, but the proponents overlook the distinction between privilege and right. The suffrage laws of the State determine those who are privileged to vote. The Constitution of the United States protects the right of those who are privileged in the exercise of that privilege—Ex parte Yarbrough (110 U. S. 651).

The Classic case, so often and so much relied upon by the advocates of the bill, recognizes the distinction between the right to vote by qualified voters and by those disqualified under the suffrage laws of the States. That case did not involve the question of the power of suffrage. Qualifications were not involved. The question was whether the Constitution extended protection to qualified voters.

The Breedlove case was decided in 1937. The Court, as now constituted, decided the Pirtle case in 1941. The supreme courts of numerous States sustained the validity of the poll-tax qualification. No decision has ever struck it down. American Law Reports, annotated, volume 139, page 572, states:

The courts are unanimous in holding that failure to pay a valid poll tax if imposed as a condition of voting has the effect of disqualifying and rendering his voting invalid.

Innumerable decisions from many States of the Union are cited in support of the announcement.

As shown by the statements of the framers of the Constitution, by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, and by the decisions of the highest courts of the States, by the actions of Congress and the actions of States with respect to constitutional amendments, the States reserved full and unlimited powers to prescribe who may vote at all elections except as restricted by the provision that the qualifications to vote for Senators and Representatives should not be different from those prescribed for voters of the most popular branch of the State legislature. The fact that Congress has never undertaken to interfere with the qualifications of voters except by constitutional amendment is conclusive that Congress is without authority to modify or repeal State qualifications for voting. It took the fifteenth amendment to prohibit the denial of the right to vote on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. It took the nineteenth amendment to prohibit such denial on account of sex. It will take a constitutonal amendment to prohibit the payment of a poll tax as a qualification for voting in senatorial or congressional elections.

XII. FEDERAL AND STATE RIGHTS

The United States is but an aggregate of all the States in the Union. What exalted patriotism do Members of Congress possess that is not possessed by the members of the State legislatures? What virtues has Congress, not possessed by the citizens of the State? Who will say that the Congress of the United States is more interested in the welfare and representation of the State of New York than the citizens and the Legislature of New York? By what right does the Congress of the United States assume that the public interest will be better promoted by the assertion of a Federal right to control Federal elections than by the assertion of the guaranteed right of control in the States?

The old landmarks are often the best. Even if Congress possessed the power to regulate and prescribe qualifications in congressional elections—which I deny—it is a power that should be exercised only as a last resort to preserve the Government. We have had enough centralization. The States are closer to the people than Congress. In peace and in war there are functions for the States.

The Federal Government should not encroach upon these functions. The States pass laws for the descent and distribution of property. They possess the power of life and death over the citizens in the exercise of their police powers. They protect the citizen in the enjoyment of life and property. Such protection is guaranteed by the States. Are these rights and privileges less sacred than the right of voting or the privilege of franchise? The States that have the power of life and death are wisely trusted to provide with the qualifications of voters.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN].

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] that this is really one of the most important issues facing this Congress; but I disagree with him in toto in his conclusions as to the unconstitutionality of this bill. It depends more or less upon the particular philosophy of government one adopts whether this type of bill is constitutional or otherwise.

Mr. Chairman, I am one of those who believe that our forefathers were men who lived in no vacuum of inner speculation, nor were they those who climbed the ivory tower of esoteric dreaming; they were men who strove diligently, intelligently, and inspiredly to form a Federal Constitution. Every word in the Constitution controls the Federal Government. Our forefathers, by the Constitution, created a Congress of the United States, and it delegated to the State legislatures, in the first instance, mind you, so far as the membership of this body is concerned, the power to define and declare the qualification for membership, but only in the first instance.

Philosophically, historically, and constitutionally any tax, any money requirement for the right to exercise the suffrage for election to this body, is unconstitutional.

Let us define the Constitution itself.

> The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second year by the people of the several States, and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications required for electors in the most numerous branch of the State legislature.

Have what? Qualifications.

How do the dictionaries define "qualifications"? This is the way they define it:

> Any natural endowment or acquirement which fits a person for a place, office, or employment.

Any natural endowment. That is all they have the right to establish, a natural endowment. I deny that a money requirement is a natural endowment for the exercise of the right of suffrage.

Let us see, historically, what was meant by this section of the Constitution. What did Hamilton say on this question? This is what he said:

> Nothing can be more evident than that exclusive power of regulating elections for the national Government in the hands of the State legislatures would leave the existence of the Union entirely at their mercy.

That is what Hamilton said.

Stated another way, the question for us to determine is whether this section of the Federal Constitution having defined a federal electorate in terms of a State electorate the Federal Government is bound to accept anything no matter what its nature that a State chooses to call a qualification for voting. I say to you and I submit to you that in the nature of things no national government was intended to be so supine and so weak that it could not protect itself from the unlawful requirements of any State legislature and that when a State legislature requires an unnatural qualification this body may repudiate it constitutionally.

Recently, the Supreme Court of the United States in the Classic case discussed the question of the right to vote for a Representative in Congress and derivative nature of that right. The Court said:

> While in a loose sense the right to vote for Representative in Congress is sometimes spoken of as a right derived from the States, this statement is true only in the sense that the States are authorized by the Constitution to legislate on the subject as provided by section 2 of article I to the extent that Congress has not restricted State action by the exercise of its power to regulate elections under section 4 and its more general power under article I, section 8, clause 18, of the Constitution to make all laws which may be necessary and proper for carrying into existence the foregoing powers.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that any constitutional democracy established under the Constitution of these United States may not constitutionally require a money test or a property test as a qualification of the right to exercise the franchise in the election of Members of the Congress. If the Federal Congress has no such constitutional power, can it be true the power rests in the States? A statement of such a proposition seems to be all that is required as answer. If such a power rests in the States then the States may ultimately suspend the existence of the Federal Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN].

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Chairman, we may strive to limit the power, the arbitrary, the autocratic power of a State government in the denial to its citizens of just constitutional rights in the election of Members in this House.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GAVAGAN. No, I cannot yield in the limited time at my disposal.

Mr. Chairman, we are a legislative body; we are not a judicial body. This act is certainly within the purview of our constitutional authority to legislate. Pass this act and then let these people from the poll-tax States take it in an American judicial manner to the Supreme Court of the United States, and I am willing to risk my reputation as a lawyer, a reputation I cherish, that the Supreme Court of the United States will give short shrift to any argument against its constitutionality.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] and I have the utmost respect for him—let the cat out of the bag in his argument against this bill. He spoke of the great constitutional principles that we were about to lynch, then he proceeded to tell us and openly declare that it is proper to require a voter to pay for his right to vote, and he asked: "Why should we give them a free ride?" That is neither historically, philosophically, nor constitutionally correct. That is a philosophy that I deny and in which I want no part.

I am interested in the fullest exercise of the right to vote, believing as I do that the great sense of the people generally is the best guaranty for the continuation of our system of government. Neither Congress nor the States should aim by restriction to deny or deprive certain classes of citizens of the right to vote. It is safer and wiser to educate citizens to the appreciation of the right to vote and a realization of their great responsibility. Artificial restrictions magnify existing problems and never solve anything. I believe that the exercise of the voting privilege gives pride and responsibility to citizenship and tends to safeguard the perpetuation of our system of government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. HARRIS of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly the question of poll tax as a prerequisite for voting is again being considered by this House, and bringing about a sharp controversy and attempting to by-path the Constitution of the United States. I gave you my views on the constitutionality of this proposed legislation when it was before the House last October. I endeavored to prove to you that it is clearly in direct contravention with our Constitution.

I am amazed at the advocates of this bill, who claimed to be so strong to uphold the Constitution a few days ago when we had under consideration a limitation on an appropriation bill that would prohibit the employment of certain parties found by the special committee on appropriations to be unfit for employment by the Government. I ask you who signed the discharge petition and advocated the adoption of legislation of this kind and in this manner, what has happened to your zeal to uphold and sustain that great document, that has guided the destiny of this country for more than a century and a half?

Mr. Chairman, I would not impugn the motives of any Member of this House, but I am asking you, you who are attempting to force this legislation upon the seven States of this Nation, to search your hearts and ask yourself if you conscientiously believe that you are within your constitutional prerogative. Do you realize what you are doing? I urge you today to lay aside political thinking for just a moment and set your feet on a sound and solid principle, one that if continued to be the basic action and fundamental policy of the States running their own affairs locally will continue to make us a greater nation as the years roll by.

This legislation if finally adopted by this Congress will not do what you think it will. I know what you are thinking and I know why you are playing into the hands of this unconstitutional attempt, but I say to you today it will not in the seven States affected achieve a goal that many of you have been led to believe. You think that by adopting such legislation in this manner it will bring about more intensive voting by the Negro people in these Southern States, but it is not so simple. I ask you to go into the Southern States where the poll-tax requirement is not prerequisite and see what percentage of the Negroes vote in that State and compare them with the percentage that vote in the States where the poll tax is a prerequisite.

Mr. Chairman, this matter has been played up in those States where your problems are different, and in an effort to try to revolutionize the people in other States, and in place of bringing harmony, cooperation, and better results, you are doing nothing but breeding serious and bitter controversy.

If the States involved deem it wise and by their own actions discard the poll-tax system, I would have no fault or criticism of their action. This means would be the regular procedure to bring about such changes.

Mr. Chairman, there is another way, and if the advocates of this legislation want to bring about this change in the regular and orderly process, the Constitution of the United States could be amended to take care of this situation just as it was amended to take care of woman suffrage and a great many other matters of national importance. If a sufficient number of States approve such an amendment to our Constitution that would prohibit the poll-tax requirement you would find a much better and more practical solution to the problem you advocate, but in the manner attempted here you are only bringing about an embarrassment to these seven States, and I seriously question the motives behind such an attempt. With the motives behind this legislation and the manner it is proposed if adopted, you are not building but destroying.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS].

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, the objectives of H. R. 7 are worthy and commendable. I believe in extending the privileges of voting in our elections to individuals, regardless of their economic status. I am willing to trust the people. The more people participate in their government, the better are they qualified to enjoy self-government.

Upon a study of this question, I am of the opinion that the objectives of this bill cannot be accomplished without amending the Constitution of the United States. I think it should be so amended. I am not attempting to decide this question for anyone other than myself. As for me, I cannot support this measure because I believe that it clearly violates the provisions of our Constitution.

The right to determine the qualifications of an elector is a right that is vested in our States. Section 2 of article I of the Constitution provides:

> The electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature.

I think no one contends that this Congress can determine the qualifications of an elector for the State legislature of any State. That is a function that belongs to the State government. If this Congress can by law say that an elector in the State of Mississippi shall not be required to pay his poll tax before voting, a later Congress, possessing opposite views, might enact a law saying that an elector in the State of Nebraska must have paid his poll taxes before he votes. I am not willing to attempt to assert such authority over my State, because I have no such authority.

I contend that it was the very clear intent of the writers of our Constitution that each State shall determine the qualifications of its electors. I can attach no other reasonable interpretation to the above-mentioned section. During the writing of the Constitution and throughout the period of its adoption, the accusation was made that certain provisions favored the so-called wealthy and well-born. In writing on this subject on February 26, 1788, in an article in the New York Packet, now referred to as Federalist No. LX, Alexander Hamilton said:

> The truth is that there is no method of securing to the rich the preference apprehended, but by prescribing qualifications of property either for those who may elect or be elected. But this forms no part of the power to be conferred upon the National Government. Its authority would be expressly restricted to the regulation of the times, the places, the manner of elections. The qualifications of the persons who may choose or be chosen, as has been remarked upon other occasions, are defined and fixed in the Constitution, and are unalterable by the legislature.

I well realize that the proponents of this measure contend that section 4 of article I, which provides—> the times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives, shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators—furnishes a justification for this measure. Their attention should be directed, however, to the fact that the foregoing section refers only as to the time, place, and manner of holding an election, and does not at all refer to the qualifications of the electors. The foregoing quotation from the Federalist indicates that that was the intention at the time those words were inserted in our Constitution.

This Government and the people of the United States have always proceeded upon the theory that the States had the sole power of determining the qualifications of electors. When the people of the United States wanted to prohibit the States from denying the right to vote on account of race or color or previous condition of servitude, they did so by amending the Constitution. Section 1 of amendment XV provides:

> The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

When the people of the United States wanted to prohibit the States from denying the right to vote to any person on account of sex, they did so by amending our Constitution. Amendment 19 provides:

> The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex.

If this Congress has the lawful authority to prohibit the States from denying the right to vote on account of a nonpayment of poll tax, then these provisions of amendments XV and XIX were totally unnecessary. That is not the situation. The Constitution clearly provides that the States shall determine the qualifications of electors, and we have recognized that principle by twice amending our Constitution.

The argument is made that the moral and economic principle involved here are so great that we should depart from the purview of the Constitution and enact this measure. I believe that we can serve humanity best by staying within the confines of constitutional government. The problem we are wrestling with today can be met in a constitutional way, and it should be done. I will gladly vote for House Joint Resolution 126, offered by that able Tennesse lawyer, JOHN JENNINGS, Jr. That bill will take care of this problem constitutionally.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DREWRY].

Mr. DREWRY. Mr. Chairman, when the founders of our Government assembled in convention, there was one fundamental principle uppermost in their minds. Therefore, they laid the foundation of our Government upon this principle, namely, that there should be no encroachment upon the domestic and internal affairs of the respective States by the Federal Government. The governmental structure was planned upon that foundation. It is only by their votes that the people of the States can protect their natural civil and political rights in a republican form of government. The regulation of the suffrage was all-important to the States and it was unanimously thought that such regulation should not be yielded.

In article I of the Constitution they laid down the legislative powers of the Congress. Then when the adoption of the Constitution was referred to the States, certain amendments were proposed. Amendment X was added, evidencing the determination of the people of the country and their leaders to retain all power within the States that was necessary to their existence as States and for the government of their own internal affairs. This amendment read:

> The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

I contended in a previous statement made on this floor on legislation similar to this now before us, that the power of regulating suffrage within the respective States was a matter which was reserved by the States and not delegated to the United States. I will not, therefore, go into a long discussion of the unconstitutionality of this bill, but will respectfully refer to you my previous remarks on the subject. To my mind, this measure is clearly unconstitutional, for the qualifications of electors in the respective States were not "delegated to the United States nor prohibited by it to the States" as set forth in said Constitution. If that be true, then Congress has no power to act in this matter.

Alexander Hamilton, who took a leading part in the making of the Constitution, in the Federalist, No. LII, writes:

I pass on to a more particular examination of the several parts of the Government. I shall begin with the House of Representatives.

The first view to be taken of this part of the Government relates to the qualifications of the electors and the elected.

Those of the former are to be the same with those of the electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislatures. The definition of the right of suffrage is very justly regarded as a fundamental article of republican government. It was incumbent on the Convention, therefore, to define and establish this right in the Constitution. To have left it open for the occasional regulation of the Congress would have been improper for the reason just mentioned. To have submitted it to the legislative discretion of the States would have been improper for the same reason; and for the additional reason that it would have rendered too dependent on the State governments that branch of the Federal Government which ought to be dependent on the people alone. To have reduced the different qualifications in the different States to one uniform rule would probably have been as dissatisfactory to some of the States as it would have been difficult to the Convention. The provision made by the Convention appears, therefore, to be the best that lay within their option. It must be satisfactory to every State, because it is conformable to the standard already established, or which may be established, by the State itself. It will be safe to the United States, because, being fixed by the State constitutions, it is not alterable by the State governments, and it cannot be feared that the people of the States will alter this part of their constitutions in such a manner as to abridge the right secured to them by the Federal Constitution.

The argument can be definitely summed up by the words of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Newberry Case (256 U. S. 232):

The Government, then, of the United States can claim no powers which are not granted to it by the Constitution, and the powers actually granted must be such as are expressly given, or given by the necessary implication.

I call your attention, also, to the Pirtle case, decided 2 or 3 years ago, in which the United States District Court of Tennessee and the United States Circuit Court of Appeals took the view that a citizen who was prevented from voting in a congressional election because he had not paid his poll tax, had not had his rights transgressed in any way. The United States Supreme Court refused to hear argument, indicating, it would seem, that the constitutionality of the poll tax in such circumstances was not sufficiently involved to open the case to further discussion.

However, far beyond the consideration of poll-tax legislation, and far more important, is the principle involved in this question, and it is to this that I wish to direct your attention.

The Government of each State depends upon the suffrage of its citizens. It is the essential of good government, under our form of government, that the people shall decide by their vote what kind of government they want. No State could manage its own affairs without the control of the suffrage of its citizens. This power is necessary to its existence as a democratic form of government within itself. If such a power could be referred to Congress, then the several States could be interfered with at any time by the varying views and opinions of the Representatives, who might change their opinion from time to time. No State, so far as suffrage is concerned, could have a stable form of government. Each State government, therefore, is at liberty, under the Constitution, to decide this all important question for itself. Virtually the entire construction of government depends upon the suffrage of the people.

This legislation, if passed and approved, would affect not only the 7 States which have the payment of a poll tax as a prerequisite to voting, but would affect every State in the Union; and if the control of the internal affairs of a State is to pass out of its hands and be lodged in Congress, such a principle, if translated into our form of government, would mean the taking away of State autonomy from the smaller States and placing that power in the hands of the larger States. There are today 7 States in the Union which have this poll-tax qualification for its electors. They are: Alabama, with 9 Representatives; Arkansas, with 7 Representatives; Georgia, with 10 Representatives; Mississippi, with 7 Representatives; South Carolina, with 6 Representatives; Texas, with 21 Representatives; and Virginia, with 9 Representatives—a total of 69 Representatives. On the other hand, New York has 45 Representatives, and Illinois 26 Representatives, making a total of 71. Therefore, it follows that if a matter of legislation concerning the domestic affairs of one of these States should arise and be referred to the House of Representatives, we would find, if the principle of this poll-tax legislation be adhered to, that the combined vote of New York and Illinois would have more voice in regulating the affairs of said State than the total vote of the 7 Southern States, using the poll-tax legislation for illustration. Surely the founders of this Government would raise their hands in holy horror if they had been told that such a pecular state of affairs could happen under the Constitution which they brought forth. If the State of Rhode Island, with 2 Representatives, should desire and pass legislation affecting the sole interests of that State, say the qualifications of its electors, if you please, then under the principle of this proposed bill, Virginia would have more votes from its total representation than the State of Rhode Island would have, although it is a matter solely for the internal government of the State of Rhode Island.

Let us examine some of the qualifications of electors in some of the States for further illustration of the working out of such a principle as is set out in the proposed legislation.

Take New York for example. Once New York required a property qualification of $250. It was repealed. A property qualification for voting is to me abhorrent. There seems no justice in such a qualification. Suppose when that qualification existed in New York, I, a resident of Virginia, should have introduced a resolution to nullify the law of New York State. My objections to such a qualification might have been sound and sensible, but every Representative of that great State would, very properly, have risen to his feet and demanded that I be rebuked, for such legislation was the function of New York State and no other. Yet, such a law was probably more of a restriction on suffrage than the payment of $1.50 is by a person in Virginia.

Take New Hampshire. The abstract given me by the Library of Congress reads:

Poll tax requirement: Persons excused from paying taxes at their own request may not vote. No person may be deprived of his right to vote by reason of having been excused from paying taxes in any town at his own request if he tenders payment of all taxes assessed against him during the year prior to the election. A poll tax of $2 is assessed against all persons between the ages of 21 and 70.

With certain exceptions, it would appear from this that a poll tax is a qualification in certain cases. This regulation is the concern of the State of New Hampshire and no other.

Take Vermont. A qualification there is contained in the words that a voter, to qualify, should be "of a quiet and peaceable behavior." Some might think that this was an unconstitutional restriction on their right to vote—but that is not the point involved. The principle that we are discussing is whether Congress has the right to say that Vermont shall not have such a restriction. It is the business of the State of Vermont and no other. I have never attended an election in Vermont, but I can very readily see that such a restriction, if enforced, would certainly tend to the orderly conduct of their elections.

There may be other examples, but these are sufficient to illustrate my point that each State has the right to fix the qualifications of its voters within the Constitution so long as there is preserved an equality of the privilege of voting.

Some may object that in the case of Virginia the qualifications of electors are not equal as between the white persons and the Negroes. A great deal has been said on this subject that is inaccurate. Some claim that it is an attempt on the part of the white people of the Southern States to deprive the Negro of his vote, and that the qualifications of electors do not apply equally. This is not true in Virginia. Every Negro in the State of Virginia has the same identical qualifications for voting that I, or any other white person has. A qualification for voting in Virginia is that every man or woman 21 years of age or over shall pay $1.50 poll tax as a prerequisite to voting. This applies to every person regardless of color or race in the State of Virginia, it being understood, of course, that other qualifications also apply, such as residence, and so forth.

If you will permit a personal allusion, I have in my district a very large proportion of Negroes. I have not received, as far as my recollection serves me, one single request from any Negro to vote for this legislation. The Negroes are not behind this agitation for they know their rights and they know that their rights are respected, and they know also that they must comply with the law governing others as well as themselves. In my reading I ran across a curious fact in reference to the history of the poll tax in the State of Virginia. As to the Negro race, prior to the constitution of 1902 when the payment of a poll tax was in no way related to the matter of suffrage, 126,000 of them were assessed with a poll tax, and only between 50 and 60 percent of this number paid it; and keep in mind that this was at a time when it was absolutely unrelated to the question of suffrage and when there was no obligation on the Negro in respect to it other than the obligation which rested upon every other citizen of the State of Virginia to pay his taxes. Now the proportion of Negroes paying the poll tax is much smaller. So that we find that a larger percentage paid the poll tax when it was not related to the suffrage than they do now when the payment of it is a prerequisite to voting.

The obvious conclusion is that the Negroes are not at all concerned with the question of paying a poll tax as related to their suffrage, or else that they are not sufficiently interested in their suffrage to pay the $1.50 a year which the law requires. The letters that have come to me asking that I support this matter have come from the leaders of labor unions. I do not know why this peculiar condition exists. Certainly it is an indication that it is not a matter of race, for the labor unions of the South do not have in their membership many Negroes. Why should the leaders of the labor unions be so interested in the matter, when the Negroes, apparently, care little about it? This qualification is not ar attempt to deprive the Negro of his vote.

If the people of any State desire to change their suffrage qualifications, they can do it within the State, themselves, or it might be done by a constitutional amendment, as provided in article V of the Constitution. In my opinion, each State should have the right to fix its suffrage qualifications, for the people of the State know better its needs than the people of other sections of the country far removed from knowledge of the affairs of any particular State.

The payment of a poll tax of $1.50 as an evidence of the citizens' interest in the political affairs of this State is negligible in amount, but the total received from poll-tax payments in Virginia goes to a fund for the maintenance and improvement of the educational system to the benefit of every citizen. By evidencing such interest, the requirement of a poll tax should tend to increase participation in elections. In reading the history of the past, we find that one great weakness of democracies is that the citizen fails in his duty to exercise the privilege of voting. As far back as 430 B. C. we find that Pericles said, "We regard a man who takes no interest in public affairs as a useless character." Today much money and time and labor is spent in getting the voter to the polls. Certainly a person who would not pay $1.50 to exercise his privilege of taking part in his government has not much interest in his government. He deserves the characterization bestowed upon certain citizens of Athens by Pericles. It is characteristic of human nature to value most the things that cost us something.

I contend that the principle underlying this proposed legislation would seriously affect the present equality of the citizens of the respective States; that it would destroy the balance between the States themselves, which is such a fundamental principle in our governmental structure; that it is unconstitutional as shown by reading the Constitution itself and the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States; that it will disturb party political relations, for it is true, of course, that this is no time for partisan politics. "But," as said by a well-known commentator, with whose statement I agree, "it is a time for the election of courageous, intelligent, hard-working and public-spirited men, whether they are Democrats or Republicans"; that it will tend to injure the unity of the war effort in agitating sectional differences, for the seven States affected are deeply moved by what they consider an unwarranted attack upon their State sovereignty.

I know of nothing that would be more gratifying to Hitler and the enemies of our country than the efforts of those sponsoring this legislation at this serious time in our affairs.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I am against H. R. 7. If this bill becomes a law it is the beginning of the end to local self-government. Bills similar to this one have been up practically every year for a number of years and have been fully discussed, and nothing new can be said for or against the poll-tax law.

If this bill is passed, you are opening the way for Federal control of elections in every State, county, and militia district of the country. I hope you will not establish this dangerous precedent.

There are other qualifications for voters of my State and other poll-tax States, such as literacy and educational tests, registering a certain length of time before election, and so forth. If you are successful in abolishing the poll tax, which is now one of the qualifications, you could with the same propriety abolish the literacy tests and all the other qualifications. As I have said before, the abolition of the poll tax will not enfranchise voters of my State and the other poll-tax States.

Those supporting this bill admit that Congress has no power to fix or alter the qualification for voters in elections for State officers. The proposal seeks to abolish the poll tax for election of Federal officials.

The author of the bill undertakes to get around the constitutional prohibition by stating that the poll-tax requirement is not a qualification of voters but an interference with the manner of holding a Federal election. It could be well said that this subterfuge is an indirect attack on the Constitution, and everyone knows or should know that the poll tax is one of the qualifications of a voter in the poll-tax States.

The Constitution clearly states that the register of voters at the Federal polls must coincide with the State register. You must amend the Constitution if you desire the poll-tax laws abolished in the several States. I do not believe that 5 percent of the lawyers in this Chamber disagree with me in this statement.

We have the same qualifications in the poll-tax States for State, county, and Federal candidates and one ballot for all candidates, so if this bill becomes a law you will have to separate the ballots and have one ballot for those qualified to vote for all State candidates and another ballot for those who are qualified only to vote for Federal candidates, and forced to have two separate poll holders. Those who desire to vote for Federal candidates without paying poll tax would have to comply with all the State laws relative to other qualifications for voters, such as registration, and so forth—a certain length of time before the election.

The bill negatives the idea of interfering with the qualification of the voters or electors, but asserts that the requirement to pay a poll tax is an interference with the manner of holding primaries and other elections. This manner and method of legislating by saying that a poll tax interferes with the manner of holding an election is a feeble effort to get around the Constitution and will not hold water. The power to determine the qualifications of a voter was never delegated by the States to the Federal Government.

We are united in winning this war, and all sections of the country are putting everything they have in it to win, their young boys, their money, their self-denial, and sacrifice. This is no time for disunity. The people who are advocating this bill know the people of the South have always had great pride in their local self-government, and why would you want to offend these people during this great emergency in order to satisfy a few grumblers who belong to no party?

When the Democratic Party was in the minority for a long series of years, the Democrats of the South kept the fires of democracy burning, and since our party has been in the majority for the past 10 years we are confronted annually with this issue of interfering with local self-government, this issue brought about by some new converts. The attitude of many of the new Democrats is resented by the loyal Democrats of the South. If the Democratic tree is getting top-heavy, such tactics as this will create a desire among the loyal Democrats of the South to shake the tree and let a few citizens who vote Democratic one year and Republican another year fall out.

As I stated last year, when a similar bill was being considered in this Chamber, I never thought that the people of my State would be called upon to ask the crusaders of New York and other large cities of the North and West to purify the ballot box of my State. Since then and recently the great State of New York, through its State legislature, passed a resolution petitioning the Congress of the United States to speedily enact this bill that is to abolish the payment of the poll tax as a qualification for voting for candidates for office in the Federal Government. I am reliably informed that the great State of New York has a requirement that a new voter must produce a high-school diploma or pass the literacy test; also that a voter coming from another State to reside in New York must do the same, and that the voter must reside in the State and voting precinct a certain length of time before he is eligible to vote, and there are many other restrictions. Under the voting qualifications of New York, many more people are disfranchised than under the poll-tax qualifications of some of the States of the South.

I wonder how many voters of the district of the author of this bill are disqualified on account of the high educational test. We are not asking that you change your educational test because this is none of our business.

I agree with the philosophy of someone who spoke against a similar bill last year that the seven States of the Union which do now require the payment of a poll tax before voting have no right to require the other States to pay poll tax as a requisite for voting. By the same token the other 41 States have no right to require the poll-tax States to abandon the poll tax as one of the qualifications for voting. I challenge you gentlemen of the large cities of the North and West to show me that your ballot is purer or fairer than the ballot of the poll-tax States.

During all these years while the Democratic Party was in the minority the Republicans never put across any bill of this character. I will take the old Tammany Hall, with many of its alleged irregularities, in preference to some of the modern-day crusaders who are now trying to engender strife during this great emergency and violate what we people of the South hold dearest in our hearts, local self-government.

If poll tax is wrong morally, why not submit this question as a constitutional amendment and let the people vote on it at a time when all our citizens are not busily engaged in putting their all into winning this war? You are not offering to submit it to the people because you know the people will not vote for it, as nothing is more vital to our good people than the function of fixing the requirements for voting by the several States.

Who has called upon Congress at this time to interfere with State rights and repeal the poll tax as a requirement to vote? The Navy has not called on us. The Army has not called on us. The Commander in Chief has not called on us. Why do you people who claim to be loyal Democrats desire to embarrass the Commander in Chief to the point where he will be forced to veto this bill because it is contrary to certain provisions of the Constitution? We are at war, and this is no time for sectional differences, especially in view of the fact that if the bill passes and none of the other qualifications for voters in the poll-tax States are changed, the law will not enfranchise any voters.

Therefore, we are brought to the conclusion that this is purely a political bill, men in both great parties bidding for a small minority group who has no party affiliation, and in order to satisfy this group you will have to pass another bill next year to abolish some other qualification of the voters and repeat this annually until there are no State laws for holding Federal elections. Surely you do not want all the elections of the respective States to be held and supervised from Washington.

You sympathizers of this movement are paying a great price and establishing a dangerous precedent. Some of you boys are putting on an interesting Punch and Judy vaudeville, in the daytime flirting with this small minority group who desire to do away with State rights and local self-government, and in the evening you repent, apologize, and ask permission to get back into bed with your loyal party advocates in order to again be in position to seek and obtain all honors that go with your party affiliation.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MURRAY].

Mr. MURRAY of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I wish to discuss briefly H. R. 7, which has been introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO], and which has for its purpose the abolition of the payment of a poll tax as a prerequisite for voting in national elections. This measure is clearly in open violation of our Federal Constitution and its unconstitutionality should be apparent even to the layman who knows nothing about the legal profession. Of course, any first-year law student can readily see why it is unconstitutional. Our Constitution has denied to Congress any jurisdiction or control over the subject of qualification of voters in national elections, as it states specifically and directly that in each State those voting for Members of Congress "shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature."

The States fix the qualifications of voters for members of the State legislatures and these qualifications govern those who may vote in national elections. No act of Congress can override or supersede this provision of the Constitution. To those who want to repeal the poll tax as a requisite for voting I wish to say that the only approach or way to gain their objective is through an amendment to our Constitution.

The Marcantonio bill is aimed directly at seven States in the South which now require the payment of poll tax as a requisite for voting in general elections. My State, Tennessee, repealed its poll-tax provisions last February; however, the constitutionality of the repeal measure is now before our State supreme court for consideration. The orderly and proper way to handle the poll-tax situation is to let each State reach its own decision in the matter without outside interference.

Why is the movement to repeal the poll tax as a prerequisite for voting brought up at this time? Do the proponents believe it is essential to our war effort that the same be repealed? Do they think that the repeal will promote unity, solidarity, good will, and a better state of feeling? Why is it that the Communists, the Socialists, the radicals, and those who want to overthrow our democratic system of government are unanimously in favor of the repeal of the poll tax? Why is it that all those with strange ideas, philosophies, and doctrines that are inimical to our form of government favor the repeal of the poll tax? Why is it that the clamor and demand for the repeal come from those people outside of the States requiring poll tax rather than from the citizens within such States?

There are certain communistic, alien, undemocratic influences behind the effort to repeal the poll tax which have ulterior motives in view. They talk about giving democracy to the poll-tax States when they themselves do not believe in our democratic system of governernment and hope to overthrow it. They are simply using the poll-tax movement as a cloak or cover for their sinister purposes. They hope to revolutionize the South through appealing to racial hatred. The Communists are saying that they are going to inaugurate a different order or a new day in the South. They expect to use the Negro as an opening wedge for stirring up racial strife and dissension and for spreading their communistic ideas in the South.

Well, I am afraid that the Communists do not know the spirit or temper of the South. Today it is the living symbol of democracy and the Communists will never be able to infiltrate that section of the country with their diabolical plans. You will not find a more loyal, a more patriotic, a more liberty loving, or a more democratic section of the country than in the seven poll-tax States. The people of the South believe sincerely in their democratic way of life and will forever and eternally fight to maintain and preserve it. Communists had better leave the South alone if they know what is healthy for them. The South will not tolerate for 1 minute its invasion by any alien, undemocratic, communistic element.

Why all this agitation for the repeal of the poll tax right in the midst of the most serious war in which our country has ever been engaged? Our efforts, our thoughts, our attention, and our labors and energies should be directed primarily to the winning of the war at the earliest possible moment, and nothing should be done at this time to cause disunity, strife, or division among our people. However, of course, the Communists care nothing about causing dissension and strife among our people if they think it will help to overthrow our democratic system of government.

The South is the best, finest, and most loyal friend the Negro ever had. Today the Negro is happy and contented in the South and our races there are living in harmony, peace, and happiness. This fine relationship between the races in the South does not suit the Communists. They want to create discord and friction between the races so as to divide them. What real interest has the Communist Party in the welfare or happiness of the Negro in the South? The Communists care absolutely nothing about him except to use him as a tool or pawn. The Negro of the South cannot and will not be misled or deceived by the Communists in their pretense to help him by having the poll tax repealed.

For the sake of unity, harmony, good feeling and racial cooperation, why not drop this effort to repeal the poll tax as a prerequisite for voting? Let us forget the poll-tax question now and concentrate all of our efforts in winning the war. Why should other sections of the country be interested in the poll-tax repeal? Why should they want to tell certain Southern States how they may conduct their elections? Why should they desire to interfere in the requirements of voters in the States now having the poll tax? Have these States ever attempted in any way to impose their ideas about elective franchise on other States?

The poll-tax repeal is not being encouraged by the Negro in the South. If Congress abolishes the poll tax as a prerequisite for voting, then it is the death knell for local control of elections. It is just the forerunner of a strong, centralized government in the future.

I appeal to the membership of the House to weigh carefully the question of the constitutionality of this measure before they cast their vote. If they believe that it is in violation of the Constitution, of course, they will vote against the bill regardless of what they think of its merits. I am sure that political expediency will have no consideration in passing upon this important matter. The bill should be rejected by an overwhelming majority.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CAMP].

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Chairman, in voting for this resolution Members are striking a serious blow at not only the seven States in the South who levy a small poll-tax on adults for the purpose of common school education, in which group my own State of Georgia is included, but they are striking a heavy blow at the constitutional rights of every State in the Union. The right to levy a poll tax is not involved, for the levying of poll taxes for educational purposes originated in the New England States long before the South ever levied one, and many of the New England States still collect them, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and others. The question, of course, is the right of the States to fix and prescribe the qualifications for voting, and if the other 41 States of the Union do not happen to prescribe the payment of tax obligations due the State as a prerequisite to voting, they certainly have prescribed other prerequisites which they consider very important, such as citizenship, length of residence, and naturalization of aliens.

If Congress can invade this right of the States on the subject, it can nullify all the others.

The collection of poll taxes in my State began long before the War between the States, and until after the first World War, our State made the payment of all taxes due to the State a prerequisite to voting.

Mark Sullivan in his editorial in the Washington Post of Monday, May 24, has expressed the danger in this resolution and I wish to quote at length from him. He has given his article the title "Federal Usurpation" and says, as follows:

> This dispatch is about a bill scheduled to come before Congress this week, H. R. 7. From the point of view of the structure of American government, this is by far the most important measure now pending. But before dealing with this measure in Congress, and in order to make this measure clear, turn for a moment away from the Government in Washington and consider something going on among State governments.
> The State governments are alarmed—alarmed about their very existence. They are determined to save themselves. Preservation of the functions and integrity of the States as units of government is in the air. Not only is it a concern of the thoughtful; there is popular emotion behind it. Expressions of it emerge with increasing frequency and rising earnestness.
> Last week, at Chicago, was held a meeting of a committee of the Council of State Governments. The spirit of the meeting was expressed in a speech by Gov. Herbert R. O'Conor, of Maryland. He said: "We must take every care that the Federal Government does not step in and take over functions and prerogatives that are essentially the functions and prerogatives of the States themselves."
> And the week before, at Albany, N. Y., Gov. Thomas E. Dewey spoke: "The time has come for a complete and searching reappraisal of the relations between the people of the United States and their various governments—local, State, and national. * * * For 10 years now the Federal Government has been absorbing the functions of the States; also, to some extent, the functions of the local communities. * * * All of this was the direct outgrowth of a mistaken political philosophy. * * * The day is at hand when the people are being compelled to call a halt and take stock."

Very well, the welkin has been sounded. We are going to guard the functions of the States, preserve them against encroachment.

Of all the functions of the States, the most fundamental is their fixing the qualifications of voters. This is at present an exclusive function of the States—the States alone say what qualifications a citizen must have in order to vote.

Now we come to the bill in Congress, H. R. No. 7. The purpose and effect of this measure is to take away from the States a part of their function of fixing qualifications for voters. This measure asserts that Congress has power to fix, in every State, the qualifications of voters for candidates for Federal offices. The measure proceeds to exercise this power as respects one qualification, which now exists in some States.

The meat of H. R. No. 7 is: "It shall be unlawful for any State * * * to * * * [require] the payment of a poll tax as a prerequisite for voting or registering to vote in any primary or other election for President, Vice President, electors for President or Vice President, or for Senator or Member of the House of Representatives; and any such requirement shall be invalid and void."

Now the reader may think this applies only to the States which have poll taxes—there are seven, in the South. Carelessly thinking that accounts for much of the thoughtless support of the bill in Congress, or the indifference about it. But the fact is, this measure applies to every State. It applies to New York and Pennsylvania and Illinois and Iowa—to literally every State—just as it applies to seven Southern States.

Here again the reader may think carelessly. If he is a New York reader, or an Illinois one, or an Iowa one, he may think: "We don't have a poll tax and we don't want one—so why worry?"

But if these States outside the South do not have the poll tax as a qualification for voting, they have other qualifications, which they cherish strongly. They have qualifications about length of residence, about citizenship, about naturalization.

And—here is the menace to all the States—if Congress can forbid one qualification, it can forbid any other qualification. By forbidding the poll tax as a qualification, Congress would set up a precedent and principle by which some future Congress could, if it chooses, forbid qualifications about residence and citizenship.

If the council of State governments, if the 48 State Governors, and all the other persons and organizations concerned about loss of State functions have vigilance in proportion to their earnestness, if they have energy to act in behalf of what they believe—they will take steps at once against H. R. 7. It is scheduled for action in the House this week, in the Senate later.

Mr. Chairman, one by one the rights of the sovereign States are being invaded and governmental powers are being centralized. I feel that I would not be doing my duty today if I failed to raise my voice in protest at this flagrant attempt to violate the Constitution.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this measure and desire to condemn it and the source from which it was born.

We who yet love and respect the democracy of Jefferson realize that the cards are stacked against us and that nothing said or done can stop this damnable piece of legislation in the House. Therefore, I shall consume but little time as no argument, regardless of its logic, will be of any avail. I do know that there are but few Members who at heart want to support this legislation, but are forced by political expediency to do so. I see so plainly the filthy hand of communism at work bringing this Nation step by step into despotism until I must go emphatically on record on the question. When I look into the shadows and see the skeletons of Earl Browder and John L. Lewis and others of their creed standing guard over the sponsors of this measure, pushing day by day for the destruction of liberty and freedom, I shudder at the thought of the state your children and mine will live in if the spirit of Jefferson and the other founders of this great Republic does not rise from the grave and run from the face of the globe every trace of communism and cause to burn again in the breast of our people a love for democracy, yes, old time simple democracy, the only kind that will let you be your brother's keeper.

When I think of the part the courage of the South has played in pre-war preparations for the struggle we are now engaged in, and its military record from the beginning of hostilities, it is difficult to understand the attacks made on the South from the floor today. I must not permit myself to go into this subject or I will use language beneath the dignity of the House.

I do want to say, however, that a man who will bring before this House and agitate a measure as controversial and sectional as this, that has no bearing on our war effort, is compromising the blood of our boys at the front, and is more concerned in the efforts of tyrants to destroy this democracy from within than he is to successfully prosecute the war.

This is not a measure concerned with poll tax, but the beginning of an organized effort by those persons among us who hate democracy, and have as their purpose to destroy it, to federalize elections throughout the Nation. If they are not stopped it will not be many years until there will be no such thing in America as the free ballot. It is a bitter fact that the party the South nurtured through its starving years, now reinforced by the Communist of the North will raise its head as a monster and condemn the South and all its traditions. Shame and pity on those who are so rich in ingratitude, and may they live to meet their sins face to face and have to bow before the result of their disloyalty.

If the Georgia Legislature wants to abolish poll tax in that State it is perfectly agreeable with me, but God forbid that New York shall ever dictate the political life of Georgia. When I think of the political corruption of the city of New York and then think of one of its very own presuming to say to the God-fearing, liberty-loving people of Georgia what they may and what they may not do, I am brought to where I must stop or I will use language that would be far beneath the dignity of this floor. But in conclusion, let me say and may it be heard throughout the land, that the man in New York, Illinois, or California who wants to dictate the political life of Georgia, or the man in Georgia who wants to dictate the political life of either of those States, is at heart a political gangster, bigot, and dictator.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RIVERS].

Mr. RIVERS. Mr. Chairman, on every radio and from every Government communication as well as from every periodical, we hear the admonition of unity and the necessity for unity if this Nation is to emerge victorious in the present sanguine, mortal combat. Yet today we witness on the floor of this House a fiasco which has tragic portents.

We see a bill presented to this Congress to abolish the poll tax in the several States, a bill which is clearly and unmistakenly unconstitutional. We see a bill presented to Congress which threatens the unity of this war effort more than any one single thing. Yet for political expediency we will witness in a few moments Members of this House passing this bill because they fear for their political hides at the hands of the howling minority. Many of the arguments which I have heard today, I have heard before. I fear that the future will point to you, the would-be crusaders and champions of this new order to abolish the State lines and substitute therefor out-and-out centralized government as not friends of the people and of the Constitution but as those who shattered the pillars of constitutional government of our own day in exchange for oblivion for the future.

In this connection I am enclosing an editorial from my newspaper. This article, which may be a voice crying in the wilderness, points to you the direction in which this legislation leads us.

[From the Charleston (S. C.) News and Courier of May 24, 1943]

THE WAY OF POLL-TAX REPEAL

Are the advocates of poll-tax repeal striving to deprive the American States of their historic power of defining and regulating the suffrage and to transfer it to the Congress and the Federal Executive?

If that be the purpose of their campaigning, why do they not say so? Why are they not frank? Why, in their New Dealing, do they not deal plainly?

Hear one of them, the New York Times: "Yet it seems obvious that if a State can impose a poll-tax requirement of $3, it can impose one of several hundred dollars or even several thousand dollars, and that at some stage the Federal power must intervene to protect the 'republican form of government' guaranteed by the Constitution."

Granting so much, what guaranty have these people that the Federal power would not enact a requirement of a poll tax of "several hundred or even several thousand dollars"?

If centralization of power in the Federal Government at the expense of the several States is what they are after, why don't they say so?

Every State has its peculiar problems and circumstances. Shall New Mexico and Mississippi be made Provinces subject to Washington, as the Virgin Islands are? Who gave a nation now controlled by herded voters in great cities wisdom superior to Oregon's wisdom in the management of the State of Oregon?

Qualifications for voting in the States have been and are infinite in variety. Educational tests were operative in Northern States a century ago. Shall the test by decree of Congress and the President, be a diploma from a college, from a high school a grammar school? The tests in the States widely differ. Landholding, home owning, might be made the test, and the Congress not less than the States might confer suffrage on "potwallopers" if it so should choose.

In South Carolina we had the poll tax in the Reconstruction period, and it has been retained. It did not suffice to disfranchise illiterates, black and white, when South Carolina had a Negro majority. In 1895, under the domination and virtual dictation of B. R. Tillman, a constitutional convention adopted an alternative literacy and property qualification for voting. The Republicans assailed its Federal constitutionality, the provision was carried to the highest Federal courts, and those courts sustained it. Long afterward, the South Carolinians abolished the property alternative which allowed many illiterate persons to register and vote. Illiteracy was disappearing; the presentation of tax receipts at the polls was inconvenient, and Negroes, though they paid poll taxes, ceased to register and to go to the polls. That is the plain and simple story of suffrage in South Carolina.

If authorities advocating poll-tax repeal are not insincere, they are grossly and pitifully ignorant of the history of suffrage in the United States. One had thought better of the New York Times' fund of information.

Who would the Congress and the Executive have to vote were the making of voting laws placed exclusively in their hands?

Would they make a literacy test uniform in the 48 States?

Or would they abolish literacy tests, too?

Would they have men, women, boys, and girls of 18 to vote? Why not? They might if they had the power.

Would they have nontaxpayers, propertyless persons, to vote? Would they open the polls to paupers and Indians not taxed? What is a pauper anyway? If 5,000,000 or 10,000,000 persons receive largesse, or doles, old-age pensions, call them what you may, from the taxpayers, to save them from hunger and cold, would the New York Times confer upon them the balance of power in elections to save the constitutional Republic?

Pauperism is an incident of great cities, of congested populations. It is incidental to unemployment in them. No able-bodied man is a pauper on 10 or 20 acres of land in the country or in a village. The pauper vote is huge in New York in depression. We had depression in South Carolina 8 years before October 1929. It was in those 8 years that 300 of our 450 banks closed. No Government helped us South Carolinians, and we South Carolinians did not starve or crawl on our bellies to Washington for help.

Then, when Government began to give and give to save the crowded cities and industrial districts, we too accepted doles, we, through our leaders, pleaded for sops, and our leaders sold themselves and their State body and soul for pittances, they have no better sense than to believe that the wealthy and ruling States, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and the rest, would elect a Congress and a President who would tax them to enrich the poorer States to solve the problem of "the Nation's economic problem number one." The News and Courier is wanting in that so great faith in Americanism.

The proposal to repeal the poll tax as a voting requirement is a step in the campaign to create the one big State, the socialized State, to destroy the powers of the several States, and it originates in and is engineered by the great cities of herdable votes. They are in mortal terror of demobilization of city populations, of the partial disintegration of cities, of their consequent bankruptcy. The stars in their courses, by distribution of electric power, the internal-combustion engine, the new inventions of communication and transportation, fight against the congested cities and industrial districts, and we have had a Government 10 years whose main effort has been to postpone, to make gradual, the approach of their inevitable fate.

That is why the New York Times and its fellows would repeal the poll tax as a suffrage requirement. It would be a step toward the erection of the one big State.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. WINTER].

Mr. WINTER. Mr. Chairman, in opposing this bill I know that I am out of step with most of my colleagues on the Republican side of the aisle. But when I came to Congress over 4 years ago I subscribed to an oath that I would defend and support the Constitution of the United States to the best of my ability. Frankly, I cannot do that and support this bill.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINTER. I prefer not to yield at this time.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman is not out of step with the thinking people on the other side.

Mr. WINTER. Mr. Chairman, I am not speaking as a great constitutional lawyer but just as a little, old country-town lawyer from a little country town down in Kansas where we do not believe in the poll tax, as a condition precedent to voting, nor do we believe in a poll tax for any purpose.

But we, insofar as my district in Kansas is concerned, do not believe that we have any right, nor do I believe that I have any right as the Representative of the Third Congressional District of Kansas, under the Constitution of the United States, to cast a vote in this body that will take away from any State the right to regulate its elections, insofar as the qualications of electors are concerned. There is, in my opinion, no question in the minds of most of the lawyers of this body that I have talked to on this issue. Frankly I think that most of the votes that are going to be cast for this bill are going to be cast for purely political expediency. I do not think there is any question about that.

There has been much argument here that the bill is constitutional. Let us see what the Constitution says. It has been read here time and time again, but I want to call it to your attention again.

Section 2 of article I of the Constitution provides that the House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second year by the people of the several States, and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature. This section reads: "shall have"; it does not say "may have."

Amendment No. 10 to the Constitution provides:

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people.

My contention is that the States, in setting up the Constitution, never, by the delegation of constitutional authority or amendment, delegated to the Federal Government the power to interfere in the manner in which they shall choose their various officials from within the State. There cannot be any question about that.

Section 4 of article I has been read to you times without number. It provides:

The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives, shall be prescribed in each State by the legislatures thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

The Congress has the right and power and authority to alter regulations as to the time, place, and manner of holding elections, and nothing else. There is no place in the Constitution that gives the Congress the right to do anything other than the three things specifically set out. And the authors of this bill have very cleverly tried to say that the qualifications of voting are related to the manner of holding elections and, to my mind, there could be nothing further from the truth than that argument. The manner of holding elections refers to such matters as to determine whether the polls shall be opened at 7 o'clock in the morning, 8 o'clock, or 10 o'clock; whether certain type of ballots should be used; or voting by machine. If Congress has constitutional authority to enact such legislation as this, it can also enact legislation depriving States of the right to require residence as a prerequisite to vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to use this time to engage in any colloquy with anyone who has resorted to vituperations and very pointed insinuations against me. I am not concerned with that. The character of these attacks reveals the bankruptcy of the opposition. I deal with those remarks with the contempt that they deserve and prefer the justice of our fight for this legislation to remain as the best answer, as the complete and final defense to desperate vilification.

I prefer to confine myself to the salient phases of the very fundamental issue involved in this debate. First of all let us see just what the poll tax does. No one can deny here that it has resulted in the disfranchisement of approximately 10,000,000 Americans—some 4,000,000 Negroes and about 6,000,000 whites. It has resulted, by the very nature of this discriminatory practice, in disunity. It divides into two classes the people of these poll-tax States, the enfranchised and the disfranchised. In the poll-tax States you have divided the people into two groups: One group which has the right to vote and another group which is forbidden to vote by this poll-tax device. That is a reality, an established fact. So, therefore, by the very nature of the poll tax itself it makes for division. And when you speak of unity and of its necessity at this time, I say to you that you cause disunity by continuing a practice which permits a relative of one soldier to vote and forbids the relative of another soldier who is fighting alongside the other from voting; you are thereby causing division and disunity and you are proclaiming a discriminatory practice throughout the land which is most injurious to the morale which is so necessary to win victory in this war. Unity can best be achieved by restoring to the people the rights which you have usurped from them. We again have here the issue of Oppression versus Freedom, the issue of Tyranny versus Democracy.

You are seeking to perpetuate this fascistic system which has been making oppression possible, which contributes to the worst kind of exploitation of both Negro and white, a system which gnaws at the very heart of fundamental democratic concepts. The abolition of the poll tax is an extension of democracy to 10,000,000 Americans. The abolition of the poll tax is a reassertion and a reaffirmation of the Constitution and of the very principles upon which our Government rests. It is extending democracy within the boundaries of our own land. It is a blow at fascism against which Americans are fighting everywhere in the world.

The fundamental issue involved in this bill today is democracy. The contest is between those who want a government of the rich, the few, and the well-born and those of us who believe in a government of the people. It is an issue of whether or not the principle of equality shall live everywhere in America. That is the issue. It is not an issue monopolized by any group; it is not an issue monopolized by any political party; it is an issue on which every believer in American democracy stands up against bias and prejudice, against tyranny and domestic fascism, and once again in the Congress of the United States reaffirms the proposition of the Declaration of Independence, that all men are created equal and, like a true patriot, refuses to bow and kneel before the false god of race or color supremacy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BALDWIN of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER.]

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the hour has come for plain speaking. All of us know that we are engaged in a war for the preservation of this Nation, and we know, too, that only the will of the American people will drive that war through to a victorious conclusion. Washington bureaucracy will not do it, questionnaires, paper work, appropriations, taxes, this Congress, the judiciary—none of these will win the war. Only the organized will of the American businessman, the American worker and farmer, and the American soldier, will do the deeds of heroism which are necessary on the industrial and fighting fronts—necessary to victory.

This bill before the House today is needed to strengthen our national will to fight to the finish for democratic institutions.

The Negro people have been mentioned in this debate. Let us be frank. Several million Negroes do not vote in the South because of poll tax and registration restrictions. Yet one-tenth of our American population is Negro. Would any of us here deliberately throw away the support of 13,000,000 Americans for the war effort? Who is it that plows the fields and digs the coal and works at heavy labor in the North and the South? This labor is essential to the preservation of American democracy. Do we not draft Negro soldiers? Do we not ask them to give their lives for democracy? The simple fact is that the preservation of democracy demands that we extend democracy to all American citizens.

Let us be clear. The passage of this bill will not guarantee that Negroes vote in the South. On the contrary, all of us know that the existing registration laws of the South will prevent Negroes from voting even if the poll tax is abolished. The percentage of Negroes voting in North Carolina, in Florida, and in Louisiana, where we do not have a poll-tax requirement, is no higher than the percentage of Negroes voting in the poll-tax States. Therefore, when our Southern friends mention the Negro vote they are raising a false issue. The people who will vote in the South as a result of this legislation will be the five to six million poor white people who are disfranchised at the present time by this outrageous, exorbitant, and cumbersome tax.

Anyone who wishes to fight reaction in this country and to maintain a liberal conservative democracy must recognize that the democratic rights of the people must be established in the South.

For millions of American citizens, for dependent people throughout the world, particularly in South America, this measure is the symbol of our sincerity and willingness to practice what we preach to others. In times of crisis, it becomes the paramount duty of the National Legislature to act with courage on basic matters of principle.

This bill is such a cause. I trust the House will reject every amendment offered to this bill today and pass it by a large majority.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I take this occasion as a long time friend of the family to pay a tribute to the memory of a charming, gifted, outstanding American woman, Mrs. William Howard Taft, the widow of one of our ablest and most famous Americans who held the highest offices in our Nation, both that of President and Chief Justice of the United States. He also served as Secretary of War and Governor General of the Philippines. Mrs. Taft raised a family of three children who occupy important and useful positions in our country today. She was one of the most intelligent, interesting, gracious, and beloved First Ladies of the Land.

The funeral services will be held at 2 p. m. this afternoon at St. Johns Church in Washington, to be followed by the interment at the Arlington Cemetery, where former President Taft is buried.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ABERNETHY].

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, the result of this legislation is inevitable, so far as this body of our legislative branch of the Government is concerned. It could be debated from now until fall and I sincerely do not believe such would change the attitude of this body in the very slightest.

But, nevertheless, may I point out one thing to the Members of the House, which I think is a reflection upon the poor white and colored people of the South, whom the proponents of this bill contend are disfranchised because of our poll-tax laws. The poll tax in Mississippi is fixed at $2 per year. Is there a man or woman here today who will argue with me that a citizen whose earning capacity is so nominal that he cannot pay 2 small dollars per year is competent to participate in an election? There are many poor people in my State, to be sure. But it is an insult to even the poorest to insinuate that he is disfranchised because of the levying of a $2 poll tax. Why, there is not a man or woman in my State, white or black, nor in any other Southern State, who cannot by some means or another meet this qualification for voting, and thus contribute that much to the support of our schools.

This attack, which I charge is inspired by the Communist Party, is the spearhead to break down the voting qualifications in every State of this Union. Uphold this bill and you immediately open to Federal legislative attack every voting qualification in your respective States. Thus you centralize your State government in Washington—the very issue which many of this body, and especially you Members on the Republican side, have been fighting in these very recent years.

Of most importance to us and our Nation today is unity. We are now facing the most powerful enemy in all of our noble history. We may not be able to defeat him without the united effort of all. Certainly a successful end will be prolonged without such. Everyone knows that this bill has created ill feelings between the Members of this body and the States as well. This certainly serves us no good. And those who sponsor this measure full well know that it has no more chance of passing the Senate than has a one-legged man in a foot race. There sits on this floor today as a visitor the senior Senator of my great State. He, I can assure you, has the power, the lungs, the stamina, and the determination to filibuster this iniquitous bill to an inglorious death, which the parliamentary rules of this House do not permit.

You who author and insist on this bill have known all of this time that the measure would, in the Senate, be filibustered into oblivion, and when it does mire down in the Senate, and important legislation is then and there automatically stalled, those of you who insist on this measure; in the face of an inevitable filibuster in the Senate, must assume the full responsibility for that legislative stalemate which is certain to prevail.

I am sorry that the wife of our President has publicly injected herself into this issue. It is universally known that this measure is directed at the South. She should recall the loyalty of the Southern States to the Democratic Party. She should recall that the South stood by and saved the Democratic Party from complete disintegration in the decade between 1920 and 1930. She should recall that as a result thereof her husband became President not for one term but three terms. What a reward we of the South are the recipients of today.

I end where I began. We know that passage by this body of this bill today is inevitable. But you gentlemen will look back on your acts with shame. And you Democrats who support the bill should certainly hang your heads in shame for the "reward" you will have handed your southern brothers of the Democratic Party.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. HOFFMAN. Listening to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER], one would assume that the only man who did not have a dollar was the Negro. There are some whites who do not have a dollar on occasion.

I cannot sympathize very deeply with some of my friends from the South when they complain of this measure being before the House at this time because they took in and adopted the New Deal. This measure would not be here were it not for New Deal support and because of the support given it, as pointed out by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], by the wife of the President. This is just one of the chickens that is coming home to roost. More accurately, one of the chickens hatched from the New Deal eggs.

Neither can I sympathize greatly with some of my Republican friends who have been talking about the iniquity and the wickedness and the viciousness of bringing powers to Washington and centralizing the powers of Government here and who then vote to divest the States of the power given them by the Constitution and vest that power in the Federal Government.

Now, how come? Far be it from me to suggest for one moment or even to think way back in the recesses of my own mind that there are any political implications in this bill. Oh, no; no, no. I am sure of that, because I recall how the gentleman on the majority side [Mr. GAVAGAN] brought out this bill on a previous occasion, coming as he does from a district where there are a large number of Negroes. And then I remember how some Republicans, desiring that all people should vote, supported that bill, expecting, so someone from the majority side most unjustly said, that we Republicans hoped we would reap some political benefit from its passage. I know better than that. I am not deceived by any such charge coming from the majority side. None of us is acting today with hope of obtaining a political advantage, is he? Oh, no. Perish any such thought.

As a matter of fact, this bill is a delusion and a snare insofar as it is thought it will give the right to vote to any Negro or poor white in the South. I hope that no one on the minority side is so dumb as to think for one moment that by wiping out the poll-tax requirement we are going to do away with some educational requirement that the legislatures in these Southern States may put into the law if they desire to erect barriers against voting on the part of the Negroes or poor whites. You know they will if that be their purpose. Perhaps if we in the North were in the same situation, and needed the poll tax for educational purposes as they do we might do the same thing. There was a time when Michigan had a poll tax, but as the State grew in wealth and taxes increased it was abolished.

Let us not pretend that we are doing something that we are not doing; that we are conferring upon the poor—both white and black—in the poll-tax States the unqualified right to vote. This bill in its present form does not do it and, when the bill is read for amendment, one will be offered by me, providing that lack of education shall not bar a man from voting.

It has been said by the proponents of this bill that, if a man fights for his country, even though he lacks the money to pay a $2 poll tax, he should be permitted to vote. It is equally true that, if he fights for his country, he should be permitted to vote, even though he can neither write nor read.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of the time.

Mr. Chairman, in this debate, as it has raged or run, there has been perfect agreement only on one point. There is universal lament that disunity is being produced both in Congress and in the Nation. All say they deplore this divisive influence, but each side blames the other for it. It reminds me of the old question, so popular in college hazing debates: Which came first, the hen or the egg? However, in this instance there is no question whatever but that those who introduced the bill, discharged the committee, and precipitated this debate by forcing its consideration on the floor, are they who have thereby prevented consideration of measures for the furtherance of our national war effort and disrupted our unity.

Surely those who act in sorrowful defense of the United States and their Constitution cannot be said to be provocateurs and aggressors. Repelling an assault with intent to murder cannot be twisted into causing the fight. MARCANTONIO, GAVAGAN, BENDER, and MAGNUSON can no more succeed in their attempt to fix war guilt upon us of the opposition than could Japan.

The disunity forced by this quartet and their abettors, as serious as it is, is not the only wound they have inflicted. They have paralyzed the House in its war functioning for a day or two, but inevitably they will paralyze the Senate for a much longer season, possibly for months, in time of war, when Congress and every citizen should be dedicated solely to the prime consideration of the furtherance of America's war effort.

I want to say a word or two with regard to the Classic case. You notice that is the only case about which proponents talk, and it is the only case about which they can talk without being laughed out of court. You would think from the way the distinguished gentleman from Indiana and others harp on it, especially the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] and another distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN], that the case is in point, but it just simply is not. It is neither the latest word of the Supreme Court on the subject of poll taxes, nor does it even mention poll taxes.

I want to read you what was taken down as the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] said it yesterday, about the Classic case. I asked him to yield and he said he could not at that moment. He never did. He said:

> That case holds that there are limits beyond which States' rights cannot go. The implications are that if a State can impose a poll tax of $1 or $2 as a condition precedent to voting, then indeed a State could impose a tax of $1,000 or $10,000.

No such implication is to be found in the Classic case. There is not even a hint or suspicion of any such implication.

Now would you not think from that speech that he actually made—and, of course, he deleted from his remarks as they appear in the RECORD the major part of the quotation I have just read you, although he said every word of it, here in the well yesterday—that the Classic case had something to say on the subject of the poll tax? You might think so, but, as a matter of fact, it does not. In all the 22 pages of that opinion and 12 pages of dissent not one single time is the poll tax mentioned. It has no more to do with the poll tax than it has to do with the price of eggs on Mars. What is the Classic case—this cornerstone on which their preposterous edifice of sophistry is built? It had to do with a crooked election commission in New Orleans that stole ballots, and those that they did not steal, they counted falsely. The question in that case was whether or not those criminals could be punished under the pertinent Federal criminal statute. Sections 19 and 20 of the Criminal Code applied, under article I, sections 2 and 4 of the Constitution of the United States. Of course, the Supreme Court held the manifest truth that the Constitution guarantees that Members of Congress—and a candidate for Congress was being voted on in that primary—shall be chosen every second year by the people of the several States, and that the right to choose, guaranteed by the Constitution, means not only the right to vote, if qualified under the State statute to do so but also the right to have the vote honestly counted. That is exactly what the Classic case holds. I challenge anybody in this House to dispute that, and I pause for a reply to my challenge.

I reread that decision this morning, and I speak with all the positiveness of certainty, when I say, that the poll tax is not mentioned once in that long decision, and that it deals with an entirely different question from the question of the right of a State to require a poll tax or any other qualification for voting.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. Yes, sir, I am delighted to yield.

Mr. CELLER. The implications are that the reading of the Classic case clearly indicates that the reasoning of that decision is applicable to poll taxes, although "poll tax" is not mentioned in the decision.

Mr. HOBBS. I thank the gentleman for his admission. I caught the point of the word "implications" when the gentleman used it, and I knew why he was using it. You hid behind the word "implications" because you knew that the Classic decision said nothing about poll taxes, yet you plainly intimated that its "implications" dealt with the subject of poll taxes when there is nothing in the decision justifying such an intimation.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. BALDWIN] called attention to the fact that the Legislature of Tennessee has recently repealed the statute of that State requiring the payment of the poll tax. Just to keep the record straight, may I call attention to the fact that a Chancery Court in Tennessee has held that repeal of the Tennessee poll-tax law to be unconstitutional and void? That case is now pending on appeal in the Supreme Court of Tennessee.

The sailor who interrupted these proceedings a few minutes ago, when he jumped up onto the balustrade of the gallery, and erroneously claimed his Constitutional right of freedom of speech, typifies the proponents of this bill, and his perch was no more precarious than is theirs. Our sailor friend was just as earnest and honest and mistaken as are they. Both he and they are wrong when they assert the right to speak, in the Congress of the United States, in advocacy of robbing the States of their power to levy poll taxes. He had, of course, no such right at all. They have a mere color of right, and even that should be subject to their oath of office to uphold the Constitution which their efforts and arguments would violate. This is the proper forum for no such argument. The legislature of a State is the place where such speeches should be made and by the duly elected legislators.

Now, let us consider this iniquitous bill.

Universal suffrage has never existed anywhere in the history of the world. Every sovereignty has fixed its own qualifications prerequisite to the privilege of the exercise of the elective franchise. The poll tax is one of these qualifications; age, residence, property ownership, and registration are some of the others most common. That the poll tax is a qualification made a prerequisite to the privilege of voting by some sovereignties is too clear for argument. Section 178 of the Constitution of Alabama, for instance, reads, in its pertinent part, as follows:

To entitle a person to vote in any election by the people he shall have * * * paid all poll taxes.

Whether or not there should be a poll tax may be debatable, but not in this forum except on the question of submitting a constitutional amendment to the States for ratification. The fixing, vel non, of such a requirement is exclusively for each State to determine for itself. There never has been a Federal election; nor a Federal vote. All elections have been and are State elections, and only those who have qualified under State law are eligible to vote therein.

The exclusive right of a State to fix the qualifications prerequisite to the privilege of voting is well recognized and established:

DISTINGUISHED TEXT WRITERS

"Among the absolute, unqualified rights of the States is that of regulating the elective franchise; it is the foundation of State authority; the most important political function exercised by the people in their sovereign capacity." Whilst "the right of the people to participate in the legislature is the best security of liberty and foundation of all free government," yet it is subordinate to the higher power of regulating the qualifications of the electors and the elected. The original power of the people in their aggregate political capacity is delegated in the form of suffrage to such persons as they deem proper for the safety of the commonwealth; Brightly Election Cases (Anderson v. Baker, 32, 33, 34, 23 Maryland 531).

Story, treating of this subject, says:

Every constitution of government in these United States has assumed, as a fundamental principle, the right of the people of the State to alter, abolish, and modify the form of its own government according to the sovereign pleasure of the people. In fact, the people of each State have gone much further and settled a far more critical question by deciding who shall be the voters entitled to approve and reject the constitution framed by a delegated body under their direction. (1 Story Constitution, ch. 9, sec. 581.)

From this it will be seen how little, even in the most free of republican governments, any abstract right of suffrage, or any original and indefeasible privilege, has been recognized in practice (ibid.). In no two of these State constitutions will it be found that the qualifications of the voters are settled upon the same uniform basis, so that we have the most abundant proofs that among a free and enlightened people convened for the purpose of establishing their own forms of government and the rights of their own voters the question as to the due regulation of the qualifications has been deemed a matter of mere State policy, and varied to meet the wants, to suit the prejudices, and to foster the interests of the majority.

The exclusive right of the several States to regulate the exercise of the elective franchise and to prescribe the qualifications of voters was never questioned, nor attempted to be interfered with, until the fifteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States was forced upon unwilling communities (the States then lately in rebellion) by the military power of the general Government, and thus made a part of our organic law; a necessary sequence, perhaps, of the Civil War, but nonetheless a radical change in the established theory of our Government. (Brightly Election Cases, author's note, pp. 42, 43.)

The right to vote is not of necessity connected with citizenship. The rights of the citizen are civil rights, such as liberty of person and of conscience, the right to acquire and possess property, all of which are distinguishable from the political privilege of suffrage.

The history of the country shows that there is no foundation in fact for the view that the right of suffrage is one of the "privileges or immunities of citizens." (McCrary Elections, p. 3.)

"The right to vote is not vested, it is purely conventional, and may be enlarged or restricted, granted, or withheld, at pleasure, and without fault."

In Blair v. Ridgely (41 Mo. 161), the question at issue arose out of the provision of article II, section 3, of the Constitution of 1865 of the State of Missouri. By this section it was provided that no person should be deemed a qualified voter who had ever been in armed hostility to the United States or to the government of the State of Missouri; that every person should, at the time of offering to vote, take an oath that he was not within the inhibition of this section, and that any person declining to take such oath should not be allowed to vote. The plaintiff, at an election held in the city of St. Louis on November 7, 1865, offered to vote, but refused to take the oath prescribed by the constitution. His vote being rejected, he brought his action against the judges of the election for damages. The case was taken to the Supreme Court of Missouri, where it was argued exhaustively, and with much learning, by eminent counsel, and the argument is to be found in full in the Reports of the Supreme Court of Missouri, volume 41. It was contended by the plaintiff that the section of the constitution in question was in violation of the Constitution of the United States, being a bill of attainder and an ex post facto law within the meaning of that instrument, and, in consequence, null and void. But the court held against this contention, drawing the distinction between laws passed to punish for offenses in order to prevent their repetition and laws passed to protect the public franchises and privileges from abuse by falling into unworthy hands. It is said by the court that—

"The State may not pass laws in the form or with the effect of bills of attainder, ex post facto laws, or laws impairing the obligation of contracts. It may and has full power to pass laws, restrictive and exclusive, for the preservation or promotion of the common interests as political or social emergencies may from time to time require, though in certain instances disabilities may directly flow in consequence. It should never be forgotten that the State is organized for the public weal as well as for individual purposes, and while it may not disregard the safeguards that are thrown around the citizen for his protection by the Constitution, it cannot neglect to perform and do what is for the public good."

It was argued in Blair v. Ridgely that the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Cummings v. Missouri (4 Wall. 277), where it was held that this section of the Missouri Constitution, so far as it provided an oath to be taken by preachers, was in the nature of pains and penalties, and consequently void, was decisive of the Blair case. But the distinction between the right to practice a profession or follow a calling and the right to vote is clearly stated in the opinion of Judge Wagner, as follows:

"The decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Cummings case proceeds on the idea that the right to pursue a calling or profession is a natural and inalienable right and that a law precluding a person from practicing his calling or profession on account of past conduct is inflicting a penalty, and therefore void. There are certain rights which inhere in and attach to the person, and of which he cannot be deprived except by forfeiture for crime, whereof he must be first tried and convicted according to due process of law. These are termed natural or absolute rights. * * * But is the right to vote or to exercise the privilege of the elective franchise a right either natural, absolute, or vested? It is certain that in a state of nature, disconnected with government, no person has or can enjoy it. That the privilege of participating in the elective franchise in this free and enlightened country is an important and interesting one is most true. But we are not aware that it has ever been held or adjudged to be a vested interest in any individual.

"Suffrage in the United States not being a vested right, it results that persons who have enjoyed and exercised the privilege, and who have been qualified electors, may be entirely disfranchised and deprived of the privilege by constitutional provision, and such persons are entirely without a remedy at law." (McCrary, Elections, p. 9.)

"The whole subject of the regulation of elections, including the prescribing of qualifications for suffrage, is left by the National Constitution to the several States, except as it is provided by that instrument that the electors for Representatives in Congress shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature, and as the fifteenth amendment forbids denying to citizens the right to vote on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. Participation in the elective franchise is a privilege rather than a right, and it is granted or denied on grounds of general policy, the prevailing view being that it should be as general as possible consistent with the public safety." (Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, 8th ed., Carrington, vol. 2.)

Also, the following treatises are to the same effect:

Morse, Citizenship, section 3.

Pomeroy, Constitutional Law, section 535.

THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES

Article I, section 2:

The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second year by the people of the several States, and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature.

Article I, section 4:

The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

Article I, section 8, clause 18:

To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof.

THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES AND OTHER COURTS

To make payment of poll taxes a prerequisite of voting is not to deny any privilege or immunity protected by the fourteenth amendment. Privilege of voting is not derived from the United States, but is conferred by the State, and, save as restrained by the fifteenth and nineteenth amendments and other provisions of the Federal Constitution, the State may condition suffrage as it deems appropriate. The privileges and immunities protected are only those that arise from the Constitution and laws of the United tates and not those that spring from other sources (Breedlove v. Suttles (302 U. S. 277, 283); Pirtle v. Brown (118 Fed. 2d 218, certiorari denied by Supreme Court, 62 Sup. Ct. Rep. 64); Huber v. Reiley (53 Penn. St. 112); Minor v. Happersett (21 Wall. U S. 162, 170); United States v. Reese (92 U. S. 214, 217, 218); United States v. Cruikshank (92 U. S. 542); McPherson v. Blacker (146 U. S. 1, 38, 39); Anderson v. Baker (23 Md. 531); Ex parte Yarborough (110 U. S. 631, 664, 665); Blair v. Ridgely (41 Mo. 63); Guinn v. United States (238 U. S. 347, 362, L. R. A. 1916 A. 1134); Ex parte Stratton (1 W. Va. 305); Kring v. Missouri (107 U. S. 221); Hamilton v. Regents (293 U. S. 245, 261); Washington v. State (75 Ala. 582)).

The proponents of this measure rely for support of their contention almost exclusively upon the case of United States v. Classic, et al. (313 U. S. 299). They contend very artfully that this case justifies the Congress in the enactment of the Geyer bill but they do not mention the fact that the Classic case was a criminal prosecution against commissioners of elections for willfully altering and falsely counting and certifying the ballots of voters cast in a primary election for a Representative in Congress, among others. Based on article I, section 2, of the Federal Constitution, quoted supra, the majority decision of the Supreme Court holds:

Obviously included within the right to choose, secured by the Constitution, is the right of qualified voters within a State to cast their ballots and have them counted at congressional elections.

We concede the soundness of this holding.

The majority opinion further holds: That since by law in Louisiana, primaries are made an integral part of the procedure for the possible choice of Congressmen and since in Louisiana the nomination resulting from the primary is equivalent to election, the criminal statute covers interference with the right to vote and have the votes honestly counted and certified, in primaries as well as in general elections.

Mr. Justice Douglas, with Justices Black and Murphy, dissented as to primaries. The dissenting opinion is powerful, if not unanswerable the particular case. We leave the members of the Supreme Court to their quarrel on this point as it is not germane in the consideration of the Geyer bill.

Neither the majority nor minority of the Supreme Court question congressional power to protect by appropriate legislation the right secured by the Constitution to a vote and an honest count and certification. They agree that this is assured by article I, section 2, quoted supra, with article I, section 8, clause 18, which gives Congress the power—

To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States or in any department or officer thereof.

It may be questioned whether or not the right to vote and to an honest count is a power vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States or in any department or officer thereof. This question, however, has no bearing upon our instant inquiry. The vital question of law pertinent to the debate of the constitutionality, vel non, of the Geyer bill is, not whether Congress has constitutional power to pass a criminal law, to punish interference with the right of a qualified voter to vote and to have an honest count, but has Congress the constitutional power to pass a law usurping the admittedly exclusive power of a State to prescribe the qualifications of its qualified voters?

No matter what interpretation they may seek to put on the Classic case, no matter how critical they may be of the Breedlove case, the United States Circuit Court of Appeals, Sixth Circuit, in the case of Pirtle v. Brown et al. (118 Fed. Rep., second series, p. 218), followed the Breedlove decision, quoted from it, and cited it approvingly, and the Supreme Court denied certiorari, thereby refusing to upset the decision in the Pirtle case, after the decision by the Supreme Court in the Classic case had been handed down (62d Sup. Ct. Repts., p. 64).

So the Supreme Court, since its decision in the Classic case was handed down, has refused to review the decision in the Pirtle case, which was handed down after the decision in the Classic case and which agrees fully with the holding in the Breedlove decision.

The Breedlove and Pirtle cases were both poll-tax cases. The Classic case had nothing to do with the poll-tax question. The sole question in the Classic case was:

May State election officials steal ballots cast by duly qualified voters for a candidate for Congress in a State primary election, in violation of a Federal criminal statute condemning all such rascality, without being subject to prosecution and punishment by the Federal Government?

The Supreme Court held: That the right granted the Federal Government by article I, section 2, of the Federal Constitution, to have its Congressmen chosen in a State election, meant the right to have them honestly chosen; and that the right granted the Federal Government by article I, section 8, clause 18, of the Federal Constitution, "To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof," authorized the making of the law violated by Classic and his partners in crime. In other words, the Classic case dealt not with who was a qualified voter under Louisiana law, but with the right to have an honest count of the ballots of admittedly qualified voters.

The United States of America was created by the Thirteen Crown Colonies. It existed long before the Constitution. As far as external sovereignty in international affairs was concerned, it was a sovereign nation. It functioned through the Continental Congress composed of delegates from the Thirteen Colonies. The Colonies became free and independent States by virtue of the Declaration of Independence, in the making of which they united, and which was validated by force of arms. Each State was sovereign, supreme, free, and independent except as they, in the exercise of their sovereignty, banded themselves together and delegated by their own free will and accord, certain of the powers of their sovereignty to the limited union they agreed upon and formed. This union, according to the Articles of Confederation, was to be perpetual and in international affairs was given sovereignty. It had no power whatsoever in domestic affairs. It could not even levy taxes for its own support, being dependent upon contributions made by the States. The sum total of all domestic sovereignty was in the respective States and has been diminished from time to time only as the absolutely sovereign States saw fit to make further delegations of parts of their sovereign power. After becoming convinced that the union existing before and under the Articles of Confederation was impracticable, the Constitution was ordained and established "in order to form a more perfect union." The Supreme Court of the United States in the case of U. S. v. Curtiss-Wright Export Corp. et al. (299 U. S. 304, 315) says:

The broad statement that the Federal Government can exercise no powers except those specifically enumerated in the Constitution, and such implied powers as are necessary and proper to carry into effect the enumerated powers, is categorically true only in respect of our internal affairs. In that field, the primary purpose of the Constitution was to carve from the general mass of legislative powers then possessed by the States such portions as it was thought desirable to vest in the Federal Government, leaving those not included in the enumeration still in the States.

There never has been a Federal election held nor a Federal vote cast. The States existed before the Federal Government. They created it. They gave it life and such limited powers as it possesses. The power to hold elections and to authorize people to vote was never delegated to the Federal Government. It has always been and remains in each State.

In the Constitution of the United States, however, the States—absolutely sovereign in this field as well as in all domestic affairs—changed the form of their Federal Government and provided in article I, section 2:

The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second year by the people of the several States, and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature.

In 1913 the seventeenth amendment became a part of the Constitution of the United States, providing for the election of Senators in exactly the same way. But both Senators and Representatives were to be elected, not by the people of the United States nor by the votes of persons authorized to vote by the United States, but "by the people of the several States, and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature," fixed by the State.

When the States in convention assembled agreed to undertake to hold elections for the Federal Government, the way it was to be done was merely by admitting candidates for Federal office into the regular State elections. All elections are State elections. They always have been, are now, and should so continue. In agreeing to admit candidates for Federal office to State elections, the States did not stipulate what qualifications they would fix as prerequisite to the privilege of voting. They did not limit themselves. They did not confer any right whatever upon their Federal Government except that its candidates could run in their elections and be voted on by the voters of the States—those who had been given the franchise of suffrage in each State by the law of the State. But in assuming this obligation they gave this pledge:

> And the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature.

In other words, wrote the States, we pledge you that as our guest in our political homes you will be treated as well as we treat members of our own political family; we will give you the best we have, judged by the same standards and safeguards we have erected for our own safety. But we will use for you only the same servants we employ for ourselves, and we do not agree to make you master, nor to employ more nor different servants because of this hospitality we cordially extend you.

The principle dominating this field of thought is that "the law guarantees every citizen the right to be justly governed, but not the privilege of being one of the governors."

We are perfectly familiar with the distinction sought to be drawn by the supporters of this measure between qualifications and conditions. In the last analysis, however, this seems to be a distinction without a difference. Whether the requirements fixed by the law of a State as prerequisites to the privilege of voting be conditions or qualifications is unessential. Whatever they may be called, the State alone has the right to fix them. The Federal Government has no such right. We are, of course, also familiar with section 4 of article I of the Constitution of the United States, the pertinent part of which reads as follows:

> The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

While this does delegate to Congress a certain veto power, it is only as to regulations prescribed by a State as to "the times, places, and manner of holding elections." It has nothing whatever to do with the paramount right of a State to fix conditions or qualifications prerequisite to the privilege of voting. It has to do exclusively with the "how" of the election, not with the "who" of the electors.

You may say that a poll-tax requirement is unfair and unwise, but you have no vestige of authority or right to outlaw the poll tax by statute as here proposed.

The caste system of India may be all wrong and indefensible, but the Congress of the United States has no power to change it. We have just as much power over India as we have over Alabama.

England may, in our judgment, be foolish in keeping her King, but no one would suggest that we have any semblance of power to fire their King, yet we have even less power over Alabama or any other State of this Union than we have over England. The reason is plain. We are oath-bound to respect the sovereignty of every State of the United States, whereas we took no such oath with respect to England.

Germany's treatment of the Jews is barbarous, but no one of us has ever sponsored a measure here to stop this rape of right, this inhuman murder of law, realizing that, so far as this Congress could legislate, Germany's internal affairs were Germany's business and not ours.

I want to call your attention to the propaganda which has been flooding the Capitol of late, much of which has come to my desk, issued by organizations that are supporting this measure, calling attention to the fact that there is no race question presented here because more white are disenfranchised by the poll tax than colored people. Whether that be true or not makes no difference. There certainly is no distinction made, and no discrimination is practiced or possible under any of the poll-tax statutes or constitutional provisions.

May I read to you what the Constitution of Alabama says on that subject, contained in section 178 of the Constitution of Alabama?

> To entitle a person to vote in any election of the people he shall have—

Then deleting the provisions as to age, residence, and registration—> paid all poll taxes.

Could any words be devised or used which would more clearly evidence the fact that that is a primary qualification fixed for all who would vote by the Constitution of Alabama?

It is a requirement of a condition precedent to the privilege of voting. I maintain that there are no words that would have evidenced such an intent more clearly. So it is that if we are to comply with our oaths of office, if we are to uphold and maintain the Constitution of the United States, as we have sworn to do, we cannot thus impinge upon the sovereignty of the State of Alabama.

This bill would override and violate the sovereignty of those States which have seen fit in their wisdom to adopt the poll tax as one of the prerequisites to the privilege of voting in elections held in and by those States.

But not only is the poll-tax requirement a qualification made a prerequisite to the privilege of voting, it is also a fair and reasonable test.

There can be no escape from the conclusion that this refers not to the "how" of the election but to the "who" of the electors. It certainly has nothing whatsoever to do with the time, nor place, nor manner of holding any election. It certainly provides a reasonable test of qualification in that its payment is left purely voluntary and all money received, without deduction of any fees or other costs, goes to the public schools. So the poll-tax requirement tests a citizen's interest in the financial support of the public schools of his State and also tests his interest in obtaining for himself the franchise of suffrage. One really desiring to vote, one who would take an interest in voting, one who would take the trouble to post himself upon the merits or demerits of candidates and issues, has never minded and will never mind paying $1.50 a year in order to qualify as an elector. If one desiring to vote values the privilege of voting less than $1.50 a year, it is doubtful if he could be a good elector. Therefore, since section 4 of article I of the Federal Constitution is the only grant of power to Congress over suffrage and elections, Congress has no power at all to pass a law overriding this requirement of State law. This was the holding of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Breedlove case and again in the Pirtle case.

The appeal that I am making to you Members of the House today who are honoring me with your presence and attention and to those who may, as I certainly hope they will, read my remarks in the RECORD, is that this thing be not done, particularly at this time.

In conclusion, therefore, I invite your particular and special attention to those passages of Washington's Farewell Address wherein he expressed his parental solicitude for the future of the Nation of which he was father:

> That your Union and brotherly affection may be perpetuated.

And this primary injunction:

> The unity of government which constitutes you one people is also now dear to you. It is justly so, for it is a main pillar in the edifice of your real independence, the support of your tranquillity at home, your peace abroad, of your safety, of your prosperity in every shape, of that very liberty which you so highly prize. But as it is easy to foresee that from different causes, and from different quarters, much pains will be taken, many artifices employed, to weaken in your minds the conviction of this truth; as this is the point in your political fortress against which the batteries of internal and external enemies will be most constantly and actively (though often covertly and insidiously) directed, it is of infinite moment that you should properly estimate the immense value of your National Union to your collective and individual happiness; that you should cherish a cordial, habitual, and immovable attachment to it, accustoming yourselves to think and speak of it as of the palladium of your political safety and prosperity, watching for its preservation with jealous anxiety, discountenancing whatever may suggest even a suspicion that it can in ary event be abandoned, and indignantly frowning upon the first dawning of every attempt to alienate any portion of our country from the rest, or to enfeeble the sacred ties which now link together the various parts.

The mighty mind of our first President, as he let it run down the long years of the future, saw clearly that from time to time there would be legislation proposed and administrative policies considered which would tend toward disintegration of the unity which he conceived to be and which we all must admit is essential to the preservation of our form of government, the dual system of government, the States supreme in their realm of internal affairs, the Federal Government supreme in its exclusive sphere of itnernational affairs.

No one can deny that the South has taken its rightful place and performed well its full part in every foreign war which this country has waged. In the War of the Revolution the blood of southern patriots reddened the soil of New England and wrote thereby a plea against sectionalism. The ragged heroes who followed Washington across the Delaware and to Valley Forge were Americans all. There was no sectional partisanship among the boys who fought at Chapultepec nor San Jacinto. The forces of the Republic in our war with Spain were not clad in blue or gray, but in the uniform of the Nation. The boys who sleep on San Juan Hill or in the trenches around Santiago were from every part of the Union.

Those men who "gave the last full measure of devotion" in France in World War No. 1 and their buddies who, thank God, came back to live among us, were Americans—not northerners nor southerners nor easterners nor westerners.

The same thing is equally true in this desperate struggle for survival in which we are now engaged. Every one of those wars of the Republic has been nonsectional, and united we stood, fought, and won.

More than a year before the Declaration of Independence was adopted by the Continental Congress at Philadelphia, a similar declaration of independence was adopted by a convention which met in Charlotte, N. C. It is known as the Mecklenburg Declaration of Independence. From a pamphlet preserved in the Library of Congress we learn:

Therefore on the sd. 19th May 1775 the sd. committee met in Charlotte Town (2 men from each company) vested with all powers these their constituents had or conceived they had.

After a short conference about their suffering brethren besieged and suffering every hardship in Boston and the American blood running in Lexington, the electrical fire flew into every breast.

These men of the South felt keenly the afflictions of their brethren in Boston, and the news of the American blood running in Lexington caused the electrical fire to fly into every breast. Would that we were so closely knit in bonds of brotherhood and sympathetic regard today. The ground that we have lost in this respect may be regained but not without mutual respect and confidence.

Every one of those hardy pioneers loved his fellows engaged in the common struggle to build here "a new nation, conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal." We have a rich, common heritage from these founding fathers. There is much to love in the citizens of every part of our great Nation. We may look on this and be drawn closer together. We may look on the divisive elements and become hostile camps. The future is in our hands today to mar or to make. The South asks and will have no part in the local problems of other sections. We have full confidence in our brethren that they will work out their own difficulties wisely and well. We may consider the things that will make us one or the things which divide. My plea is not made as a southerner nor as the Representative of a great district of Alabama, but as a humble citizen of this great Republic. I plead with you, my colleagues, and with all who have ears to hear, that we set ourselves against consideration of those things which tend to divide us and give our best thought to those things which unite. There are many measures challenging our best united thought.

The war must be won. We must be united in its prosecution. It is a war for survival. We are all in the same boat. None should be thrown out. Let us press forward toward our glorious destiny in unity, "discountenancing whatever may suggest even a suspicion that it can in any event be abandoned, and indignantly frowning upon the first dawning of every attempt to alienate any portion of our country from the rest, or to enfeeble the sacred ties which now link together the various parts."

I am appealing to the membership of this House to think on these things. There is no reason why we should adopt the unconstitutional statutory way when we have a perfect right to submit a constitutional amendment which might do legitimately what the proponents of this heinous bill want done. I beg of you, whether you support the objective of this bill or not, that it be defeated, because it is illegitimate, and its passage would assassinate interstate comity. I beg of you to think on these things and be on your guard lest plausible arguments, artfully advanced, should sway your better judgment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired. All time has expired, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the requirement that a poll tax be paid as a prerequisite to voting or registering to vote at primaries or other elections for President, Vice President, electors for President or Vice President, or for Senator or Member of the House of Representatives, is not and shall not be deemed a qualification of voters or electors voting or registering to vote at primaries or other elections for said officers, within the meaning of the Constitution, but is and shall be deemed an interference with the manner of holding primaries and other elections for said national officers and a tax upon the right or privilege of voting for said national officers.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, and I ask unanimous consent that instead of separating the amendment into several amendments dealing with each section separately, the subject matter being absolutely the same, simply striking out primary elections from this bill, that it be considered as one amendment to the whole bill as read, and not several amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object, but I did not hear what the gentleman said.

Mr. HOBBS. I have offered an amendment to strike out all reference to primary elections from the bill wherever that reference occurs, and I am asking unanimous consent that instead of adding it to each section I be permitted to insert one to the whole bill.

Mr. MAGNUSON. There is no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the amendment which he offers to section 1 and other sections that have been read may be considered as one. Is there objection?

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALTER. Is it in order to offer any amendment whatsoever to the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. It is. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOBBS: Page 1, line 4, strike out "primaries or other", and in lines 8 and 9 strike out "or registering to vote at primaries or other" and insert the word "at"; on page 2, line 2, strike out the words "primaries and other"; on page 2, in line 7, strike out "or registering to vote", in lines 8 and 14 strike out "primaries or other", in line 17 strike out "such primary or other election" and insert "such elections", in lines 19 and 20 strike out "such primary or other" and insert "any such", and in line 25, strike out "or registering to vote at any primary or other" and insert "at any"; and on page 3, in lines 8 and 9, strike out "or registering to vote in any primary or other" and insert "at any"; amend the title to read as follows: "An act making unlawful requirements for the payment of a poll tax as a prerequisite to vote in elections for national officers."

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, the sole purport of this amendment is to strike out all reference in the bill, wherever it occurs, to primary elections, and to registration as a prerequisite to voting.

In the dissenting opinion in the Classic case, written by Justice Douglas and concurred in by Mr. Justice Black and Mr. Justice Murphy, it was held that the majority opinion is in error in holding that the United States Criminal Code sections, under which the prosecution of Classic and his codefendants was instituted, could be applied to primary elections. You will find this dissenting opinion unanswerable.

Now, what is a primary? A primary is a family fight. The family is split and divided as to which one of the boys shall represent that party before the voters at the polls in the general election. That is all it is. Repeatedly it has been held by courts of last resort, even the Supreme Court of the United States, that the sovereign power of the Federal Government had nothing whatever to do with local affairs; that its sovereignty was primarily in external affairs. I cite you the case of Curtiss-Wright Corporation as the indisputable authority for that. They held that as to primary elections, which are family quarrels within the Democratic, Republican, or any other party, the Federal Government has no more to do than with private, personal affairs.

I am asking you just as a common-sense proposition, if you have read the dissenting opinion on the subject of primaries in the Classic case, how can you discharge your duty under your oath as a Congressman if you vote to go that much further than the main illegal invasion of States' rights to control their own general elections. There never has been in the history of this land a Federal election. There never has been a Federal elector. All elections have been and are State elections. All that the States did was to grant the opportunity to those who were running for Federal office to participate as candidates in the State elections. Even then it was hedged about with the qualification that the States had the right to fix the qualifications for those who might seek to vote.

So, in all fairness, without any animus, I know that the motives that prompt gentlemen who are proposing this bill and who are supporting it on the floor will not require that you go as far as this bill now goes. I am begging you not to intrude yourselves into the family quarrels of the primaries, and that you let those fights be settled among the boys down in the States, wherever they occur. The House bills on this subject that have passed the House before did not cover primaries. You doubt your right to pass this bill even if this amendment be adopted. I challenge your right to pass it in any form; but you certainly do not need to go this second mile into iniquity.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CELLER. Is it the purpose of the Chair to recognize members of the Judiciary Committee in preference to nonmembers of that committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will use his own discretion.

Mr. CELLER. Is the bill to be considered as though it came from the Committee on the Judiciary?

The CHAIRMAN. The management of the bill is in the hands of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS].

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to be brief in my opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS]. In listening to the gentleman from Alabama, I could not help but think, if I should ever be on the wrong side of a case in court and had some desire to present that wrong side in the best possible manner as a lawyer, I am sure I would go to Alabama and seek out the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS]. He is an excellent lawyer, a learned lawyer, but, of course, I think the facts are clearly against him on the primary angle of this subject. But the gentleman said to leave it to the poll-tax States to settle their own family fight. The amendment would not only settle their own family fight but it would settle this piece of legislation, because all his amendment does is negative the effectiveness of this bill regarding the southern primaries. Of course, the southern primary is all the election there is, and so there would be no poll-tax bill. It is a very astute amendment, and I think one of the purposes of the bill is to abolish poll taxes so that these so-called family fights will be a little more peaceful and every one in the Southern States will have their say regarding them.

I hope the amendment will be voted down. The gentleman, in all seriousness, does bring up a question of law, but he determines to decide the constitutionality of this bill in his amendment, and I do not believe the House wishes to do that at this time.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt that the primary elections in the anti-poll-tax States are as important or far more important than the elections themselves. If there is any doubt on that score permit me to read from the majority opinion by Justice Stone in the so-called Classic Case (313 U. S., at p. 314):

> Interference with the right to vote in the congressional primary * * * for the choice of Democratic candidates for Congress is thus, as matter of law and in fact, an interference with the effective choice of the voters at the only stage of the election procedure when their choice is of significance, since it is at the only stage when such interference could have any practical effect on the ultimate result, the choice of the Congressman to represent the district. The primary in Louisiana (and it is so in all poll-tax States)— > is an integral part of the procedure for the popular choice of Congressman. The right of qualified voters to vote at the congressional primary in Louisiana and to have their ballots counted is thus the right to participate in that choice.

This indicates how essentially important primaries are; if therefore we take out the word "primary" in the bill we cut out the very heart and soul of the bill and there is no reason even to consider further the pending legislation.

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. GWYNNE. Is it not a fact that in the Classic case every judge held that a primary was an election and that the dissent of Mr. Justice Douglas was based on the fact that the Congress had not legislated as to primaries and there being no common-law crime therefore he thought the defendant could not be convicted?

Mr. CELLER. This is so. Of course, the reasoning of the minority opinion by Justice Douglas did not prevail.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HOBBS. The bill, which has been before the House in every Congress has never had this provision as to primaries in it before. This is a Senate amendment engrafted upon the bill that the gentleman praised so highly each time it was before us. I do not see why, therefore, you cannot go back to your original grip and not seek to take an underhold.

Mr. CELLER. I understand the bill now before us is in the form in which it came out of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

It is quite probable that if you indicate your views to some of the Members from the poll-tax States they will always tell you that only primaries in the South count, that elections do not count. I have some interesting figures on the primaries to show how even in the South only a modicum or at least only a minority of the qualified voters come out to vote for various reasons and I assume among them there is the imposition of the poll tax. I got these figures from Emory Forbush, of the Editorial Research Reports.

In Georgia, for example, in the 1932 primary, only 37.7 percent of the voters came out to vote. In Texas in the 1938 primary only 37 percent voted; in the Mississippi 1935 primary it was 34.4 percent; in the Virginia 1936 primary it was 26 percent; in the Alabama 1932 primary it was 33.4 percent.

What is the situation in some of the other States—non-poll-tax States? The average vote in the Presidential elections of 1928 and 1932 in, for example, the neighboring non-poll-tax States of Kentucky and West Virginia were in contrast 68 percent and 79 percent, respectively.

In view of the fact that even in primaries there is a cutting down of the primary vote—and I am sure the cutting down has some relationship to the imposition of the poll tax as a condition precedent to voting—and we find the average between 37.7 and 23 percent, we must in fairness vote down the amendment. I am sure the Members do not want to vote for this amendment, otherwise all our efforts yesterday and today will have been wasted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS].

Mr. Chairman, I happen to come from the State of North Carolina, where long years ago we abolished the poll tax as a prerequisite to voting. I am not so much concerned about that issue as I am over some of the arguments and precedents which we are about to set in this House. I expect today about the only crime I am guilty of in the eyes of some, and personally I am very proud of it, is the fact that I happen to be from the south side of the Potomac River. I am astounded at the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] being so anxious to be such a gratuitous benefactor to the people below the Potomac. Why does he persist in bringing up the North-South issue by abusing the South and its people?

I thought we were at war. I thought the North, East, South, and West were engaged in a war for the preservation of democracy, and yet I hear such inflammatory statements as came from the charming lips of such a very delightful person as is the gentlewoman from Ohio [Mrs. BOLTON]. And here is the gentleman from New York [Mr. BALDWIN] immaculately dressed, who for the first time has exhibited such great interest in our people. Charming and convincing as he is, with an affidavit face, he seems to want to give us advice. I was almost charmed as I first observed him here in the Hall, with his hair combed so slick. He will never miss it when he goes bald-headed. What a team, Mr. MARCANTONIO carrying the Constitution, Mr. GAVAGAN and Mr. BALDWIN of New York running interference, while the gentlewoman from Ohio [Mrs. BOLTON] uses her charm to attract the attention of the defending team so that one more score can be marked up against State governments.

We have the galleries here crowded with Americans today and we have about 6,000,000 men in uniform, perhaps 2,000,000 of them engaged in mortal combate, yes, fighting and dying. What are we doing while thousands and thousands are striking at the rubber plants? Thirty thousand this morning, I believe. Here we are 400 men and women in a so-called poll-tax fight. I could give it another name. I must confess I am not very proud of the picture.

Mr. Chairman, there are about six States in the Union that have the poll-tax law. Those States had that law when their boys left to go across the pond. For God's sake, Mr. Chairman, let us preserve as much of this Government in as nearly the same shape as was intact when those men donned the uniform.

They left this Government in our hands as trustees, praying God that we would preserve this end of it while they defended and protected it from attack by the vandals and enemies who are attempting to destroy it from without. I for one propose to keep faith with them.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am not voting from political expediency. I do not have to. Withdraw that charge. I have heard the boys who are fighting the war used as a whipping post lately on many issues. I think I am voting so that many of those who now are fighting may get a chance to vote, rather than otherwise. In my opinion, they deserve that privilege no matter in what section they may reside.

I have been here a long time. Constitutional questions have always interested me. I was here when you gentlemen cut the gold dollar in half, and the constitutionality of that and many other issues did not seem to trouble you very much. With that record, you now plead constitutionality on a close issue. We are only attempting to take care of Federal officials, leaving the other candidates for office in your own States to your own tender mercies. You may well be forced to grant officials of the Federal Government an untrammelled election. But constitutionality does not lie in the mouths of many of you now pleading that issue here today. My memory is too green to regard you as consistent. There were many much more important matters on which you were willing to risk constitutionality. There was the one in which your own leader pleaded, "Do not worry about constitutionality. Pass the law and that feature will be determined later." You remember that never-to-be-forgotten letter and most of you jumped through the hoop.

In closing may I say that if a $2 poll tax prevents the people in your district from voting, why do you not follow the New Deal example that we have had so long and give them $2 to vote? You might even expect them to vote right.

Mr. WINSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in favor of the amendment. I shall not discuss the constitutionality of this so-called anti-poll-tax bill today more than to quote article I, section 2, of the Constitution:

> And the electors in each State (for Members of Congress) shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature.

Article I, section 4:

> The time, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations except as to the place of choosing Senators.

The Congress can by law have to do with the time and the place and manner of the election; but the States retain control over the qualifications of the electors. This right of the States has been recognized for more than 150 years.

I think it is agreed by everyone here opposed to this bill that it is unconstitutional. Every other man, in my opinion, agrees that there is some question about its constitutionality.

Only one thing bothers me today, and that is the fact that you would bring a bill of this nature to the House at this time, a very controversial issue, and occupy the time of the House for its consideration. Furthermore, as has been so well said by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN], if this bill passes it will not be responsible for one single Negro voting in the State of Mississippi. If that is so, then I ask you, What in the name of God are you trying to do? You admit it will not permit them to vote. Then just what is your purpose?

Mr. Chairman, I have been here for 5 months now. I have waited patiently and I have listened to the older Members on both sides of this House give advice from time to time. I believe it is high time that some of us who came here for the first time advise the leadership of both parties that this is no time to play politics while our boys are dying on the battlefields.

If this will not permit the Negro to vote in the South, what will it do? I want to refer for a moment to the speech made by the gentlewoman from Ohio [Mrs. BOLTON] today. I attended a meeting of the Immigration and Naturalization Committee, of which I am a member. She came before that committee. She knows all about the desire of herself and others for flooding this country with immigrants from all sections of the world. I attended a session of my Committee on Indian Affairs this morning, and she was before that committee. She knows all about what should go on in the State of New Mexico. Today in the Well of this House she told you what would happen to the northern Negro sent down into the Southland of this country. She knows nothing about the South. May I tell you that no Negro from either the North or South who behaves himself will be arrested in Mississippi, and no Negro or white man has ever been punished in my State when he was behaving himself. I challenge any of you to dispute that statement.

All you do is stir up confusion. Does the Negro in the South want this bill brought before you? I say "No." You cannot submit the names of any people from my State, either colored or white, who have asked for this damnable legislation. I may say also to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] that he will find just as much suppression in his State, he will find just as much poverty in the case of both whites and colored up in his State as he will in mine. Clean up your own doorstep before you come down to Mississippi to tell the people of that State what to do. If you do not want a poll tax, do not have it, but, my God, let those States alone where there is no confusion or racial strife.

I have been working with the Negroes of Mississippi for the past 7 years and I say to you that you are insulting the intelligence of the southern Negro when you throw your political love arms around his neck with this bill. He knows you will choke him to death in the dark night should your interest ever demand.

The small minority in both races who misinterpret the meaning of this legislation, will impose hardships on the honest people of both races, and only confusion, hatred, and bloodshed will be the result.

We hold no ill will for the Negro, but we appreciate his problem and he in turn appreciates ours. We, members of both races, of the South, want to be left alone to solve our own problems in a manner that we know to be for the best interest of all concerned. At a time like this, why should self-styled intellectual geniuses who know nothing about the South try to force upon a people something that is unconstitutional and which would help to destroy all local self-government in violation of the Constitution upon which our great democracy was founded.

During the days of the reconstruction, after the Civil War, when officials were imported into the South who imposed every hardship upon the white people of the South, our grandfathers battled this problem without assistance but with every hindrance from the Federal Government. After many years, by exerting special effort to forget those horrible days, we of both races recognized our problems and started in a progressive manner to solve them. We of the South were the first to see the deplorable condition of the Negro. His problems became our problems. We met those problems with action rather than words. We rescued him from a bondage that was far more detrimental than the chains of slavery. We freed him from the hands of the imported white man who came to our Southland, not because he was interested in the welfare of the Negro race, but to exploit him for personal gain. For this deed alone, we of the South have received the everlasting gratitude of the colored race of the South. We learned to work out our problems confronting both races for the advancement of all.

Let me say to you with all the sincerity of my soul that he does not want this bill passed. He knows that future welfare of his people depends upon the understanding that exists between the two races in my section of the country. This bill will in no way whatsoever increase or enlarge his citizenship. It will only create misunderstanding, and where misunderstanding reigns, confusion and chaos exist. He knows that under this bill he has everything to lose and nothing to gain.

Today we see our Nation catering to minority groups as never before. It is right to treat all minorities fairly, but by reason of the necessities of war, with the attention of our leaders directed in the prosecution of the war effort, we find many minorities demanding more than fair treatment. This movement today has reached the place where minorities, highly organized, practically have control. The pendulum will continue to swing, however. If this group, agitating this measure, succeed in passing it, the minute this war is over, I feel sorry for minority groups when the reaction sets in. Many innocent people will suffer, many innocent races will feel the effects of the 100,000,000 white people of this Nation, whom you and I know built a great Nation and will continue to dominate it.

Today the Members of this Congress are criticizing every day the operations of government from Washington, the O. P. A., the W. P. A., and every other way in which our people are being maltreated by learned reformers attempting to run something they know nothing about. You say they should not run your district because they know nothing about it. I say to you here, in this measure you are attempting to do the same thing. Almost without exception the Members of the House from poll-tax States are opposed to this measure, yet you with no knowledge of the situation which we have, having made no first-hand study of it, set yourselves up just as have the expert social reformers in our Federal departments, to run our affairs from Washington. The day will come when you will regret it.

Two hundred and eighteen Members of the House signed the petition which brought this measure before us. That is more than half the membership, and I know that what I say here will not prevent the passage of this measure, but I do want to say to you, you know not what you do. You are stirring up more trouble on the Negro race, not alone in my State but in Detroit, Chicago, New York, and, yes, in Washington than has been known in this Nation since reconstruction days.

We have no objections to your assisting the Negro race. You may aid his education, you may improve his social and economic welfare, but we in the South expect to continue to enforce segregation. We will not have amalgamation of the white and black races in the South. As to what you want in the North, that is for you to decide. I feel that it is your privilege under the Constitution, and you may retain it by voting against this bill, leaving the control of the suffrage to the various States.

Today in this most critical period of world conflict and local confusion, when local self-government has been definitely challenged on every hand, we find ourselves face to face with some of the most dangerous, most unnecessary and inopportune legislation that has ever been brought before this body.

During this time, even at this particular moment, our boys are offering and giving their lives on practically every battle front, while our home front is being overrun with bureaucratic government. Selfish groups are studying ways and means of making this war a stepping stone for their own selfish accomplishments. Certain labor racketeers favor this bill and have, by their previous actions, hampered the war effort, and almost made it mandatory that this body take drastic steps which might be unjust to the honest laborer who has proven himself loyal by being opposed to strikes in wartimes. In my opinion, we should be putting the proper harness on such labor racketeers instead of discussing this bill when there is no time, place, or condition to justify the passage of it.

I wish to discuss with you another section of the country, where another 40,000 are walking out, on strike, where you labor boys are willing for men to pay more than $2 per month for dues to a labor union before they can work in the industrial factories of the country to produce materials so badly needed by our boys at the front, but you squeal and yell if someone is asked to pay $1.75 or $2 as a poll tax that goes into the common school fund.

Certain so-called social reform groups who are not interested in the welfare of true Americans are demanding the passage of this bill. These pressure groups from certain sections who are advocating no social discriminations have, in reality, without raising their voices, permitted their section to discriminate against the South for time immemorial in freight rates and Government expenditures of every kind.

Those who are willing to open the doors and flood this country with immigrants from all parts of the world and those who want to use their vast wealth in taking advantage of all underprivileged people who will play any game to further their own interest, regardless of principle or how it might affect the Government are also favoring the passage of this bill.

If you want to be fair, why do you not give a little more consideration to the farmers of the poor lands of the South; why do you not give a little more consideration to raising the standard of living for both the colored and the white; why do you not give some consideration to extending Federal aid to schools?

The poll tax in my State is a vital source of revenue. Do not be misled into believing that the money derived from this source of taxation goes into the election funds to disfranchise the Negro. It goes into the common school fund of the State for the education and advancement of all the people. It is uniform taxation and applies to all alike.

I only ask each of you to weigh the facts and circumstances surrounding this bill and ask yourselves who will be the beneficiary and what will it accomplish? After that careful consideration has been given, do your duty. What enjoyment in this world can be so great, and what consolation can be so sweet as the consciousness of duty performed? I ask you, with malice toward none, to defeat this so-called anti-poll-tax bill that the two racial elements of the South, armored with a great weapon of understanding, may march on to victory and the making of a better world.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, it was shocking to me, I am bound to confess, to hear the offensive insinuations against the white people of the South made by the gentlewoman from Ohio [Mrs. BOLTON] who evidently gets her information about the people of that session through being a trustee of a Negro school in Alabama. The conditions she described do not exist. Her ideas of race amalgamation, if I understood her correctly, were even more shocking than her slander of the South.

I was also shocked to read on yesterday, in one of the local papers, this statement:

> NEW YORK, May 23.—Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt advocated repeal of all poll taxes in an address tonight inaugurating New York's second annual city-wide Harlem (Negro) Week observance.

When I realize the damage these women are doing by thus waving the red flag in the face of the white people of the South, and stirring up race trouble throughout the country, when I realize the number of white women who have paid with their lives at the hands of Negro rapists here in Washington, and throughout the South, as a result of such agitation on the part of these trouble-makers, I am compelled to agree with Rudyard Kipling when he said, "The female of the species is more deadly than the male."

The gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] seems to be very much disturbed about the primary elections in the South. So far as he is concerned, the condition is entirely hopeless; for if every Member of Congress with a pencil and a map were to work from now until the next election, they could not mark out a congressional district south of the Potomac River in which the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] could be nominated to Congress on either ticket—poll tax or no poll tax.

He now tells us that this measure is directed at the primaries in the Southern States. We do not have to have primaries, in any State. We could go back to the convention system overnight, if necessary.

All they are doing here is stirring up race troubles throughout the country, and using the Negro as a smoke screen.

We noted the other day that Stalin had abolished the Comintern in Russia—a consummation devoutly to be wished.

But, we face the fact that the Frankfurter comintern is still operating in America. We might as well be frank about it. This is my country. I am a Member of Congress representing more than 250,000 people, for whom it is my duty to speak, and I tell you now that that program calls for the destruction of the States and the Government of the country by a bureaucracy, and this is one of the first steps.

If by your votes you invite them to come in and interfere with elections in the various States, you will also invite them to come in, and control or abolish elections altogether. Then you will have destroyed the Federal Government as an indivisible union of indestructible States. You will then have established a bureaucracy to be controlled by some one man in power, or some one behind the throne, one of those Rasputins of yesterday.

I am appealing to you, Democrats and Republicans alike, to vote for this amendment and to vote against this bill.

In New York they have an educational test. In order to vote one must be able to read and write English. Under those circumstances I wonder how the supporters of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] ever get to vote at all.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment should be adopted, and the bill should be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, in coming here to speak to you I want to ask you to listen to my statement, not that it is going to affect your vote. One of the tragic things that I find in coming here as a Representative from Mississippi is that you good men of this House, and ladies too, from other sections believe anything in God's world that is told you about conditions in the South. I say to you that if matters came up affecting your district, particularly where I know you and respect you, I would be glad to talk to you and learn something about those conditions. If things were as bad in your district as you think they are in mine, I could not respect you, and I know I could have no comradeship with you. You have heard my State slandered here today by Members who, as the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] said, represent districts where the people do not speak the English language, who describe conditions in the South, and who know nothing about our conditions, but I want to tell you something that I know of my own knowledge.

I served 8½ years as a district attorney in the South, in Mississippi. I tried to represent the State fairly and impartially. I believe I did that. On one occasion I appeared for the State of Mississippi in my district and prosecuted a white man who had killed a negro who had been indicted by a white grand jury on a charge of murder. This defendant's attorney came to me and asked to plead him guilty on condition that I recommend life imprisonment. I refused to do it. I went to trial on that case, and 12 white men from my district, 12 average farmers, if you please, tried that man and brought in a verdict fixing the maximum punishment. The verdict in this case was affirmed by the supreme court of my State. I say to you that happened, and that is the type of justice we have tried to mete out in our State. You may say that I was an exception, that the people of my section were not behind this action, because the only people in my State that vote in your opinion are the people that have plenty of money and can pay a $2 poll tax in order to vote. I say to you I was elected three times district attorney, and lost only 62 votes in my county when I was elected to this body after that occurred. That is the kind of justice we have and mete out there.

Let us see about the poll tax in Mississippi. The poll tax was not passed for the purpose of keeping anybody from voting. In 1890, when it was first adopted, you people do not realize the poverty you had left in Mississippi. We had nothing which we could tax. Much of the property had been destroyed or gone into the hands of the scalawags and carpetbaggers who had come down there and ravished our land, taking away our wealth. We had to pass a poll tax, and every other type of tax, in order to raise the revenue to run that government.

The poll tax is levied on everyone, whether or not he ever votes. The only requirement in regard to voting is this: In order to vote a man must have paid that poll tax by the 1st of February of the year in which he offers to vote. Why did we do that? To keep the Negro from voting? No; to keep some irresponsible, crooked politician from coming along just before the election and paying poll taxes in order to control votes. That is the reason for it.

You who have gone astray should come back and realize that we have not done and do not do what you have been led to believe.

When we were taken in as Members of this Congress we subscribed to an oath to support the Constitution of the United States. Each of you did that. How in the name of God can you shut your eyes to the Constitution and say, "I will leave it up to the Supreme Court"? I say to you that if you have studied the question and are in doubt, perhaps you have some reason to leave it to the Supreme Court, but if you shut your eyes and pay no attention to whether or not it is constitutional and then follow that course, you are liable to vote for some other law which will do just as much to your section as we think you are doing to the State governments in this Nation. There will be those among you, I know, who think that you may rise above the Constitution of the United States. There is just as much chance for the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] or the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] to rise above Hamilton and Jefferson, the framers of the Constitution, as there is for the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] to contribute more to our war effort than his colleague, Joseph Stalin.

From the propaganda which reaches my office from certain labor unions, and politicians in sections far removed from my State, most of whom have never been there, it appears to me that these folks are trying to use this so-called crusade against the seven Southern States not to improve the lot of the Negro in the South but to add to the Negro membership of their labor unions in the North and East, to appeal to the Negro vote in those sections, in other words to exploit him, to use him for their own purpose. They are not friends of the Negro of the South, nor really of the Nation. I know that those very persons come from sections where by the use of zoning ordinances, and limitations on building permits, they discriminate more against the Negro than has been thought of in the South. They do not like the Negro; they do not live with them, they do not permit the Negro to live in the white residential districts. Most of them are for Negroes in the abstract, but do not want anything to do with them personally, and privately will tell you so.

If it were truly the purpose of those behind this bill to benefit the Negro of the South, I can assure you that the approach here cannot and will not have that effect. There are some things which cannot be done by any law. The heart and mind of a people cannot be changed by law nor by force. Hitler is trying this in Europe today and we know it will not work. The Negro leaders sponsoring this measure are not interested in political equality; what they want is social equality or rather social intermingling—and you know it. Today the Negro of the South can place his social life on the highest plane he may desire. We, of the white race, merely believe in and demand that he may go his way and that we may go ours. We will have no part of social intermingling in the South.

I tell you this shall not take place in the South. After the Civil War you turned loose in our midst hundreds of thousands of ex-slaves, wholly untrained in citizenship; then without perhaps intending to you sent sufficient carpetbaggers and sorry white men to make use of their votes and to exploit them and our country. Only in recent years has all this feeling engendered in our people completely died down.

We do not have now the racial strife which exists in Washington, Baltimore, Detroit, or Chicago. To be sure, we prevent the Negro from forcing himself into the white man's home, his place of worship and public places and accommodations which are limited to white trade. At the same time we provide separate accommodations for the Negro. What you do not see is that we protect the Negro from being disturbed by the white people of our section in his places of worship, in his home, and in public places which are exclusively for Negroes.

In Mound Bayou, Miss., an exclusively Negro town, we have a splendid example of how the Negro can get along if left to himself and that is what is desired by the southern Negro. His social standards and life there compare favorably with that of any other race. The Negro has his own schools, officers, and social life, unmolested by white social reformers. The people of the town are happy, the section prosperous. The Negro of the South has come far since the War between the States.

We have taxed ourselves greatly and now spend a much larger percentage of our State's income on education of the Negroes than any State from which come you fellows who intend to reform the South. There are two Negro colleges in my own district and many others in the State. We are spending more on the protection of the Negro's health and to improve his living conditions in proportion to our ability than any other section of the Nation. The Negro of the South is in better shape financially and economically than ever before.

To be candid, at this time we do not want the Negro to control our politics and our government any more than the people of Detroit would want the Negro section of the city to select the officers of the entire city. We had a taste of that through the dark years following the Civil War. We know the scum, both white and black, that were selected and ruled our country. It has taken many years for us to recover from that blight and to overcome the antagonisms which were developed.

We will not have social intermingling. The white people of the South want separate accommodations and separate social life. The Negro of the South wants his separate accommodations and social life. We believe he should have them free from the meddling of white exploiters. Frankly, we expect to see that the two races remain segregated for the good of both. To force us to do otherwise would lead to civil strife the like of which has never before been seen.

If the agitators of this question continue their present tactics you shall have all the Negroes in the North. Then the Harlem district of New York will furnish the officers for that city. The Negro city of Detroit will control Michigan politics, and the Negroes of Chicago will furnish the officers for the State of Illinois. Then, when it is too late, you will learn what we learned during the terrible days of reconstruction.

If you are opposed to discrimination, why is it you have not voted to abolish the discriminatory freight rates which have been a hold-back to the South since the beginning of our Nation's transportation began? If you want to help the Negro of the South, why have you opposed aid to education in the South? Why have you excluded the Negro from living in white residential sections of your cities? Why is it that you do not have him in your homes and working for you in your offices? You may help him in any way you like, but you shall not cause our great Nation to be referred to as that great mongrel nation of the Western Hemisphere except over the opposition of the entire Southland, both white and black.

I shall not go at length into the constitutional question involved for I learned last year that such discourse is wasted breath. Those of us who are opposed to this measure know it is unconstitutional. Those who support it are not interested, apparently, in whether it is constitutional or not, believing that they have a Supreme Court which will find it so. When this bill was before us last session, full, and to me, unanswerable briefs were filed showing this act to be unconstitutional. These briefs appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of September and November 1942. I shall not repeat them here, but earnestly request those conscientious Members of this House who signed the discharge petition bringing this measure designed to disunite the people of the South from the Nation and to reach out the tentacles of an ever-growing Central Government so as to take away the last vestige of State government, to read those briefs.

Suffice it to say here, that prior to the adoption of the Federal Constitution, the country was composed of free and equal sovereign States loosely bound together by a confederation. When the Constitutional Convention was held, these sovereign States surrendered to the National Government as the Central Government certain rights and powers deemed by them necessary for the operation of the Federal Government, all of which are enumerated. All other powers were reserved to the States. Thus we have a Federal Government, intended by the States to have limited powers and considered a Government of limited powers for 150 years. And, in regard to the franchise, held to be limited by the Congress no later than 1920, for then, when women were first permitted to vote, such change was brought about by amendment to the Federal Constitution, ratified by the States, and not as here suggested by act of Congress. In other words, the statesmen of that period did not for one moment believe that the Federal Government could remove the restrictive qualifications fixed by the States which prohibited women from voting, except by constitutional amendment as authorized under the Federal Constitution.

The provisions of the Federal Constitution, article I, section h, are as follows:

> The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second year by the people of the several States; and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature.

Certainly, there is nothing in that provision which provides for its change by action of the Congress. That provision fixes the requirement for electors voting for Members of the House of Representatives. The writers of the Federal Constitution knew and accepted the fact that the various States fixed the qualifications for electors voting for the most numerous branch of their State legislature and the Federal Constitution by adopting such requirements as may be fixed by each State as the requirements for electors voting in national elections, can be changed only by amendment of the Federal Constitution.

This matter has been passed on many times by the Supreme Court of the United States and in each instance the Court has in no way stated that article I, section 2, can be changed except by amendment to the Constitution.

Voting has always been a privilege rather than a right. The right to vote comes from the grant of the privilege. We find this clearly stated in the case of Breedlove v. Suttles (302 U. S. 277), as follows:

> To make payment of poll taxes a prerequisite for voting is not to deny any privilege or immunity protected by the fourteenth amendment. Privilege of voting is not derived from the United States, but is conferred by the State, and save as restrained by the fifteenth and nineteenth amendments and other provisions of the Federal Constitution, the State may condition suffrage as it deems appropriate.

I call your attention further to the fact that when article I, section 2, was incorporated in the Federal Constitution, all States restricted the privilege of voting. That provision of the Federal Constitution was adopted with full knowledge that such restrictions were being exercised by the States, most of which had property qualifications, poll tax, and various educational requirements which must be met before the privilege of voting could be granted.

By amendments Nos. 14, 15, and 19, to the Federal Constitution, it was declared that State qualifications prerequisite for voting based on race, color, previous condition of servitude, and sex must no longer deny or abridge the right of citizens to vote. There, also, we find that it was recognized that the proper approach was by constitutional amendment.

So in the present case, if the proponents of this measure want to get rid of the poll tax in the seven Southern States, the proper course is to have the Constitution amended so as to provide that payment of a poll tax shall not deny or abridge the right of a citizen to vote.

Today, with our boys fighting on the battle fronts of the world, with a greater percentage of those boys coming from the South than from any other section, at a time when above any other we need the united efforts of all our citizens, this bill is brought out to stir up the people of my section. Many of the group, particularly of the Democrats, who signed the discharge petition which brought this matter up, are the very ones who represent districts dominated by labor unions, and this fact, together with the propaganda with which they flood our offices, leads one to the belief that the bill to some extent is aimed at the independent Members of Congress from the South who have consistently stood for the outlawing of strikes in war industries in time of war. I am advised that some Members signed this discharge petition to get even with Members from the South who voted for the Hobbs bill prohibiting highway robbery in the name of labor unions. It is all wrong to require the payment of $2 for the privilege of voting, but all right with such Members of the House to require the payment of $50 to a labor union for the privilege of working.

The right-thinking Members would do well to spend their time in correcting the ills with which certain labor union leaders have beset our war effort and leave alone matters of the kind involved in this bill, at least until we have won this terrible war in which our Nation is engaged.

The Representative from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON], chairman of the Labor Committee in the House, last year inserted a table in the RECORD supposedly showing that we had very little vote in Mississippi because of the poll tax. The figures she cited are those of the general election in November. Why, in the general elections we have no contest. Our election is the Democratic primary. The only time we have Republican opposition to the Democratic nominee is when the few Republicans in the State believe that party may get into power and they want to control the patronage. We actually have not enough Republicans to furnish postmasters when that party is in power.

The gentlewoman from New Jersey, Representative NORTON, in her statement, cited the fact that in her own district, which incidentally is that of "Boss" Hague, that out of a total population of 271,807 there were cast 131,654 votes. I shall not repeat here the newspaper stories which have appeared about the elections in that district. From all accounts, we still have a more uncontrolled free use of the ballot in my district in a poll-tax State than they have in Jersey City. I have heard the gentlewoman from New Jersey say on this floor that she was not worried about elections; that she had been told she could stay here as long as she liked. That could never happen in my State. Those of us from the South are not designated for office. We run for office because we want to. If we are elected it is because we get a majority of uncontrolled, individual votes from the people of the district. One certain way for defeat would be to try to have anyone or any organization dictate the choice of a Representative in Congress. I do not profess to know of my own knowledge, but most of the charges of rotten politics about which I read in the newspapers is to be found where there is a large Negro, or foreign population of the kind which would not have enough interest in their Government to pay a $2 poll tax for the privilege of voting. As to Jersey City, I do not know, but doubtless the facts are known to the Republicans here who are helping the Democrats from such sections to reform the politics of the South.

I say to you more is involved in this bill than the racial question. The very bedrock upon which our Nation was founded is involved. If the Federal Government can control the qualifications of electors and thus control elections, the State and the last vestige of State government is gone.

I say to you it is a serious matter to us. It is a serious matter to you, whether you realize it or not. You have seen the Federal Government, through pressure, gradually usurp practically every function of State government. By grants of money on condition, through the use of judicial construction, through the O. P. A., the W. P. A., and in every other conceivable way, your States are losing control to a Federal Government with its board of economists, theoretical experts, long-haired dreamers and college professors who have infested its departments and who cling on like leeches. I hate to believe that they and their actions are approved. I hate to believe you members of this House are willing to tie another stone around the neck of State government, already having a struggle to exist. Do you not know that if by act of Congress you can remove the poll tax as a prerequisite for voting, that by the same token the Congress can pass restrictive provisions and some group interested in continued control of the Nation will do just that.

The governing body of the county in my State is the board of supervisors, some members of which have held to the belief that they can run the affairs of the county better than the citizenship. Some years ago I served in the State legislature of my State. I found there members who believed that they could run the counties better than any board of supervisors and the affairs of municipalities better than its officers, because they felt they knew more about it and the local officers could not be trusted. Since coming here to Congress I find that it is the idea and belief of many Members of Congress and of all appointed officials of the Federal Government that they know it all, that the State government cannot be trusted and that control had better be vested in the Federal Government, where the Federal departments can run the affairs of our people.

Frankly, I find that people differ very little. Each thinks his crowd can do better than any other. My State legislative body showed me little that would lead me to believe that they would in any way be an improvement over the local officers in running the affairs of our cities and counties, but frankly convinced me to the opposite. So it is here with all due deference to this House of Representatives and the various departments of the Federal Government. You have not shown me anything to indicate that the country will be better off run from Washington. Rather have I been further convinced that local government is the best. I am sold to the belief that local self-government, the people at home, without dictation from on high, will save the country, if given the opportunity. Not only in this instance of meddling with State control of elections are you interfering, but you are permitting it to be done every day. I hope the strong Members of this House, real Americans who believe in the original American form of government, who believe in the days when the Constitution meant something—and there are many—will wake up and force the return of the Government to the people. You can take a forward step along that line by voting against this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HAYS].

Mr. HAYS. Mr. Chairman, I am among those southerners who have opposed the poll tax in their own States. I realize that many of my southern friends do not agree with my attitude. In 1938, I was identified with the campaign in Arkansas to repeal the poll tax. We secured a pretty good vote, but 85,000 people, a majority of the voters, decided that we were wrong, that there are certain merits about the poll tax that they want to retain.

I am convinced by this time that both the merits and the demerits of the poll tax have been overemphasized, yet I have not abandoned the stand that I took at that time. I believe in wide participation in the franchise. I believe the poll tax is a device by which that is discouraged. If this bill were the right kind of bill—that is, covering the whole problem of the franchise in a proper way—I would be tempted to join you, because I have been engaged in too many fights to end corruption in politics, yet I am thinking about the rights and the interests and the attitudes of the 85,000 people who differ with me in my own State. I am thinking about the fears that are created now on their part and are being created by us because we are indifferent to a constitutional provision.

I am not surprised that the debate over the Constitution has loomed large, for it is important, but I am amazed at the indifference to the Constitution of some with whom I have stood in the larger battle for participation in elections. If this were in reverse, they would now be invoking the Constitution as a defense. If instead of providing an extension of the franchise the bill were to limit it, they would be talking about the Constitution in an entirely different way, I am sure of that.

Now, I know the stock answer. The answer is that this deals with basic human rights, so we must have a broad interpretation. I believe in a liberal interpretation, too, but I do not believe in a complete disregard of the Constitution, and certainly at this time when our people are fearful that there is something going on in Washington that endangers fundamental democracy.

So the real issue, it seems to me, is not the merits or the demerits of the poll tax but whether or not we are to be consistent on this fundamental principle.

There is another question. If I am wrong about its being a local and a State problem, certainly I agree with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WINSTEAD] in his statement that this is not the time to bring this matter before the Congress. The people of the South are doing everything this Nation asks them to do, even surrendering the lives of their loved ones. They are fearful of the things that are taking place here. We have made progress in this difficult and complicated problem of the franchise, and you are going to make it much more difficult for us who consider ourselves liberals in the South as we struggle to free the poor people of the South and admit them to the economic life of the region and to a participation in its political processes. Do not do this cruel thing to the South. I know you are not doing it intentionally, but I tell you it is a cruel thing. You are not only doing that but you are doing violence to a fundamental principle in democracy. The upsurge of democratic sentiment all over the globe will receive a set-back if we destroy faith in constitutional government.

I believe the ministers of this Nation who sent the message to you would not have done it if they had known the attitude of the people of my section. If you have done violence to their feelings, it is not a moral, no, it is an immoral thing you do, when you say that the States within constitutional limits may not settle their own problems. So because of those things, I take my stand with those who oppose this bill, believing that progress can better be made in the other direction.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. BALDWIN of New York. Mr. Chairman, I shall be very brief. It is my personal opinion that if this amendment is adopted, it means the destruction of the purpose of the bill, because it has borne out that the family party to which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] referred is nothing but a family party, and that the primaries are the real elections. I can quote from some of the States, and it is interesting to see that in the gentleman's own State—and I pay tribute to the gentleman from Alabama because in his own district he did have some opposition—but out of 9 districts, only 4 had any opposition, and that was of a negligible sort. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN] says he represents 250,000 people, but he was elected by the large vote of 7,000 votes. I wish I could get elected in that way in my district.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BALDWIN of New York. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Is not that an indication that they are completely and thoroughly satisfied with the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. BALDWIN of New York. Seven thousand votes out of 250,000 people? I would be rather doubtful about it.

Mr. BARDEN. Is the gentleman complaining about the quality of the representation in that section?

Mr. BALDWIN of New York. Certainly not, Mr. Chairman. I think I paid my tribute to that this morning.

Mr. CRAVENS. Are the figures the gentleman gives general election figures or are they the primary election figures?

Mr. BALDWIN of New York. I was reading the general election figures.

Mr. CRAVENS. Oh, that does not show.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BALDWIN of New York. Yes.

Mr. FULMER. Referring to those figures, in respect to the primary and the general election, we have a poll tax in South Carolina. You do not have to have a poll-tax receipt to vote in the primary election, and that principle in my State applies much the same to all of the other States. How can the gentleman account for this? I would get 75,000 votes in the primary, and get 5,000 in the November election.

Mr. BALDWIN of New York. I cannot account for that. I am not sufficiently informed upon the elections in those States.

In conclusion, I hope this amendment will be defeated, and if the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN] will vote with me, I shall change the way in which I wear my hair.

Mr. McGEHEE. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that anything I can say will change a vote this afternoon, and I want to be as charitable as I can in anything that I may say or any thoughts that I may have relative to the reason why this bill is before the House this afternoon. As far as the poll tax is concerned, and its payment as a prerequisite to vote, I do not think any one of us cares so much for that, yet I am against the repeal of it in my own State. That little sum that we get from the poll tax goes to the educational fund, and many thousands of our people contribute nothing to it or taxes in any other form, yet their children have access to and are educated in our schools the same as those who pay; but I want to go deeper than that. The fundamental question before us is that this bill invades the rights of States under the Constitution of the United States.

I refer to the powers delegated to the States. I know that this phase of the bill has been tripped lightly over this afternoon. I know that sentimental speeches have been made, especially by the gentlewoman from Ohio [Mrs. BOLTON], which is characteristic of all good women. They appeal to sentiment and not to reason. Statements were made with reference to the condition of the Negro, not only in Mississippi but throughout the South, as though this bill will only affect the Negro and its passage bestow on them greater political power and intimation of social privilege. I say this to the membership, no matter from what section they come, there is no deeper feeling for the Negro in the hearts of any people than in the hearts of the people of the South. It is they who have carried on and preserved the democratic principles of this country since the foundation of the Nation. Ah, I remember when you gentlemen on the Republican side were in power and there was hardly enough to make a ripple on the Democratic side, and they were always from that section which I represent, carrying on our democratic principles.

But I say to you now, as I said in the beginning, I do not want to become harsh in my statements, but it appears to me the majority on both sides of this House today are departing from those principles, departing from the mandates of our Constitution, upon which this great Government was founded, and are going ahead with the view that it will penalize those of us who live south of the Potomac River. I do not know your motives, but I am hoping that you are sincere, and that they are coming from the depths of your hearts, but I fear that that hope is in vain. What does our Constitution say? Section 2 of article I is the following:

> The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second year by the people of the several States, and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature.

Mr. Chairman, I know that this bill is unconstitutional, but may I further remark, I know that if you pass it and it goes to the Supreme Court as it is now constituted it will be declared constitutional, for they have roped it at every opportunity for the past 4 or 5 years.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. PRICE] is recognized.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, we have heard a great deal about the Negro being deprived of his right to vote or being disfranchised. I happen to be from a State where we have no poll tax and I would like to give you the facts as far as we are concerned.

The payment of poll tax as a prerequisite for voting was abolished in the 1937 legislature in Florida; and in my home county of Duval, where we have the largest Negro population in the State, we naturally expected a large increase in Negro voters in our first election when no poll tax was required. However, in 1938 there were only a few more Negroes who registered and no noticeable increase in voting. In our county, at that time, it was necessary to register every 2 years in order to vote, even though no payment of poll tax was required. Then in 1940, this being the Presidential election year, we expected to have a large increase in Negro registration and voting. However, only about 5,000 registered in comparison with 6,000 in 1936, the previous Presidential election. Then, out of the 5,000 registered in 1940, less than 500 actually voted. And this registration was due to a campaign waged for several months by a white Republican who enlisted the help of all the Negro churches and their ministers. They told the Negroes that they would lose their jobs on the W. P. A. and all sorts of things if they did not register and vote. In spite of this vigorous campaign, not 10 percent of the Negroes eligible to register did so, and then not 10 percent of those registered really voted, and those who did vote were almost forced to do so.

My purpose in this statement is to show that the Negroes of the South are not clamoring for the abolishment of the poll tax, neither will they vote if the poll-tax requirement is removed. Therefore, I see no reason for the Federal Government interfering with the States in this matter in any way.

There is another very practical reason why the payment of poll tax should not be abolished by the Federal Government and that is that the States can, naturally, require the payment of poll taxes for voting for all State and other local offices. If this is done in order to hold an election where Federal offices are concerned, it will be necessary to have two lists of voters at each polling place and two sets of ballots. We hear a great deal about our Government being run by bureaucrats with no practical experience and the confusion caused by such. Now, we as the Congress, are about to be liable for the greatest confusion ever thrust upon the people.

The Negroes in the South do not want to vote. If they do, they can pay a poll tax and do so. In fact, the Negroes of the South do not want to do many things, that you hear so much up here about them being deprived of down South. They do not want to live with the whites, they do not want to eat with the whites, they do not want to go to the same hotels, shows, and other places with the whites. In fact, the situation down South is much more to their liking than the condition you find here or elsewhere in the North.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MAGNUSON) there were—ayes 75, noes 131.

Mr. CRAVENS. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOFFMAN: On page 1, line 3, after the word "paid", add a comma and the words "or that any educational qualification be required."

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, now, if the House really wants to do something for the poor white of the South as well as for the poverty-stricken Negro, why not write into this bill the requirement that no educational qualification shall be required to vote? Why not be fair about it? Why not give the Negroes and the poor whites of the South the unqualified opportunity to vote? As was said by me a few moments ago, we know very well that, if we strike out this qualification of a poll tax, the legislatures of those States which so desire may and will put in an educational qualification. Are we sincere about this? Do we really want to make it possible for the poor—those who cannot afford to spend $2 or $3 for the privilege of taking part in the election of candidates to Federal office, who are too poor to get an education—do we want them to vote? If we do, here is our opportunity.

Some of us—and I will not name anyone—as a matter of fact, hundreds of thousands of former supporters of the President—businessmen who have been put out of business, small manufacturers who cannot compete successfully with the monopolistic practices of the bureaucrats, farmers who now find themselves unable to cultivate the soil, workers who are disgusted and their sense of justice outraged by the President's lack of labor policy, by his extension of special privileges through administrative agencies to John L. Lewis and his cohorts, consider the New Deal to be the greatest danger to our way of life, to our constitutional form of government.

Republicans in this House, ever since the last election, have been appealing, we have been coaxing, we have been begging, members of the majority who see the danger in the New Deal, who believe in constitutional processes, to come along with us and vote with us on some of the constructive measures, which we have advocated, and we have had them with us. With their help we have won on several occasions. Yes, on many occasions we have won with their help, many an appropriation bill has been reduced, many an unnecessary item cut out entirely.

But we did not win alone. We had to have help from the majority side. Sometimes they helped by voting with us, sometimes, when the pressure from the administration was too great, they helped by being absent from the Chamber when the vote was taken. It cannot be denied that they have helped. We know and the country knows that the Republicans are not strong enough in this Congress to win anything except as we receive aid from Democrats—not new dealers—who feel and think and believe on fundamental questions as do the more conservative on the Republican side.

Now, the first time in the history of this Congress, when an issue which is vital to them arises, which means political life or death to them, which means continuing their way of life, the American way of life under the government as established by the forefathers, we come along as Republicans, try to make this a political party issue—join hands with the new dealers and kick our Democratic friends, those who have voted with us in spite of administration pressure, on the shins. What do we get by that procedure? Where shall we go when once again the vote is close and we need their help? The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN] was not the only one who listened with a great deal of emotion to the Member from Ohio [Mrs. BOLTON].

The Member from Ohio [Mrs. BOLTON] spoke as she always does, with sincerity, with a great deal of emotion. Her words and her phrases were extremely pungent. While they carried a sting, coming from her heart as they did, they were appealing. Almost, but not quite, they brought tears to my eyes; and, as she pictured the plight of the poor whites and the unfortunate Negroes in the South, who were prevented from voting by the iniquitous poll tax of $2 or $3 per year which is required in seven or eight of the States in the South, my heart went out to her and to the subjects of her solicitude.

I agree with the Member from Ohio [Mrs. BOLTON] that no individual—black, yellow, or white—should be unjustly prohibited from participating in the activities of the government under which he lives.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER], the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] followed the same line of thought and made arguments somewhat similar to those made by the Member from Ohio [Mrs. BOLTON].

Often have I listened with respect and admiration to the informative and instructive discourses made on the floor by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] and by the Member from Ohio [Mrs. BOLTON]. Many, many times have I profited by their observations. Often has each of them held forth eloquently, very eloquently, upon the necessity of Congress scrupulously giving heed to the provisions of our Constitution.

Often today have the applicable provisions of that document been read. Because my judgment forces me to part company with my Ohio colleagues on this bill—and as a reason—although not offered as an excuse—for what might be termed my stubbornness, and as it can do no harm, let me again quote the pertinent words in section 2 of article I.

The electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature.

Then there are two amendments which bear upon the question. One is the ninth, which provides that—

The enumeration in the Constitution, of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.

That is an admolition to the Congress that just because certain rights were enumerated as being retained by the people, we were not to assume that all other power not specifically reserved to the people was vested in the Federal Government.

The other amendment is the tenth, which reads:

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

While the Constitution and the amendments may have been written by lawyers, both were written for the benefit of the layman—the average man, the so-called common man—and presumably the lawyers meant what they said; intended what the average, ordinary man would gather from the words which they used.

If that rule of construction be applied, how then can it be said that the Congress of the United States has authority to determine the qualifications of the electors who choose either members of the most numerous branch of the State legislature or who choose officials of the Federal Government?

It is not my purpose to enter into any profound discussion as to the constitutionality of this bill. Let that question, if the bill become law, be determined by the constitutional authority created for that purpose—the Supreme Court of the United States. Being a New Deal Court, that question may—and it probably will—as was said today by one Member of this body from the Well of the House—be decided in the affirmative, that is, that the legislation is constitutional. On that question, no opinion is expressed by me.

Permit me to return to the line of argument made by the two Members from Ohio [Mrs. BOLTON and Mr. BENDER]. Addressing the House, the former stated that she was speaking from the American viewpoint. Those are her words "the American viewpoint." It was my understanding that she also said that she was not afraid and that we should not be afraid to vote for this bill.

Let me repeat. Neither the sincerity, the good judgment nor the freedom from political motives of either of the Members from Ohio is in any way questioned. If asked, it would be my opinion that each and every Member here today, in considering and voting upon this legislation, will act from the American viewpoint; that each and every Member will vote without fear of political consequences or hope of political reward.

Neither the Member from Ohio [Mrs. BOLTON] nor any other Member of this or any other body has any monopoly of either patriotism, loyalty, or the American viewpoint. She has two sons with the armed forces, but she is not the only Member of this body who has sons, brothers, or other relatives with the armed forces. Before me I see my colleague, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BLACKNEY], whose son at the moment is serving in Australia and whose last letter was dated back in April.

If the conclusion reached by the Member from Ohio [Mrs. BOLTON] that it is iniquitous to require the payment of a poll tax as a prerequisite to the exercise of the privilege to vote for the election of Federal officials is correct, what can be said of the practice of requiring the payment by a common laborer of $25 for the right to work in a factory engaged in war production?

It may be that everyone should be given the right to vote. Perhaps some who are barred by the poll tax would like to vote. But certain it is that everyone not only likes to eat, but that everyone, if he would live, must eat.

To the poverty-stricken Negro of the South, to the poor white man of the South—yes, or to the poor of any other locality—which is the more important? That he have the right to vote every 2 years for a Congressman, or every 4 years for a President, or that he from day to day have the right to work to earn the money to feed himself and his family?

Yes, the hearts of those who advocate the abolition of the poll tax bleed for the unfortunate who is not permitted to vote because he does not value that privilege enough to pay $2 or $3 or $4 per year in order that he may exercise it. But some of those hearts are as cold as stone when legislation is before this body which would open the door of opportunity, the door to a job, sought by an American citizen, but who is denied that job because this Government of ours has backed the unions in their practice of compelling the nonunion man to join and pay, not $2 a year but $1 or $1.50 each and every month of the 12 and sometimes as much as $100 or more for membership in that organization.

When $132,000,000 in dues alone are collected by unions from American workers each year for the privilege of earning the money to buy the food necessary to keep life in the body, I find difficulty in joining with those who weep so copiously over the collection for educational purposes of $2 per year by some of the Southern States from those who wish to vote.

In all charity, with all humility, permit me to call attention to the fact that there is a strike at Akron, Ohio; that that strike is in a plant of the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. which is engaged in making gas masks, barrage balloons, life belts, airplane de-icers, tank treads, anti-aircraft-gun and machine-gun clips; that thousands of the employees of that company want to work, but that pickets—not employees of the Goodyear Co., but employees of the Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. and of the B. F. Goodrich Co.—are marching shoulder to shoulder at the gates of the Goodyear Co. and so, by threats and by violence, preventing the employees of Goodyear from performing their tasks. Free-for-all fights between the pickets and the workers attempting to return to their jobs occurred day before yesterday.

Would it be improper for me to suggest to my Ohio friends that they shed a few tears, say a few words, and do a few things to open the gates of the Goodyear Co.'s plant; to remove from those gates the pickets who have come in from the other plants; that something be done to induce the some 40,000 strikers in those three plants to return to their jobs?

While my friends are shedding tears; while their hearts are bleeding for the poor in the southern poll-tax States, I have been thinking of our soldiers on the fighting fronts, who need the anti-aircraft-gun and machine-gun clips, the life belts, the tank treads, the airplane de-icers, which might be manufactured in the Goodyear plant.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] insists that a poll tax should not be prerequisite to the exercise of the franchise. Perhaps he is correct. Entertaining that view, it is difficult for me to reconcile his action approving the practice of the teamsters union of extorting from every nonunion truck driver, seeking to take a load of food to the gentleman's constituents in the city of New York, the sum of $8.41 if the truck be a small one, $9.42 if it be a large one.

How his constituents would rejoice, if they learned that a truck farmer from one of the poll-tax States, seeking to take a load of potatoes into New York was stopped at the city limits, and because the union insisted that he come across with $8 or $9, turned back and delivered the potatoes here in Washington.

What rejoicing there would be on the "East Side, the West Side, all around the town," when the gentleman's constituents knew that he supported the union in its practice of extortion.

When we sought to end the teamsters union practice of requiring everyone who drove a truck to pay an initiation fee and monthly dues; when we tried, in brief, to stop extortion, my two good friends and colleagues from Ohio could not see the injustice of requiring the farmer to pay $8 or $9 for the privilege of entering a city. But today they are greatly concerned over the poll-tax requirement of the payment of $2, even though the money goes not into the pocket of a racketeer but into an educational fund.

If my remarks seem unduly critical, let me apologize and state that I mean no harm, no criticism of any Member or of the manner in which any Member casts a vote. Far be it from me to question the right of any Member of this body to vote as he pleases. That I never have done; that I will not do.

But I do reserve the right, when an argument is on and when it is intimated that fear may govern my action or that a lack of understanding guides my determination, to call attention to the inconsistencies of those with whom for the moment I disagree.

It is impossible for me to go along today. Tomorrow many of us who are now opponents may be voting together. We cannot all think alike at all times, and legislation, as well as politics, makes strange bedfellows.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. It shall be unlawful for any State, municipality, or other government or governmental subdivision to prevent any person from voting or registering to vote in any primary or other election for President, Vice President, electors for President or Vice President, or for Senator or Member of the House of Representatives, on the ground that such person has not paid a poll tax, and any such requirement shall be invalid and void insofar as it purports to disqualify any person otherwise qualified to vote in such primary or other election. No State, municipality, or other government or governmental subdivision shall levy a poll tax or any other tax on the right or privilege of voting in such primary or other election, and any such tax shall be invalid and void insofar as it purports to disqualify any person otherwise qualified from voting at such primary or other election.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word and ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama to proceed for 5 additional minutes?

Mr. O'KONSKI. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, one finds it difficult to speak with dignified and restrained language when one perceives the unusual situation which obtains here in the House on this bill. Article I, section 2, of the Constitution of the United States reads as follows:

> The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second year by the people of the several States, and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature.

The seventeenth amendment to the Constitution, providing for the election of the Senate by the people, adopted the following provision with reference to the qualifications of electors:

> The electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislatures.

What could be more concise and explicit than the language in the original Constitution as to the qualifications of electors of National or Federal officers, and the language dealing with the election of Senators by the people as set forth in the seventeenth amendment which became effective in 1913 or more than a century after the adoption of the Constitution? This language has never been questioned until the past decade, when the Communist Party, the C. I. O., and numerous left-wing organizations have contended the Congress had the right to set aside these plain constitutional provisions by the passage of a statute nullifying them.

Mr. Chairman, I ask the Members to read those two integral portions of our Constitution prescribing the qualifications of electors for Federal offices, and to read and recall the oath of office they took here in January last to uphold and to defend that Constitution.

The question involved here is whether or not the Congress of the United States can by statute set aside an express constitutional provision with reference to the qualifications of voters in the elections of Federal officials. If the Congress of the United States can set aside or negative an express constitutional provision with reference to the qualifications of voters in the Federal elections then the Congress can by statute set aside all qualifications of voters in the respective States. If the Congress can set aside these constitutional provisions fixing the qualifications of voters, then it would follow naturally that the Congress could fix whatever qualifications it desired for the voters and Congress could impose a poll tax or could fix any qualification it desired without any safeguards or limit on its powers for voters in the Federal election.

Mr. Chairman, voting is a privilege. Universal suffrage does not mean democracy. There is universal suffrage in Germany, but not even the gentleman from New York, the erudite young Member [Mr. MARCANTONIO], would say there is democracy in Germany today. Suffrage is universal in Russia, yet I do not think there is more than one Member in this House, if there is one, who would say that democracy prevails in Russia. I believe there is no one here who would say that although they have universal suffrage in Italy there is democracy in Italy. The fact, therefore, that a people do exercise universal suffrage in a country does not necessarily mean that that country subscribes to democracy as you and I know it. Voting is a privilege and it should be exercised only by men, regardless of race, creed, or color, who have the God-given intelligence to form an intelligent opinion on public issues, on public characters, and on a sound public program. A man or woman who does not have that God-geven intelligence is a tool in the hands of the political racketeer rather than an advantage to the cause of democratic government.

You say you do not object to the representation the South has in this House. That is not what your sponsors say. In the printed word and in the spoken word the Communist Party, which is the only political party in America to adopt the abolition of the poll tax as a plank in its national political platform, calls upon you for the passage of this bill so that there may be a political purge of the Members of the Congress from the South.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. I cannot yield.

John L. Lewis, Philip Murray, and others of that ilk and character have stated they wanted the poll tax abolished so that they could rid the country of representation like the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX], the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH], the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], and many others. Those of you who say you do not object to the type of representation we have in the South are going hand in hand with these forces in an effort to dictate to the people of that section of the country who shall represent them in the Congress of the United States. Yet Mr. Lewis, Mr. Murray, and many of the congressional proponents of this bill would deny the right to work to the American people who do not pay a heavy work tax or fee to a labor racketeer or organizer—they dictate who shall work and dictate the amount to be paid to them and to a private organization for the exercise of the God-given right of an American citizen to earn his bread by the sweat of his brow.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, many very appropriate statements have been made here today but I am impressed that outstanding among them and most deserving of emphasis were the two indulged in by the distinguished gentleman from Kansas [Mr. WINTER]: One, when he said practically every lawyer who would confide in you would express the opinion that this measure is unconstitutional, and the other when he said that very few votes would be cast for it except for political expediency. I wish to thoroughly agree with and emphasize those statements.

Sixty-nine of us represent these 7 poll-tax States. I exclude Tennessee, because they are abolishing the poll tax of their own accord, which is the right way. No one of these 69, of course, signed the petition to bring this measure to the floor; only one of them voted to bring it to the floor yesterday. In discussing it here today and yesterday, no one of us has labored under the delusion that anything we might say, any argument we might make would cause you, ladies and gentlemen, to indulge toward us and the people we represent a gracious, a fair, a reasonable, a sportsmanlike attitude. No; that is not our idea. We know you will not do so just as we did last year. When the alleged soldiers' vote bill was under consideration then, I made the statement that its primary purpose was not really a desire that the soldier on the battlefield be permitted to vote, which I think I unequivocally proved, but that it had become the entering wedge of those determined to prevent the people of 7 Southern States from managing their own internal affairs, particularly their elections. I am very confident that, had this matter not come up in the other body during a period of quasi rest when many Members were not in Washington, it would not have passed there without the elimination of the poll-tax phase of it. As it was, it passed and this anti-poll-tax thrust at the South soon followed. As you know, it also passed the House, but the rules of the other body again protected the Southland as has so frequently heretofore occurred. I wish to thank our Maker for this rule which protects minorities against thoughtless, domineering, and frequently unsportsmanlike efforts of the majority.

My main idea in requesting this time is to pay my respects again to the method by which this measure reached the floor. You are thoroughly familiar with the way this House functions, with the fact that it is entirely too large now to do so as a strictly deliberative body. You know that we must rely very largely on our 47 committees, and they are good ones, who take legislation referred to them by the Speaker, go into it pro and con, subpena witnesses if necessary, hold hearings, and perhaps appoint subcommittees. Then they either return the legislation to the floor with the approval of the Committee or say it is no good. In this instance, two great committees of this House have said this legislation is no good, yet 218 Members absolutely slap in the face, and I think insult, the members of those committees by saying to them by their signatures to this petition "you are either unable or unwilling to attend to your duty and, although I am not on your committee and have nothing whatever to do with it, I shall take over and perform your duty for you." Mr. Chairman, I say that is no way to legislate. It is not the reasonable, orderly, the regular way to bring legislation on the floor.

Furthermore, the fact that 218 Members so stated does not mean that it is really the wish of the majority of this House that this legislation be considered. On the other hand, it is the will of 218 Members, not spontaneously or simultaneously, but some influenced by this pressure months ago, some by this insistence weeks ago, others by another entreaty days ago, one now dead, and others undoubtedly serving their last term. I spoke last year of having signed one such petition when I was a freshman and unaware of its meaning. I repeat that I never intend to sign another one and that it is not my purpose to vote for legislation brought on the floor in that way whether I would otherwise favor it or not, because I am not in favor of mob legislation any more than I am of any other mob action.

Let us briefly analyze the names on this petition. As illustrative of how the ranking Members of this House feel toward petitions, I call attention that the name of no Member of the leadership on either side of the aisle appears thereon. Among the 218 names are found only 15 of the 47 committee chairmen, only 2 of whom preside over major committees of which, as you know, there are 11. These facts I think indicate substantial agreement with my attitude toward petitions, which attitude I repeat, not with any idea of influencing the vote on this legislation, but with the hope that this discussion may influence some Members of the House to take this position relative to signing petitions in the future. Let us firmly resolve to permit orderly, regular, normal legislation not only by not signing these petitions but by regarding any item of legislation which so reaches the floor as already having 2 strikes against it whether we would otherwise favor it or not.

As a patriotic citizen, not only of the South but of America, I urge you to think twice when next one asks you to sign a petition which is so antagonistic to the rights, the opinions, and the beliefs of any section of this country whether it be the North, South, East, or West.

Now, to refer to a new argument which has developed since last year. While discussing the matter then I stated that Tennessee would probably soon abolish the poll tax in the proper way by State action which would leave only seven States, the election machinery of which would be so tampered with by this legislation. The Tennessee Legislature did abolish the poll tax. I notice, however, that a State court ruled several weeks ago that it was without authority to do so because, since the poll-tax requirement appears in the constitution, a constitutional amendment would be necessary.

If the people of Tennessee are sufficiently desirous of eliminating the poll tax, I am sure such an amendment will be submitted, which will be the proper, the regular, the legal, and the sportsmanlike way to handle the matter. The poll-tax requirement also appears in the Constitution of Alabama and doubtless in those of all other States concerned. Certainly if the legislature of one of these States is unauthorized to repeal it, the National Legislature should not consider tampering with it in any way and those who wish such repeal should follow the regular constitutional amendment method.

Consequently I say to you, my colleagues, in the name of constitutional government, in the name of law and order, in the name of fair play, and in the name of consideration for your fellowman, please remove your hands from the affairs of these Southern States and permit them to govern themselves as they wish, as they have every right to do, and as they are so thoroughly capable of doing, without any interference from this Congress or from you of other States whatever. I repeat, we do not attempt to interfere in your local affairs and only ask reciprocal treatment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. It shall be unlawful for any State, municipality, or other government or governmental subdivision to interfere with the manner of selecting persons for national office by requiring the payment of a poll tax as a prerequisite for voting or registering to vote in any primary or other election for President, Vice President, electors for President or Vice President, or for Senator or Member of the House of Representatives, and any such requirement shall be invalid and void.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. Chairman, I make this motion for the purpose of calling attention to one of the most remarkable things connected with this whole legislation that I have observed in connection with any legislation during my long period of service in this Congress. You are familiar with the provisions of this bill.

Let me read you the existing law now on the statute books. I read section 20, and listen to this language:

Whoever, under color of any law, statute, ordinance, regulation, or custom, willfully subjects or causes to be subjected any inhabitant of any State, Territory, or district, to the deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured or protected by the Constitution and laws of the United States, * * * shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than a year, or both.

There are two other similar provisions, one that punishes conspiracy and the other which gives the person deprived of a constitutional privilege or right, a right to bring civil suit against the person who does the depriving. The remarkable thing about it is that these provisions that I have read are now on the statute books and were on the statute books when the decisions were rendered by the Supreme Court holding that the poll tax could not be interfered with by the Federal Government.

Think of that for a minute. Here is the existing law, and I may say it is identical almost with the provisions of this bill, and yet they bring in this poll-tax bill undertaking to impose a penalty upon an agency of the Government for attempting to interfere with constitutional rights by doing that which the decisions of the Supreme Court say is no interference with a constitutional right. If the persons in these States do not have the constitutional right to vote where the poll tax is levied without paying the tax, that poll tax does not interfere with that constitutional right. I shall be interested to hear what gentlemen on the other side have to say about that.

Mr. Chairman, I feel mighty deeply about this. I do not want to see the House of Representatives, with all the power that is being taken away from the States and concentrated in Washington, declare its judgment as a matter of public policy that the Federal Government should lay its hands on this State power despite the clear-cut decisions of the Supreme Court. It is not a good thing to manifest a disposition here to violate the reserved rights of the States and to disregard the limitations imposed by the Constitution.

If I believed as some gentlemen seem to believe that the States ought to be deprived of this constitutional power, then I would vote for this bill. If I believed as some gentlemen seem to believe that the States ought to be destroyed as responsible agencies of democratic government, I would vote for this bill. But there are some of us in this House who think that democratic government ought to be preserved; that the States, as the only machinery of our system which a democracy can operate, ought to be preserved. The very idea, in this crucial time in this struggle between bureaucracy and democratic rights, for us by this method of questionable powers to say the least of it even from the viewpoint of the proponents, to undertake to deprive our sovereign States of their reserved rights is a remarkable thing to happen in this great democracy.

Something has been said about Thomas Jefferson in this debate. In his inaugural address he said:

It is proper that you should understand what I deem the essential principles of our Government, and consequently those which ought to shape its administration * * * the support of the State governments in all their rights, as the most competent administrations for our domestic concerns and the surest bulwarks against antirepublican tendencies.

Jefferson had great respect for the people, great confidence in the people. He wrote to du Pont de Nemours these words:

You love them [the people] as infants whom you are afraid to trust without nurses, and I love them as adults whom I freely leave to self-government.

A few years before this Washington, in his Farewell Address, gave us this advice:

If, in the opinion of the people, the distribution or modification of the constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way which the Constitution designates. But let there be no change by usurpation; for though this, in one instance, may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS].

Mr. Chairman, the House, in my opinion, should adopt the amendment offered by the distinguished gentleman from Texas, and I hope it will do so.

There is one further and concluding statement I wish to make about this whole subject. This afternoon is the first time I have ever discussed it in the 10 years I have been in the Congress. I think probably 10 minutes will not be imposing too much on your good nature to discuss this particular subject, although I may be mistaken in my judgment.

I cannot let two statements made here today pass without some answer or refutation. I admit my inability to handle the English language sufficiently to permit me to adequately reply to the unjustified, unfounded, and slanderous remarks made about that section of the country from which I come and in which my forebears have lived since the foundation of this Republic. I deny with all the vehemence of my soul the implication from any source, particularly by those who do not know what they are talking about, there is a lack of justice or maladministration of justice in the State from which I come because of a man's race, creed, or color. You will find as great a degree of tolerance, justice, and genuine liberty there as any place under our flag. I deny that there is any lack of loyalty for democracy in that area.

In Alabama and other States in which the poll tax is levied today a greater percentage of our young men volunteered to defend this democratic way of life and this system of government than any other seven States in the whole glorious Union in the present World War. The ashes of volunteer soldiers from this area from Washington's day to this good hour have hallowed the earth and their blood has sanctified the principles for which it stood for more than 100 years before the gentleman from New York and his people ever saw the Statue of Liberty beckoning them to this fair land. They knew what democracy was and they fought for its preservation long before he and millions of other first generation Americans had the opportunity to enjoy the blessings of free speech and free press and freedom of religion and freedom of action.

Mr. Chairman, I resent with all of my soul the imputation that there is any lack of patriotism, any lack of regard for the democratic way of life and democratic institutions in this particular area simply and solely because the electorate of that particular section of the country saw proper to throw certain safeguards around the exercise of the ballot. I want to say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO] and to others I believe we would have a better government, a more democratic government, more intelligent legislation and a more intelligent exhibition of legislative behavior in the National Congress if all of the 48 States would exercise more precautions and throw stronger safeguards around the privilege of the ballot.

Think that over. I do not care who New York wants to send to Congress. That is New York's business. I do not care who Ohio wants to send to Congress; that is Ohio's business. But who Alabama wants to send is the business of Alabama.

I want to say to those of you who imply lack of patriotism throughout these seven poll-tax States, God bless your souls, we do not have 49,000 men out on strike imperiling the war effort. Such a state of affairs exists in the home State of the gentlewoman from Ohio in the rubber industry at this very hour. The Army and Navy have not found it necessary to come to the poll-tax States to plead for workers to return to work to save the country. Right at this moment of dire tragedy and peril, out in Ohio and Michigan, where many proponents of this bill reside, rubber plants, tank plants, and other plants vital and necessary in our war effort are closed by strikes. The leaders of these unions have appealed to Congress to abolish the poll tax as a means of winning the war, yet they countenance strikes which imperil our war effort and the lives of our men on every battle front with not a word of protest, not a word of indignation or condemnation nor a suggestion from the two Members from Ohio who so bitterly assailed the seven Southern States for safeguarding the ballot. Let the gentlewoman from Ohio go home and see if she can assist in having her own people return to work producing equipment and supplies needed for her sons and mine who are fighting to save us from destruction by a foreign foe. This would be a far more effective means of saving democracy than shedding tears concerning payment of a poll tax to our States for educational purposes.

Down in Alabama more than a billion dollars have been invested in munitions plants, shipyards, power facilities, and so forth, to manufacture weapons to preserve our freedom. Not a single plant has been closed nor production halted on account of strikes since our country has been plunged into war. Think these things over, and check the records in your various States before offering advice on democracy to the South.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am not going to take time to answer the personal attacks and implications against me; they are best answered by the record, by the overwhelming majority of the American people, and by time and events. As for the slurring remarks made about the people I represent, the records of the War Department tell the story of my people's patriotism. They show the casualties and the number of men from my district who are engaged on every battlefield, fighting for democracy. This is the best answer to the gentleman from Alabama.

May I say further that while my people did not come over on the Mayflower or on ships on which the gentleman's ancestors came over, my people have always fought for liberty and their sons are today again fighting and dying for liberty. It is because we are an integral part of the living flesh and blood of our country that we insist that democracy be extended to every man, woman, and child living in these United States irrespective of his race, color, or creed.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. It shall be unlawful for any person, whether or not acting under the cover of authority of the laws of any State or subdivision thereof, to require the payment of a poll tax as a prerequisite for voting or registering to vote in any primary or other election for President, Vice President, electors for President or Vice President, or for Senator or Member of the House of Representatives.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BULWINKLE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7) making unlawful the requirement for the payment of a poll tax as a prerequisite to voting in a primary or other election for national officers, pursuant to House Resolution No. 131, reported the same back to the House.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. HOBBS. Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HOBBS moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary with instructions to report the same back to the House forthwith, with the following amendment:

Page 1, in line 4, strike out "primaries or other"; and in lines 8 and 9, strike out "or registering to vote at primaries or other" and insert the word "at"; and on page 2, in line 2, strike out the words "primaries and other"; on page 2, in line 7, strike out "or registering to vote"; and in lines 8 and 14, strike out "primary or other"; and in line 17, strike out "such primary or other election" and insert "such elections"; and in lines 19 and 20, strike out "such primary or other" and insert "any such"; and in line 25, strike out "or registering to vote in any primary or other", and insert "at any"; and on page 3, in lines 8 and 9, strike out "or registering to vote in any primary or other" and insert "at any"; and amend the title to read as follows: "Making unlawful the requirement for the payment of a poll tax as a prerequisite to voting in any election for national officers."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HOBBS) there were—ayes 90; noes 167.

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, on the passage of the bill I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 265, nays 110, answered "present" 3, not voting 54, as follows:

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BALDWIN of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to extend their own remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who spoke on the bill today may be permitted to revise and extend their remarks in the RECORD and include therein quotations from the Constitution of the United States and the constitutions of any States and from the statutes and court decisions, and also to include citations and authorities.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON] be granted an unlimited leave of absence, on account of official business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MANSFIELD of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a brief Associated Press dispatch and a few brief extracts from public documents and letters.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

ELECTION TO COMMITTEE

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution, House Resolution 242, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That HARRIS ELLSWORTH is hereby elected to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

The resolution was agreed to.

AMENDING SECTION 32 OF THE EMERGENCY FARM MORTGAGE ACT

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 2427) to amend section 32 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from South Carolina to explain the purpose of the bill?

Mr. FULMER. The purpose of this bill is to extend the authority of the Federal Land Bank Commissioner for 2 additional years. In accordance with a bill we passed some time ago, his authority expires on the 1st of July, and this is to extend it for 2 additional years.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. This will permit the Federal Land Bank Commissioner to make Commission's loans for the next 2 years?

Mr. FULMER. Yes. As the gentleman understands, we have a major bill before our committee as well as an investigation in connection with the Farm Security Administration, and this bill will give us plenty of time in the future to deal with all of this matter.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I have no objection, and withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the tenth sentence of section 32 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended, is amended by striking out "July 1, 1943" wherever it appears therein and inserting in lieu thereof "July 1, 1945."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. O'BRIEN of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address delivered by the distinguished head of the F. B. I., J. Edgar Hoover, at the commencement exercises at Rutgers University in New Brunswick, N. J.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday next, following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

TERM OF OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT AND VICE PRESIDENT

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order to ask permission of the House to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD on the introduction of a resolution to change the Constitution of the United States?

The SPEAKER. It would be.

Mr. DONDERO. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to the term of office of the President and Vice President. The resolution reads as follows:

SECTION 1. The President and Vice President shall hold their offices during the term of 6 years. No person shall be eligible to the office of President who has previously held such office.

SEC. 2. The ratification of this article shall not affect the term in progress, or to which a President and Vice President have been elected, at the time of the ratification of this article, nor the eligibility to the office of President for such term.

SEC. 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution within 7 years from the date of its submission to the States by the Congress.

One of the most controversial questions that confronted the Constitutional Convention at Philadelphia in May 1787, and which Convention created the Constitution of the United States, was the question relating to the Chief Executive, his election, his powers, and the length of time that he should continue in office.

I shall deal solely with the question of the tenure in office of the President. The purpose of my resolution is to limit the term of the President to one of 6 years without right to succeed himself.

Since the beginning of the Government, Washington, our first President, established by his example the custom of refusing a third term. That custom has been respected and followed by every President until 1940.

The hope and aspiration expressed by Thomas Jefferson "that should a President consent to be a candidate for a third election, I trust he would be rejected upon this demonstration of ambitious views," was destroyed by the election in November 1940.

If a President can be elected a third, fourth, fifth, and sixth term there is no reason why the office should not become one for life and thereby destroy constitutional government in the United States. It was that danger of perpetuation in office which the delegates to the Constitutional Convention at Philadelphia sought to prevent.

I desire to point out that this subject caused much heated debate, was most controversial, and was before the Convention almost continuously from the time the Convention convened in May until the following 6th day of September, but 12 days before the Constitution was finally adopted by the Convention. For the major part of the time the Convention was in session the proposal of a 6-year term or a 7-year term for the Chief Executive without right of succession or reelection seemed to have the majority opinion of the Convention. The truth is that it was agreed to by the committee of details and adopted by the Convention.

It is known that the Virginia plan provided for a Chief Executive to serve one term of 7 years with no right to a second term. The New Jersey plan, while it did not specify the length of the term of office, specified that the Chief Executive should be ineligible for a second term. The New York State convention on adoption of the Federal Constitution on July 4, 1788, passed a resolution, in spite of the fact that the national convention which created the Constitution provided otherwise, that—

Resolved, That the President of the United States shall hold his office during the term of 7 years and shall not be eligible for a second term.

It is quite evident from this resolution that there was much opinion in the country that a President should hold office for a longer term than the one finally adopted, and that he should have no right to succeed himself.

Gouverneur Morris, member of the convention, was for a short term to avoid impeachments; while Mr. Butler, another delegate, was against frequency of elections because he said it was "too far to send electors often"; while other delegates to the convention thought if elections were too frequent the best men would not undertake the service and those of inferior character would be liable to be corrupted.

For reasons well known now, when the Confederate States of America adopted their constitution, they provided that the President should hold office for a term of 6 years and that he should not be reeligible. Three or four years ago Jefferson Davis, the great grandson of the Confederate War President, came to Washington to testify before a Senate committee dealing with this same subject. In discussing the matter with him he called my attention to the fact that while Lincoln was compelled to stand for reelection in November of 1864, his grandfather, under the Constitution of the Confederate States, did not have to do so because of the 6-year term to which he had been elected. His term would not expire until 1867.

Reasons may be assigned both for and against the 6-year limitation of one term with ineligibility for a second term. Never before in the history of our country since the adoption of the Constitution has the question of a third term been raised until the election of President Roosevelt in 1940, and now with the ambition to succeed himself for a fourth term. This is a challenge and a threat to our republican form of government.

The adoption of the resolution which I have introduced limiting the term of the President to one of 6 years and making him ineligible for a second term, would remove forever the threat which now faces the people of the United States.

OUR DUTY TO PHYSICALLY HANDICAPPED CHILDREN

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD on the bill H. R. 496, and to include therein certain quotations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, on January 6, 1943, I introduced H. R. 496, which has for its purpose the providing for the education of all types of physically handicapped children. Under the bill the program will be carried on by each individual State with assistance provided pursuant to the terms of this proposed legislation. There is a direct grant to each State of $40,000 which will not be required to be matched and which will be used to establish, extend, and improve services for educating physically handicapped children. An additional sum is provided to aid the States in such program on the basis of the ratio of the number of their inhabitants aged 5 to 20 years, inclusive, to the total number of inhabitants of the same ages of all the States as determined by the most recent United States census.

I introduced a similar bill in the Seventy-seventh Congress, but the demand upon the Congress for war legislation did not permit consideration of the legislation.

The latest statistics I have before me show, according to reports made to the United States Office of Education up to March 15, 1937, that of the physically handicapped children in the United States there were only 166,248 receiving special education in city public schools and in residential schools, while the estimated total number of physically handicapped children needing special education was 1,873,231.

On April 8 and 9, 1937, hearings were held before the Committee on Education and Labor in the United States Senate in the Seventy-fifth Congress, first session, on Senate bill 1634, which was similar to my bill, H. R. 496. From these hearings it is disclosed that the major type of handicapped children are as follows:

(a) The blind and the partially seeing, who are without vision or without sufficient vision to read ordinary print even with the aid of glasses.

(b) The deaf and the hard of hearing, who cannot hear ordinary instruction as given in the classroom.

(c) The crippled, who must have special equipment and treatment to succeed in school.

(d) The defective in speech, who stammer or who have some other serious speech difficulty which makes it impossible for them to participate normally in classroom instruction.

(e) Delicate children or children of lowered vitality, who suffer from invisible physical handicaps; the pretuberculous, the tuberculous, the cardiac, the anemic and the malnourished. These children cannot follow the regular program of the school day without further injury to their physical condition.

The hearings further disclose that the numbers of physically handicapped children in the several types were approximately as follows:

(a) Blind and partially seeing	52,868
(b) Deaf and hard of hearing	370,069
(c) Crippled	105,736
(d) Defective in speech	1,057,368
(e) Delicate (lowered vitality)	264,342
Grand total	1,850,393

Mr. Speaker, we in America are proud of the great storehouse of natural resources we have in our own country. In the great struggle in which we are now engaged, which is a contest to determine whether or not our civilization shall endure, we depend largely upon the utilization of these vast resources and the manpower we possess in the successful prosecution of the war. We are coming to realize, day by day, that we must depend ultimately upon the human element to achieve success. In the mobilization of our people for carrying forward our war activities, as well as building up our fighting forces on land, air, and sea, we have learned that success is dependent upon a strong, virile citizenship. We have been shocked to learn that many thousands of our young citizens of draft age have been rejected by reason of physical defects or lack of educational qualifications. This is a severe indictment against our civilization and educational program.

While the education of the physically handicapped is a problem separate and apart from the education of our normal children, it, nevertheless, is a social duty resting upon our society of great importance to the building up and maintenance of a strong, dependable race. It is an obligation resting upon the States which has been woefully neglected. The purpose of this legislation is to establish and promulgate a program throughout the States to be carried on by the States themselves which will meet the problem and give to this large group of our children an opportunity for education and to become self-supporting and useful members of society.

The Creed of the Cripple well expresses the objective of this legislation, which reads:

Not sympathy, not pity, not charity—just an equal chance with other men. To see pity in the eyes of my friends replaced with commendation—to work, to produce, to provide; and to feel that I have a place in the world, seeking no favors and giving none—to become a man among men in spite of my handicap.

There appears in the hearings to which I referred on S. 1634 some verses written by a crippled boy which reveal the feelings of these handicapped children and which are worthy of our consideration. The boy wrote:

God takes the clean, moist earth to make us of,
The loam that wind and sun breathe blessings on.
He makes the meadows green to race, hills to climb, and paths to pace.
He makes you lads to run, so neatly framed and swift in flight.
Your footsteps come and go. They mock me all the time.
They keep my heart just burning to follow where they go—
But pain! You are my master. You bind my feet, my spirit blight.
How is it I can never dance and run in merry sprite?
Did God's great hands just tremble, then, when He made me?

Mr. Speaker, let us, the Representatives of this great American Nation, believing in the equal opportunity for all, unbind the feet, release the spirit, and vouchsafe to the thousands of these youthful Americans held down by physical handicaps the opportunity to become self-supporting, useful American citizens.

Mr. Speaker, H. R. 496 is pending before the Committee on Education and I most sincerely beseech the cooperation of all of my colleagues to the end that a hearing may be held upon this important legislation so that a complete record may be made of the facts surrounding this important problem which will in my judgment convince us all that legislation of this general type should be enacted so that we may deal fairly and justly with this great group of our handicapped children.

WOMEN'S ARMY AUXILIARY CORPS

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order on either Thursday or Friday next to consider the bill (S. 495) to establish a Women's Army Auxiliary Corps for service in the Army of the United States, and that the time for general debate be fixed at 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman of the House Committee on Military Affairs and the ranking member on the minority side of the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 25 minutes in opposition to the Smith-Connally bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address delivered last night at the Library of Congress by Mr. Jean Hersholt on Hans Christian Andersen.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. D'ALESANDRO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an article from the Baltimore Evening Sun.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON THE PUBLIC LANDS—LEAVE TO SIT DURING SESSIONS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. PETERSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Public Lands may be authorized to sit during the sessions of the House when the House is on general debate during the remainder of the week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DEWEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague [Mr. SUNDSTROM] may be permitted to extend his remarks in the Appendix.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include a letter from Ellen Gowen Hood.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALLEN of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include excerpts from a letter from the War Department.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a poem by Horace C. Carlisle, entitled "Churchill Speaking From England's Heart."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on three different subjects, and in two to include short articles, and in the third an editorial from the New York Times entitled "Ten Years of the T. V. A."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include therein an editorial from the New York Times of Saturday, May 22, 1943, entitled "The Tax Muddle."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Speaker, also I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter to the citizens of Leesville, La., by my friend and constituent, Mrs. Agnes E. Meyer.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MERROW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial from the Manchester Union, Manchester, N. H., May 24, 1943, in regard to the ban on pleasure driving.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including a bill I am introducing today to create a permanent medical corps in the Veterans' Administration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include a statement by Hon. Marvin Jones, chairman of the American delegation at the press conference at Hot Springs, May 22, 1943, at the food conference, and also include a statement of Hon. Marvin Jones made today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix and include therein a short newspaper item.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix and include a short article from a newspaper.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE LATE HONORABLE PARKER CORNING

Mr. BYRNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNE. Mr. Speaker, I was very much shocked this morning when I read of the passing of my predecessor, Mr. Parker Corning. He came to Congress in 1923 and remained for seven terms, leaving in 1936, when I came to Congress as his successor.

Mr. Corning was born on the 22d of January 1874. He was the son of Erastus and Mary Parker Corning. He was educated in Albany Boys Academy and St. Paul's School at Concord, N. H., and graduated from Yale in 1895. He was first elected to the Sixty-eighth Congress and was elected to each succeeding Congress, including the Seventy-fourth.

Mr. Corning was a businessman in Albany. He came from a long line of old residents of our State. In fact, his grandfather was the organizer of the city known as Corning, N. Y. The Susquehanna Railroad was the result of the efforts of Mr. Corning's great-grandfather as a leader in the industrial and railroad world.

He was a man of sterling qualities; a man of great force of character and independence. He has been for many years a leader in our social, industrial, and mercantile life. Only about 7 weeks ago his wife passed away. This unquestionably broke his spirit. Unquestionably it affected his health and hastened his death.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNE. I yield.

Mr. RAYBURN. I desire to say that for many years I served upon the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce with Mr. Parker Corning. Mentally sound, physically fine, I never knew a more gentle man than Parker Corning. He had the elements of a real American. He was a patriot. He was wise enough to know how to exercise citizenship and be a patriot, in the highest and best sense of the word.

With my friend, I shall grieve always at his passing.

Mr. BYRNE. Mr. Speaker, I thank you from the bottom of my heart for your fine contribution to this memorial service. I am sure the family of Parker Corning and his friends appreciate everything you have said of him because of your long years of association with him and your knowledge of his fine merits and qualities.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNE. I am glad to have the majority leader say something at this time.

Mr. McCORMACK. The information that our distinguished friend gives to the House is a source of great regret to me. Every one of us who served with Parker Corning will always remember the fine example that he set and the outstanding character of service that he rendered to our country during his years as a Member of this House.

I join in everything that my distinguished friend from New York has said and the remarks that the distinguished Speaker of our body has so ably and eloquently made about our late beloved colleague and friend. I join with the gentleman from New York and members of the New York delegation in extending to those whom our distinguished late friend leaves behind, the members of his family, my profound feelings of sympathy.

Mr. BYRNE. I am very grateful to the majority leader for his contribution to this service. I wish to say that the nephew of our deceased colleague is now mayor of Albany, N. Y., Erastus Corning, a son of the deceased brother of Parker Corning—Mr. Edwin Corning. Edwin Corning was lieutenant governor of our State and also chairman of the Democratic State Committee for a number of years.

Unfortunately Parker Corning leaves surviving only a sister, the wife of one of our prominent physicians in Albany, and a daughter, Mrs. Igelhart. As I recollect, those are the only immediate survivors of our colleague.

Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand, and will ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD, a very fine obituary that I found in today's New York Times. I ask that this be printed in full in addition to the remarks that have been made by the Speaker and the majority leader and myself.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNE. I take leave of my dear friend and former colleague and also my former associate in many activities in my community. I wish to leave upon the RECORD my prayer to God Almighty that He will give him and also his dear wife eternal happiness on that other shore.

The article referred to follows:

PARKER CORNING, EX-LAWMAKER, DIES—SOCIAL LIFE OF ALBANY HAD LONG CENTERED AT HOME OF THE EX-CONGRESSMAN—REPRESENTATIVE 14 YEARS—FAMILY NOTABLE FOR CENTURY—GRANDFATHER FIRST HEAD OF NEW YORK CENTRAL ROAD

ALBANY, N. Y., May 24.—Parker Corning, Representative in Congress for the Twenty-eighth District of this State from 1923 to 1937, died today in Albany Hospital after a brief illness, at the age of 69. His wife, the former Anne Cassin McClure, who was prominent as a patroness of thoroughbred-horse racing, died 7 weeks ago.

Member of a family prominent in the political and business life of Albany and the State for more than a century, Mr. Corning had been in poor health for several weeks, but he did not enter the hospital until yesterday.

Much of the social life of Albany centered at the Glenmont, 1,000-acre farm home of Mr. and Mrs. Corning. Many notable affairs were given for their large circle of friends. A large dairy business was conducted on the farm. Recently Mr. and Mrs. Corning turned over to the Glenmont Red Cross a stone house on the farm.

GRANDFATHER HEADED NEW YORK CENTRAL

Born in Albany, Mr. Corning was a son of the late Mr. and Mrs. Erastus Corning. His grandfather, Erastus Corning, was the first president of the New York Central Railroad.

Mr. Corning attended the Albany Academy and St. Paul's School at Concord, N. H., and was graduated from Yale in 1895.

In that year he and the late James W. Cox founded the Albany Felt Co., one of the largest concerns in its line in this part of the State. While his brother, the late Edwin Corning, former lieutenant governor, was president of the Ludlum Steel Co., Mr. Corning served as its vice president. He also was a vice president and a director of the State bank, a trustee of the Mechanics and Farmers Bank and a director of the City Safe Deposit Co. In recent years, however, Mr. Corning confined his activities to the felt company.

HIS ELECTION TO CONGRESS

Mr. Corning in 1922 defeated Charles M. Winchester for the seat in Congress then held by Peter G. Ten Eyck. That was the year the O'Connell-Corning faction of the Democratic Party took control of county affairs. He was re-elected six times, and in 1936 declined a renomination. While in Congress he opposed many of the New Deal ideas.

In Congress Mr. Corning was a member of the Interstate and Foreign Affairs Committee. He put through the legislation for the construction of the Menands Bridge and the Parker Dunn Bridge over the Hudson River at Albany.

Mr. Corning was a member of the Fort Orange Club, the Albany Country and University Clubs of this city, the Racquet and Tennis of New York, and the Saratoga Golf Club.

Surviving are a daughter, Mrs. Philip Igelhart, of Westbury, L. I., the former Mary Parker Corning, and a sister, Mrs. Arthur W. Elting, wife of Dr. Elting, noted Albany surgeon.

A private funeral service will be held at the Corning farm.

AGAINST CONTINUING NATIONAL RECOVERY ADMINISTRATION

ALBANY, May 24.—Parker Corning, while in Congress, fought attempted continuation of the National Recovery and Agricultural Adjustment Administrations and the Guffey Coal Act before their invalidation by the United States Supreme Court. He differed with President Roosevelt on some banking policies and on tariffs as threats to home industries. His brother, the late Edwin Corning, was a one-time chairman of the Democratic State Committee and later lieutenant governor under Governor Alfred E. Smith. Parker Corning fostered legislation which created the port of Albany, and helped bring about erection of a new Federal building here.

Besides his 1,000-acre farm at Glenmont, he maintained a home at Bar Harbor, Maine.

Mrs. Corning was owner of topflight thoroughbreds and of a breeding stable at Glenmont. Best known of the horses which carried the Corning colors was Attention, which in 1941 beat Whirlaway by a length and a half to win the Arlington classic.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

(Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES—REPORT TO CONGRESS ON LEND-LEASE OPERATIONS (H. DOC. NO. 209)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and together with the accompanying papers referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered printed, with illustrations:

PRESIDENT'S LETTER OF TRANSMITTAL

To the Congress of the United States of America:

As I transmit to the Seventy-eighth Congress a Report of Operations under the Lend-Lease Act from March 11, 1943, to April 30, 1943, the last members of the once vaunted Afrika Korps and their Italian allies are streaming into prison camps. The peoples of Tunis and Bizerte are hailing their liberation—and Italians among them are as enthusiastic as any for their deliverance.

An entire continent—the continent of Africa—has now been cleared of the enemy. Its people have been freed from Nazi and Fascist rule. In Africa we have dealt a blow which is sorely felt in Berlin and Rome and Tokyo; and we have brought hope to millions still to be liberated. Liberation of Africa is a forerunner of the future.

In the coming battles for Germany and Japan, we shall need the full support and the full resources of the peoples of the newly liberated areas. This is a military and political necessity of the first order. Their fields can produce food not only for their own people but for the United Nations' forces. Their factories and mines can supply not only themselves but our armies as well.

The peoples in liberated areas are enlisting in support of the United Nations' cause. Their support will reflect itself in active cooperation at the proper time by millions still to be liberated. They appreciate, as only those who lost freedom can appreciate, the compelling necessity for overthrowing tyranny.

Our lend-lease operations in north and west Africa—the first of the liberated areas—have demonstrated how a freed people can aid in the defeat of the Axis. In this victory, our military operations have been backed up by the friendly support of the peoples behind the lines. We also were aided by the new French armies. They were equipped with lend-lease weapons. They were and are an important part of the United Nations' fighting forces. Aid has also been given us and the other United Nations by the liberated peoples of French Africa in the production and shipment of strategic and critical materials for our war-production program.

As we progress to victory, the United Nations have brought and are bringing food for the starving and medicine for the sick in the areas which we set free. Our promises are being fulfilled in deeds. Our integrity is enlisting the peoples and resources of these areas as effective fighting partners in the common fight against Axis aggression and tyranny.

While Axis prisoners have streamed into captivity at the end of our campaign of liberation in north Africa, lend-lease has shipped greater and greater quantities of war matériel into the battle areas—and into the other countries allied with us.

In my lend-lease report to the Congress on September 11, 1941, I stated that "it is our task to turn the workshops of our industry into mighty forges of war—to outbuild the aggressors in every category of modern arms."

Today, we are outbuilding the aggressors in every category of modern arms. And we are delivering them in the amounts necessary to build up the striking power for offensives that will end only in Berlin and Tokyo.

As lend-lease moves ahead in its third year, our armed forces, our supplies, and the combined efforts of the United Nations are driving ahead to complete victory over the enemy.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 25, 1943.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that business in order on Calendar Wednesday be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Without, objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

POST-WAR READJUSTMENT

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MONKIEWICZ] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. MONKIEWICZ. Mr. Speaker, I take this time this afternoon to call to your attention a matter that should be of great importance to us. While there are numerous problems arising out of the prosecution of the war that occupy our minds, there is one which I believe to be as important as any.

A major internal problem which will confront our country at the close of this war will be the readjustment of millions of men from the armed services of our country into our civilian economy at a period when most of our important industries will be struggling with their own readjustment problem—that of reconverting their factories from war production to peacetime production.

We have heard from persons in high official positions of vast and grandiose plans for the rehabilitation and readjustment of the peoples of many lands; vast projects which administration officeholders are already preparing to put into effect—not only after the war but immediately—and all of these projects, as far as we can learn, are to be paid for substantially by the American taxpayers.

But from these world planners we have heard very little of any concrete plan to aid the American soldier, sailor, marine, Coast Guard man, or other members of our armed forces, other than some vague hints at a bigger and larger form of W. P. A., N. Y. A., or some such projects.

I say care should be taken that there should be no "boondoggling," no leaf raking, no use of our fighting men to build up a political machine. We owe our fighting men better than that. These men should be given the guidance, training, and jobs to aid them to resume and continue on in the American way of life—the American way of life which gives to each man and woman the spirit of individualism and personal independence—that spirit which makes a man or woman take just pride in being self-supporting and thereby self-respecting. We owe it to our fighting men that we provide this guidance, training, and jobs for them and we must oppose any attempt by anyone to make State wards of these men, or to attempt to break the free morale of these men by throwing them onto relief or what some people have called "made work."

But if the administration theorists have been too busy planning the rehabilitation of the distant parts of the earth to look around at home, there are those in this country who have been looking with thoughtful view toward the internal future of this Nation. One of these men is Carl A. Gray, of Farmington, Conn.

Mr. Gray is not a wishful dreamer. He is a man who has accomplished things by brain and work. As a boy in Worcester, Mass., he arose at 2 o'clock each morning and peddled the Worcester Telegram through the streets of his city during his high-school years. He attended the trade school and received a solid, practical shop training at that school. After graduating from trade school, he worked for a year in a steel and wire mill before entering Dartmouth College. After graduating from college, he went to work in a car foundry and later served his time as an apprentice machine operator. Since then he has worked his way upward in industry. He has held high executive positions with great manufacturing companies and at this time is president of the Grenby Manufacturing Co. of Plainville, Conn., and president of the Newton, Thompson Co., Inc., of Brandon, Vt.

In 1939 employment conditions were very bad in Connecticut. Many thousands of men were out of work in my State. Gov. Raymond E. Baldwin, in April 1939, asked Mr. Gray to accept the chairmanship of a committee to study employment. Mr. Gray accepted and went to work. He conceived and put into operation what afterward became nationally known as the Connecticut plan.

The plan was simple; he sums it up thus:

1. Find out who the unemployed are by communities. It does no good to speak in round numbers of 100,000 or 10,000,000 unemployed. It is a question of who these people are, classified by experience and background and what can be done for each group.
2. Make a survey of job opportunities, the kinds of jobs in given communities.
3. Form local committees of businessmen and other interested citizens with the will to do something about it.

Now, let me remark: In March of 1939, Mr. Gray wrote to Mr. Harry Hopkins offering to come to Washington at his own expense to discuss this plan with him and offered to devote some time without remuneration to setting up the plan and making it work on a national scale. After some time, he received a letter from a secretary—a form letter. He again wrote to Mr. Hopkins and received a letter telling him to take it up with the assistant secretary. He did and received a courteous, but noncommittal reply; but no encouragement.

I guess Mr. Gray did not know the way these things were done by some people around here. Can you imagine their conception of a man who was willing to do something for the Nation at his own expense? Why such a man must appear heretical according to the gospel of "Tax and tax, spend and spend."

But Governor Baldwin listened to Mr. Gray, and the Connecticut plan was put into operation in Connecticut. Job-training was given to men who were untrained and 45,000 men were given jobs. The plan was based upon specific training, highly intensified, upon specific machines in connection with which a known demand, current or expected, for workers existed.

Now, this plan was put into operation early in 1939. It produced jobs, real jobs, productive jobs for 45,000 men in Connecticut. These men were trained through the plan to operate machines and produce in factories. These men today are working at machines in factories producing war materials. When Japan struck, these men were ready, trained workmen. How different this plan and training was to the boondoggling, leaf-raking, money-wasting, and man-wasting projects of the taxers and spenders.

Now, Mr. Gray has come forward with another plan, which I will briefly outline and for which I humbly ask your consideration. He is looking toward the time when the men of our armed forces shall have accomplished their world-saving task. When victory shall be theirs they will wish to return to their homes and their families. But they must have a means to support themselves and their families. And this must be a means of support which will enable each of these men to maintain his self-respect and his pride. We do not want any repetition of the treatment given to the veterans of World War No. 1; we do not want them to feel that they are an object of charity, receiving what amounted to little more than tobacco money.

Mr. Gray's plan eliminates bureaucracy. It includes provision that all men returning home from the armed services who shall have jobs to which to return shall be released from the armed services. Those who prefer other jobs than the jobs they had prior to their war service and those who will not have jobs to which to return would be placed in the reserves but allowed to return to their homes. Then they would be assigned to a district occupational board nearest their homes and remain on the Government pay roll. The occupational board, in cooperation with existing agencies and personnel, will then start making a complete analysis of all returning soldiers through its corps of guidance experts. A corps of trained guidance experts would be assigned to each district to begin the work of interviewing, checking records, and analysis-testing of each man. These experts would not be theorists; they would be experienced men and women who were trained in their respective fields, who would have a thorough knowledge of skills required in each of many occupations, and who would be versed in vocational guidance, vocational education, occupational therapy, personnel administration, psychology, and psychiatry. After a complete examination and analysis the combined judgment of both the candidate and board would be filed. In these examinations and interviews each man would state what occupations he would like to follow and his aptitudes for these and other occupations would be analyzed.

Vestibule schools would be set up in each district to which the man would be transferred while still under the regional occupational board. His Government pay continues and he is given time to try out courses agreed upon mutually with the guidance experts, in which the student or his instructors can decide for what job he is best fitted. Once the man is graduated from a vestibule school, he goes to a special vocational school in which he will receive the basic training in the occupation he has chosen. The length of the course at the vocational school may take from 6 months to 2 years, depending upon the type of job for which the man shall be trained.

If the aptitude and other tests show a man is qualified for college or professional training, then that man would be given this type of education at Government expense.

When a man is placed in a job, after completion of the vocational training, he then will be released by the occupational board and discharged from the reserve branch of the armed services. Also, if a man shows a tendency during training to shirk his work and collect his Government pay without taking his vocational training seriously as a member of the reserves, it might be understood his case would be disposed of in some proper manner.

Occupational opportunities and types of courses would be continually studied by a national research board and district boards, which would guide the schools and vocational advisers as to the field of occupations where job opportunities are the most likely to exist and courses could be changed according to the current needs.

This is a brief outline of the Gray plan. Mr. Gray has received many letters from members of the armed services and from women who have brothers or sons in these services, commending his plan and urging him to go ahead with it.

The Gray plan could be put into operation now. It need not await the end of this war. It could be put into operation immediately to aid those men who have been discharged because of wounds or other honorable reasons.

I say, while we are planning for remaking the world after this war, this might be a proper time to give some consideration to the future of those who are fighting for our security and our way of life.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ELLSWORTH] is recognized for 15 minutes.

UTILIZATION OF WOOD WASTE

Mr. ELLSWORTH. Mr. Speaker. The United States was richly endowed by nature with abundant natural resources. Of all of these resources, probably the most important one is unique in the respect that it can be replaced. This resource has found a multitude of uses in our wartime economy, and has contributed more tonnage to war production than the basic commodity, steel. It is our most plentiful resource, possesses the widest range of utilization, and yet is the most wasted of all of our raw materials. This important natural resource is the timber supply which is found in our vast forests. It is this same resource that has been largely instrumental in keeping the Axis powers in critical chemicals, fuels, rubber, and food materials. In this country, we are today wasting an estimated 67 percent of the wood from our forests. This waste annually runs into millions of tons.

The horn of plenty is running out in the United States. A few short months ago, we talked of surpluses; we talked of winning the war with food; we talked of feeding the world; we had everything—so we thought.

But the word "surplus" went out of circulation with new model cars, Nylon hosiery, and ice cream on the dinner table. We are seriously afflicted with the economic disease of shortages. Shortages operate in a vicious cycle—each new symptom making the others worse, with a corresponding rise in the industrial and civilian fever chart. The customary remedy for shortages is an economic aspirin issued under the trade names of rationing, priorities, scrap drives, overtime hours, and pep talks. But the real trouble always remains. There is but one real way of relieving shortages and that is to find something that we have plenty of, but which we are not using. Wood waste happens to be just such a material, and vast quantities are available annually in this country. Figuratively speaking, we can feed a cow wood waste and get milk. We can feed hens sawdust and get eggs. We can make tires out of sawdust.

The Axis Powers are getting meat, eggs, milk, butter, alcohol, glycerine, explosives, and plastics out of wood waste. It is time that we become nationally conscious of this wasted raw material, and promote its utilization to relieve our shortages in industrial materials and in our food supply.

The entire subject of food, including production, manufacture, distribution, and price control, is often under discussion by Members of this House, and we have heard numerous remarks on the subject on the floor.

Our food situation is critical now, not that there is any immediate danger of people going hungry, but the situation is critical because the muddling and bungling now, unless it is corrected, may easily lead to hunger in our country within 12 months.

It is not, however, the immediate problem that concerns me today, but it is concerning our lack of recognition of certain fundamental facts, and our failure to lay plans for the future that I speak.

It is a strange thing, but one of the serious difficulties in the German economy in the previous World War, is almost exactly the same difficulty that may confront us in the near future. The collapse of Germany in 1918 was due in no small part to the break-down of the German supply of protein feed necessary to produce meat, milk, cheese, and eggs.

Let me give you a short quotation from the book entitled "Germany's Master Plan," by Joseph Borkin and Charles A. Welsh:

> The lack of cattle feed was the principal problem of the whole war food program. By far too much cattle was bred, considering the amount of feed produced in Germany. This brought about a vicious circle. If the breeding of cattle was reduced because of the lack of feed, the meat, fat, and milk supply suffered. If, on the other hand, the number of cattle was maintained, then the breeder was apt to feed the cattle bread grains in order not to let his cattle starve, instead of having the grain for direct human consumption.

In several hearings before subcommittees of the Republican Congressional Food Study Committee, of which I am secretary, I have heard it stated repeatedly by men of undoubted responsibility that the animal population of this country now exceeds, or shortly will exceed, our ability to feed it. The actual shortage is variously estimated in percentage, but there seems to be a general agreement in the neighborhood of 20 percent. This statement does not refer to concentrated protein which is even more seriously short.

On March 15 Herbert Hoover, who was the Food Administrator in the previous war, told the Midwest Conference of Governors that the United States has ceased to be a great food-surplus country; that, with the exception of the extraordinary harvest of 1942, we were in fact a food-importing country; and that enemy activity has cut off imports of vegetable oils; and that our protein feed for cattle is very short.

I am also reliably informed that there is not actually in sight much more than half enough concentrated protein food for cattle, hogs, and poultry for the next 12 months.

Germany collapsed in 1918 because she had no solution to the problem. We are extremely fortunate in that we do have a solution. We know the process by which adequate supplemental protein feed may be obtained at low cost from material now going to waste.

The tragedy is, at least it seems a tragedy to me, that, although the facts of our impending shortage seem clear, to date little or nothing has been done to meet the situation.

I refer simply to the fact that protein yeast can be inexpensively and easily made from wood waste; that there is ample wood fiber now going to waste, especially in the forests of the West, which, if utilized, would more than meet our need for protein feed and our additional need for alcohol for the rubber program.

The method of utilization of wood waste is a process for the production of wood sugar. Quantities of small particles of wood are packed into a percolator where the wood is subjected to high temperature and pressure by the admission of steam. When the proper conditions are reached, a weak solution of acid is forced through the wood waste and wood sugar is drawn off in solution. From each ton of wood waste, almost 1,100 pounds of wood sugar is produced and nearly 600 pounds of lignin.

From the wood sugar, by fermentation processes, it is possible to produce numerous other products. Each ton of wood waste will thus produce about 50 gallons of alcohol. Or it will produce 450 pounds of high-protein feeding yeast, which is superior to soya meal for livestock food. The lignin, through chemistry, yields a number of vital materials.

Before we can fully appreciate what the utilization of wood waste can mean to this country, we should understand the importance of alcohol and protein feeds to our wartime economy. The plenty of these materials that existed a few months ago has turned into shortages. Alcohol is the foundation of our synthetic-rubber program. Production in 1941 was 150,000,000 gallons. Our requirements for 1944 are 600,000,000 gallons, an increase of 400 percent; 90 percent of this alcohol will be produced by the use of feeding materials, such as grains and sirups. Two hundred million bushels of grain will be used in the process.

As already mentioned, our concentrated protein feeds for livestock are about half what they should be. The Department of Agriculture has done everything possible to encourage the production of soya beans and other high protein crops. Due to these feed shortages, farmers have had to resort to feeding wheat for protein to live stock and nearly 225,000,000 bushels have been so consumed in the past year. With the alcohol program and the live stock feeding burden thrown on our grain supplies, it is little wonder that it was recently announced that it may be necessary to plant 16,000,000 additional acres of wheat for 1944. Obviously, however, these acres must take from other needed production. Meantime, the Nation's meat production is falling off and our production of eggs and dairy products threatens to be substantially below that of last year. We appear to be entering the vicious cycle that brought Germany to her knees in 1918. We have been told that we can win the war and write the peace with food. We will accomplish neither if we allow ourselves to be forced to choose between using our available supply of grain for food or for the production of rubber and the feeding of live stock.

It must be said for the German militarist, he does not knowingly commit the same error twice if it can be avoided. The wood-sugar process was perfected in Germany and when the Nazi high command saw its possibilities, they immediately made it a cornerstone for their wartime economy. In their wood waste heaps, they envisioned bacon and beef, eggs and butter, alcohol and glycerine, synthetic rubber and plastics, fuels and chemicals. The government immediately moved to acquire a 50 percent interest in the process. Additional plants were built until there were nearly 20 by 1941. It proved to be such a good thing that high German officials could not resist temptation. With the usual Nazi skill, the owner of the other half interest was "Muniched" out of his property by concentration camp treatment. It was a good thing among rascals and Axis partners Italy and Japan also built plants.

Immediately the question comes to mind, Would such plants be practical in the United States? Available estimates indicate that a plant using 360 tons of wood waste per day would cost about $1,500,000 and would yield annually 5,000,000 gallons of alcohol and 40,000 tons of lignin. Figures I have seen indicate that a plant designed to produce high-protein feeding yeast would be cheaper and would yield 30,000 tons, the equivalent of 50,000 acres of soya beans, plus 40,000 tons of lignin. If the alcohol is valued at 20 cents per gallon or the protein feed at soya meal prices and the lignin considered of no value, either plant would pay operating costs, interest on the investment, and 10 percent amortization, and still leave a profit. If the lignin is sold for 2 cents per pound, all the above charges could be paid, the alcohol or protein feed given away, and seemingly a very good profit realized.

Lignin, the principal by-product of wood-sugar production, is a chemist's Chinese puzzle. It is predicted that when chemists are able to reveal the secret of lignin a multitude of products will be produced from it, approaching possibly the variety produced from coal. As a fuel, it burns ash free with a heat value of good coal. From it is now produced a plastic which is used in battery boxes as a substitute for hard rubber. By chemical treatment, tanning materials, cosmetics, dyes, vanilla flavoring, heavy oils, and phenol, a critical material in the plastic industry, are produced. Insulating and fireproof building materials, road binders, and fertilizers are other products.

How much alcohol or food protein and other desirable materials are we losing annually by failing to use our wood waste? Our annual waste in sawdust alone is about 25,000,000 tons. Sawdust is only a small portion of total waste. If all our wood waste were processed, we could produce 4,000,000,000 gallons of alcohol, or 16,000,000 tons of food protein, plus 20,000,000 tons of lignin.

Fortunately the Office of Production Research and Development has taken preliminary steps toward the development of wood sugar production in the United States. Under their authorization a small pilot plant is ready to begin operations to furnish a basis for the construction of large plants in this country. It is not an idle dream that at some future date, when our supplies of oil and coal are exhausted, we may have to look to our forests for many of the things we derive from those resources.

Our forests are already the heaviest contributor of raw material to our war effort. In 1942, 120,000,000 tons of wood were used as compared to 100,000,000 tons of steel. For the military services, wood has found utility in nearly 1,500 items made wholly or partially of wood. Vast quantities of plywood have found their way into all types of military construction. The finest airplane propellors are made out of "compreg," which is a plastic impregnated laminated compressed wood developed by the Forest Products Research Laboratory of the Forest Service. Wood pulp plastic impregnated products for airplane construction have been produced, having weight and strength similar to aluminum, and having other desirable properties not possessed by the metal. Wood cellulose is one of the principal raw materials for the production of rayon, which has many wartime uses.

In summary, it is clearly apparent that our forests are one of our most important resources, not only to our wartime, but to our peacetime, economy. It is a resource, the utility of which we have barely begun to employ. We should not allow false economies to prevent us from adequately protecting our forest resources against fires and insects. We should be intelligent and foresighted enough to realize the loss to our Nation in the continuing waste of 67 percent of our wood supply. In view of our national emergency and our prospective food shortages, we should double our efforts to protect this vital resource and to utilize this waste material to insure our Nation against a real emergency in our food needs.

The use of our forests for building material and fuel is common and well known. I think I have just sketched for you a new and extremely vital future use of our forest areas. Now I want to call your attention to the fact that these great material assets of ours must be protected, not only from our foreign enemies, but from normal human carelessness. If these forests are burned, and they are all too susceptible to loss by fire, we cannot have them either for building material, alcohol, or stock food.

I call your attention to the fact that there is now pending before the Congress an appropriation bill for the Department of Agriculture, which, as it was passed by the House, does not carry a sufficient appropriation for emergency forest-fire protection. Hearings are now being held by the Senate Appropriations Committee, and I am hopeful that a suitable amount for this purpose will be included in the bill. In conclusion, I strongly urge that the Members of the Congress give full consideration to the vital part our forests must play in our wartime and future economy, and do everything possible to save them from fire.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MERRITT, for the remainder of the week, on account of official business.

To Mr. KING, for an indefinite period, on account of official business.

To Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON (at the request of Mr. MAHON) for May 25 and May 26, on account of important official business.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 24 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, May 26, 1943, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON THE PUBLIC LANDS

There will be a meeting of the Committee on the Public Lands at 10 o'clock a. m. Wednesday, May 26, 1943, for the purpose of considering H. R. 2241. To abolish the Jackson Hole Monument—Wyoming, and such other matters as may properly come before the committee.

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

There will be a meeting of the subcommittee on investigation of restrictions on brand names and newsprint of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, at 10 a. m., Wednesday, May 26, 1943.

Business to be considered: Public hearings pursuant to House Resolution 98 by Congressman HALLECK.

COMMITTEE ON THE CIVIL SERVICE

This committee will hold public hearings on investigation of civilian employment in governmental departments, Wednesday, May 26, 1943, at 10 o'clock a. m. in room 246, House Office Building.

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS

There will be a meeting of the committee at 10 a. m. on Wednesday, May 26, Thursday, May 27, and Friday, May 28, 1943, for consideration of housing bills, in the caucus room, House Office Building.

COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION

The Committee on Immigration and Naturalization will hold hearings at 10 a. m. on Wednesday, May 26, and Thursday, May 27, 1943, on all bills dealing with the Chinese Exclusion Act—H. R. 1882, H. R. 2309, H. R. 2428, and H. R. 2429.

COMMITTEE ON THE MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold a public hearing Thursday, May 27, 1943, at 10 o'clock a. m., on H. R. 2750, to amend section 353 (b) of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, relating to experience of radio operators.

The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold a public hearing on Thursday, June 10, 1943, at 10 o'clock a. m., on H. R. 2731, to facilitate the award and payment of just compensation for property requisitioned under the authority of section 902 (a) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, and for other purposes.

COMMITTEE ON FLOOD CONTROL

The Flood Control Committee will conduct hearings on flood-control reports submitted by the Chief of Engineers since the passage of the Flood Control Act of August 18, 1941, and on amendments to existing law. Flood-control projects for post-war construction will be among the most satisfactory public works, and the committee plans an adequate backlog of sound flood-control projects available for construction following the war.

1. Tuesday, June 1: Maj. Gen. Eugene Reybold, Chief of Engineers, will open the hearings with any statements and recommendations he desires to submit covering national flood control and the projects that should be included in the bill to be reported, especially as they are related to national defense and as they will be important following the existing war to provide sound flood-control projects and desirable public works. General Reybold is now on an airplane tour of inspection of the flood areas and will submit a first-hand report covering recent major floods along the Missouri, Arkansas, White, Mississippi, Illinois, Wabash, Ohio, and other rivers in the recent flood areas. He will be followed by Gen. Thomas M. Robins, Assistant Chief of Engineers, who has previously advised the Flood Control Committee during hearings and who will also appear before the committee and submit his views and discuss generally the projects that have been favorably reported since the hearings were conducted on H. R. 4911, Seventy-seventh Congress, first session, reported on June 9, 1941, which became the Flood Control Act of August 18, 1941. Col. George R. Goethals, Chief of the Flood Control Branch, Office of Chief of Engineers, will attend the hearings and will furnish to the members of the committee in detail any and all available information respecting the said projects on which favorable reports have been submitted by the Chief of Engineers.

The district engineers and the division engineers have furnished to the Chief of Engineers data and information respecting major floods since August 18, 1941, and particularly with respect to recent major floods in the various drainage basins of the country, which will be submitted to the committee.

2. Wednesday, June 2: General Reybold, General Robins, Colonel Goethals, other representatives of the Office of Chief of Engineers, and proponents on projects for the New England region including the Connecticut and Merrimac Rivers and the Middle Atlantic region including New York, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey.

3. Thursday, June 3: General Reybold, General Robins, Colonel Goethals, other representatives of the Office of Chief of Engineers, and proponents on projects in the upper and lower Ohio River and tributaries, and on projects of the South Atlantic region including rivers flowing into the Atlantic Ocean and Gulf of Mexico east of the Mississippi River.

4. Friday, June 4: General Reybold, General Robins, Colonel Goethals, other representatives of the Office of Chief of Engineers, and proponents on projects along the Missouri River and tributaries and the upper Mississippi River and the Great Lakes region.

5. Tuesday, June 8: General Reybold, General Robins, Colonel Goethals, other representatives of the Office of Chief of Engineers, and proponents on projects in the lower Mississippi River and tributaries including the Arkansas and White Rivers, and on rivers flowing into the Gulf west of the Mississippi River, and in the Western Rocky Mountain region including Texas and Colorado, and in the Pacific Northwest region including the Willamette River and the Columbia River and tributaries.

6. Wednesday, June 9: General Reybold, General Robins, Colonel Goethals, other representatives of the Office of Chief of Engineers, and proponents on projects in the Los Angeles area and in the State of California, including the Sacramento, San Joaquin, and Kern River Valleys, and on projects in other regions and in other parts of the United States.

7. Thursday, June 10: Representatives of the Department of Agriculture and the Bureau of Reclamation, and other governmental agencies.

8. Friday, June 11: Senators and Representatives of Congress.

NOTICE

The Members of the House and Senate have been circularized twice for information relative to members of their families in the armed services.

If any Members have failed to furnish this information or have become eligible for membership in the Congressional War Parents Association since, will they please notify either the gentlewoman from Ohio [Mrs. BOLTON], president of the association, or Senator BRIDGES, secretary, furnishing the necessary information immediately.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

436. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the fiscal year 1944 in the form of an amendment to th Budget for the Office of Civilian Defense, changing the estimate from $5,949,550 to $5,746,522, and reducing the limitation on traveling expenses by $35,000 (H. Doc. No. 207); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

437. A letter from the Attorney General, transmitting a report stating all of the facts and pertinent provisions of law in the cases of 412 individuals whose deportation has been suspended for more than 6 months (H. Doc. No. 208); to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization and ordered to be printed.

438. A letter from the Director of Selective Service, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to amend section 4 of the act of December 29, 1941, so as to make the provisions of said act applicable to officers or employees certifying to pay rolls of the Selective Service System for payment by Army disbursing officers; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

By Mr. ROBERTSON:

H. R. 2804. A bill for the relief of Ruth E. P. Phillips; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. REECE of Tennessee:

H. R. 2805. A bill for the relief of Robert Judson McGarry; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WADSWORTH:

H. R. 2806. A bill for the relief of Hugh M. Gregory; to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

887. By Mr. ANGELL: Petitions of certain citizens of Portland, Oreg., asking for the enactment of House bill 2082; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

888. By Mr. BRYSON: Petition of Anna Spring and 20 citizens of Ohio, urging the enactment of House bill 2082, a measure to reduce absenteeism, conserve manpower, and speed production of materials necessary for the winning of the war, by prohibiting the manufacture, sale, or transportation of alcoholic liquors in the United States for the duration of the war; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

889. Also, petition of Mrs. E. B. Pease and 56 other citizens from Livingston and Glasgow, Mont., favoring the enactment of House bill 2082, a measure to reduce absenteeism, conserve manpower, and speed production of materials necessary for the winning of the war, by prohibiting the manufacture, sale, or transportation of alcoholic liquors in the United States for the duration of the war; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

890. Also, petition of 282 citizens of Pennsylvania, favoring the enactment of House bill 2082, a measure to remove one of the chief causes of absenteeism, to conserve shipping space, and to prevent the waste of untold amounts of money and huge quantities of food, coal, iron, rubber, and gasoline; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

891. Also, petition of Rachel A. Hunt and 25 other citizens of Pasadena, Calif., favoring the enactment of House bill 2082, a measure to reduce absenteeism, conserve manpower, and speed production of materials necessary for the winning of the war, by prohibiting the manufacture, sale, or transportation of alcoholic liquors in the United States for the duration of the war; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

892. Also, petition of Mrs. Jean P. Lincoln and 42 other citizens of Athens, Pa., urging the enactment of House bill 2082, a measure to reduce absenteeism, conserve manpower, and speed production of materials necessary for the winning of the war, by prohibiting the manufacture, sale, or transportation of alcoholic liquors in the United States for the duration of the war; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

893. Also, petition of Florence S. Bergin and 97 other citizens of Beaverton, Oreg., urging the enactment of House bill 2082, a measure to reduce absenteeism, conserve manpower, and speed production of materials necessary for the winning of the war, by prohibiting the manufacture, sale, or transportation of alcoholic liquors in the United States for the duration of the war; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

894. Also, petition of the First Scandinavian Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Chicago, Ill., urging the enactment of House bill 2082, a measure to reduce absenteeism, conserve manpower, and speed production of materials necessary for the winning of the war, by prohibiting the manufacture, sale, or transportation of alcoholic liquors in the United States for the duration of the war; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

895. Also, petition of Mrs. Harold M. Auld and 84 citizens of Oakdale, Ill., urging the enactment of House bill 2082, a measure to reduce absenteeism, conserve manpower, and speed production of materials necessary for the winning of the war, by prohibiting the manufacture, sale, or transportation of alcoholic liquors in the United States for the duration of the war; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

896. Also, petition of Annie Hargrove and 59 citizens of Equality, Ill., urging the enactment of House bill 2082, a measure to reduce absenteeism, conserve manpower, and speed production of materials necessary for the winning of the war, by prohibiting the manufacture, sale, or transportation of alcoholic liquors in the United States for the duration of the war; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

897. Also, petition of a committee of 50 of Buffalo, N. Y., urging the enactment of House bill 2082, a measure to reduce absenteeism, conserve manpower, and speed production of materials necessary for the winning of the war, by prohibiting the manufacture, sale, or transportation of alcoholic liquors in the United States for the duration of the war; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

898. Also, petition of Mrs. Jerome J. Rosenstiel and 20 citizens of Freeport, Ill., urging the enactment of House bill 2082, a measure to reduce absenteeism, conserve manpower, and speed production of materials necessary for the winning of the war, by prohibiting the manufacture, sale, or transportation of alcoholic liquors in the United States for the duration of the war; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

899. Also, petition of Frank Pyatt and 20 citizens of Pinckneyville, Ill., urging the enactment of House bill 2082, a measure to reduce absenteeism, conserve manpower, and speed production of materials necessary for the winning of the war, by prohibiting the manufacture, sale, or transportation of alcoholic liquors in the United States for the duration of the war; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

900. Also, petition of 124 citizens of Elkhart, Ind., urging the enactment of House bill 2082, a measure to reduce absenteeism, conserve manpower, and speed production of materials necessary for the winning of the war, by prohibiting the manufacture, sale, or transportation of alcoholic liquors in the United States for the duration of the war; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

901. Also, petition of Mae Whitford and 50 citizens of Alfred Station, N. Y., urging the enactment of House bill 2082, a measure to reduce absenteeism, conserve manpower, and speed production of materials necessary for the winning of the war, by prohibiting the manufacture, sale, or transportation of alcoholic liquors in the United States for the duration of the war; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

902. Also, petition of Mary Etta Watts and 220 citizens of Richmond, Va., urging the enactment of House bill 2082, a measure to reduce absenteeism, conserve manpower, and speed production of materials necessary for the winning of the war, by prohibiting the manufacture, sale, or transportation of alcoholic liquors in the United States for the duration of the war; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

903. Also, petition of Mrs. Norman A. Black and 25 citizens of Portland, Maine, urging the enactment of House bill 2082, a measure to reduce absenteeism, conserve manpower, and speed production of materials necessary for the wininng of the war, by prohibiting the manufacture, sale, or transportation of alcoholic liquors in the United States for the duration of the war; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LAMBERTSON: Petition of Mrs. Jesse Lines and 11 other citizens of Sabetha, Kans., urging passage of House bill 2082, to reduce absenteeism, conserve manpower, and speed production of materials necessary for the winning of the war, by prohibiting the manufacture, sale, or transportation of alcoholic liquors in the United States for the duration of the war and until the termination of demobilization; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

924. Also, petition of Alma Sanders and 55 other citizens of McLouth, Kans., and vicinity, urging passage of House bill 2082, to reduce absenteeism, conserve manpower, and speed production of materials necessary for the winning of the war, by prohibiting the manufacture, sale, or transportation of alcoholic liquors in the United States for the duration of the war and until the termination of demobilization; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

925. By Mr. PLOESER: Petition urging the Congress of the United States of America to establish a chiropractic corps in the armed forces; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

926. By Mr. SCHIFFLER: Petition of Joseph A. Lang, adjutant, Col. C. L. Smith Camp, No. 10, Department of West Virginia, United Spanish War Veterans, Fairmont, W. Va., urging the passage of House bill 2350, liberalizing the service pension laws relating to veterans of the War with Spain, the Philippine Insurrection, and the China Relief Expedition, and their dependents; to the Committee on Pensions.

927. Also, petition of Charles W. Bruemmer and a number of citizens from the Wheeling area of West Virginia, urging the establishment of a chiropractic corps in the armed forces now; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

928. By Mr. CASE: Petition of Mrs. V. C. Swander and 102 other citizens of Rapid City, S. Dak., urging Congress to pass House bill 2082, to prohibit the manufacture, sale, or transportation of alcoholic liquors in the United States for the duration of the war and until the termination of the demobilization; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

929. Also, petition of Mrs. Harry Blunt and 21 members of the Congregational Church of Belle Fourche, S. Dak., urging that Congress pass House bill 2082, to prohibit the manufacture, sale, or transportation of alcoholic liquors for the duration of the war and until the termination of the demobilization; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, MAY 26, 1943

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, unto whom all hearts are open, all desires known, and from whom no secrets are hid, cleanse the thoughts of our hearts by the inspiration of Thy Holy Spirit that we may perfectly love Thee and worthily magnify Thy Holy Name. Amen.

The reading of the Journal of the proceedings of yesterday, without objection, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

RECESS

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to House Resolution 231, the Chair declares the House to be in recess for the purpose of holding memorial services as arranged by the Committee on Memorials.

MEMORIAL SERVICES

The Speaker of the House of Representatives presided.

The Chaplain, Dr. James Shera Montgomery, D. D.:

May the words of our mouths and the meditations of our hearts be acceptable in Thy sight, O Lord, our strength and our Redeemer.

The Lord is my Shepherd; I shall not want.

He maketh me to lie down in green pastures; He leadeth me beside the still waters.

He restoreth my soul; He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for His name's sake.

Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil; for Thou art with me; Thy rod and Thy staff, they comfort me.

Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies; Thou anointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over.

Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life: and I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever.

Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin:

And yet I say unto you, That even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these.

Wherefore, if God so clothe the grass of the field, which today is, but tomorrow is cast in the oven, shall He not much more clothe you of little faith?

Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in Me.

In My Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you.

And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto Myself; that where I am, there ye may be also.

Peace, I leave with you, my peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth, give I unto you.

"Yet Love will dream and Faith will trust (Since He who knows our need is just),
That somehow, somewhere, meet we must.
Alas for him who never sees
The stars shine through his cypress trees!
Who, hopeless, lays his dead away,
Nor looks to see the breaking day
Across the mournful marbles play!
Who hath not learned in hours of faith
The truth to flesh and sense unknown
That Life is ever lord of Death,
And Love can never lose its own."

"Still, still with Thee when purple morning breaketh
When the bird waketh, and the shadows flee;
Fairer than morning, lovelier than daylight
Dawns the sweet consciousness, I am with Thee.

"When sinks the soul, subdued by toil, to slumber,
Its closing eyes look up to Thee in prayer
Sweet the repose beneath Thy wings o'er shading,
But sweeter still to wake and find Thee there.

"So shall it be at last in that bright morning,
When the soul waketh and life's shadows flee;
O in that hour, fairer than daylight dawning,
Shall rise the glorious thought, I am with Thee."

Heavenly Father, our minds are arrested as we pause to meditate upon the brevity of this life and the immortality of the human soul. Again the silver cord is loosened, the golden bowl is broken, the pitcher at the fountain, and the wheel at the cistern. As life and death walk the ways of earth, we rejoice that the pulse-throb of eternity is mighty within us and that mortality cannot kill the unconquerable soul. Accept our deepest praise for Thy providential care which towers above the horizons of human need, revealing the ultimate blessing to those who pass this way. O God, would that our lips were nigh to full speech, that faith eternal and hope wondering and pensive could give expression to their fullest and most secret joys.

The workman dies, but the work goes on; today we give grateful tribute to those whose brotherly companionship we have shared. They rose to high levels of conscientious thinking, of patriotic devotion, and have bequeathed to their generation those strong, manly virtues, enduring and altogether worthy of emulation. Blessed Lord, give us courage in all that is good, aversion to all that is evil, and power to resist all temptation. To all who are in sorrow and all who tarry here, be like music floating through the highlands, like a sweet fragrance wafted over the valleys, and ever like a soft shaft of light breaking through the clouds and Thine shall be the praise forever—through Christ, our Saviour. Amen.

Doris Doe sang There Is No Death (Geoffrey O'Hara).

ROLL OF DECEASED MEMBERS

Mr. Irving W. Swanson, reading clerk of the House, read the following roll:

FRANK HENRY BUCK, Third Congressional District of California: Born September 23, 1887; lawyer; businessman; fruit grower and farmer; received degree of bachelor of letters, University of California, 1908, and degree of bachelor of laws, Harvard University, 1911; delegate to the Democratic National Conventions in 1928, 1936, and 1940; Member of the Seventy-third, Seventy-fourth, Seventy-fifth, Seventy-sixth, and Seventy-seventh Congresses; died September 17, 1942.

PHILIP ALLEN BENNETT, Sixth Congressional District of Missouri: Born March 5, 1881; educator; editor and publisher; businessman; graduated from the Springfield (Mo.) Normal and Business College, 1902; delegate to the Republican National Convention in 1912; member of the State senate, 1921–25; served as Lieutenant Governor of Missouri, 1925–29; Member of the Seventy-seventh Congress and Member-elect of the Seventy-eighth Congress; died December 7, 1942.

HARRY LANE ENGLEBRIGHT, Second Congressional District of California: Born January 2, 1884; mining engineer; attended grammar and high schools and the University of California; mineral inspector for the field division of the general land office and engineer for the State Conservation Commission of California, 1911–14; member of the American Mining Congress; Member of the Sixty-ninth to Seventy-eighth Congresses; served as minority whip, Seventy-third to Seventy-eighth Congresses; died May 13, 1943.

Mrs. NORTON, a Representative from the State of New Jersey, standing in front of the Speaker's rostrum, placed a memorial rose in a vase as the name of each deceased Member was read by the Clerk.

Then followed 1 minute of devotional silence.

Doris Doe sang, Goin' Home (Anton Dvorak).

Hon. CLIFTON A. WOODRUM, a Representative from the State of Virginia, delivered the following address:

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, once again we meet to bow in reverence and awe to the inevitable visitation of the Grim Reaper. Since we last met upon such an occasion he has been in our midst—before we shall meet again he will return—not once, but again and again—to the great, the humble, the rich and the poor, the old and the young. To each he shall return in his own appointed time.

Leaves have their time to fall,
And flowers to wither at the north wind's breath;
And stars to set,
But thou hast all seasons for thine own, oh Death!

And so on this day of memory, we recall with deep and tender emotion those colleagues whom we have "loved and lost awhile."

This ceremony is essentially one of deep emotion and feeling. As we gather here the years pass before us in panorama—friends and dearly loved ones—great, warm souls that brightened our lives as they passed by. There they go, one by one. Each with his own individuality, his charm, his spirit, his frailties, perhaps. They were our friends and companions. Their lives and experiences furnished the varicolored strands that when woven into the completed form have made the fabric of life. As each life has touched our own, there has been left some tender thought, some sweet recollection.

This occasion must impress us with the inevitable certainty of time—the ticking clock, the chimes in the tower, the fast falling pages from the calendar upon the wall, the bending form, the faltering touch, the failing step. These tell us that time marches on and takes his passing toll.

In the year just passed, three of our colleagues have answered the last roll call. Each in his own appointed time heard the fall of the gavel, and the stern voice of the Speaker, "The time of the gentleman has expired." We miss them today.

In addition to these comrades, we have lost from this body two of the most distinguished and colorful colaborers—Joseph J. Sinnott and William Tyler Page. For many, many years these two distinguished public servants wrought and labored in the service of their country. Today we salute their memory. Their names deserve and shall have a place high on the scroll of those who have rendered valuable public service.

As we turn back the pages of memory and recall that never-ending throng that all too quickly passes through these portals, I think we must often feel that we do not embrace the full opportunity to really know and appreciate each other. We are so busy—official acts are so demanding—we just haven't the time. Ah, my comrades, do we not often in our mad rush day in and day out, miss some of the real solace and joy of this service by not knowing each other better?

We nodded as we passed each day
And smiled and went along our way;
I knew his name, and he knew mine,
But neither of us made a sign
That we possessed a common tie;
We barely spoke as we passed by.

How fine he was I never guessed.
The splendid soul within his breast
I never saw. From me was hid
The manly kindly deeds he did.
His gentle ways I didn't know
Or I'd have claimed him long ago.

Then trouble came to me one day
And he was first to come and say
The cheering words I longed to hear;
He offered help, and standing near
I felt our lives in sorrow blend,
My neighbor had become my friend.

How many smiles from day to day
I've missed along my narrow way;
How many kindly words I've lost,
What joy has my indifference cost!
This glorious friend that now I know,
Would have been friendly years ago.

The bud but very little shows
To tell the beauty of the rose,
And him we greet in passing by
With scarce a nod, the day we sigh,
May blossom as the storms descend
With all the beauty of a friend.

—Edgar A. Guest.

As name after name of our departed colleagues has been called here today, our memories have been traveling back to many scenes and incidents connected with our associations and their service in this body. We felt the impression of his activities and watched his labor in the interest of the cause he espoused. But, my brethren, imperceptibly at times, silently often, but always surely and inevitably, the passing years take their toll. Under the heavy load and strain we saw that once agile form bend under its burden; the eye that once sparkled with ambition grow dim with the strain, and the raven locks yield to the biting frosts of passing winters; and one day we were saddened by the news that this friend, this comrade, this colaborer, had answered the last roll call, had embarked upon life's greatest adventure. We had witnessed, my friends, the drama and tragedy of life, with its sunshine and shadows, its hopes and disappointments, its victories and defeats, its life and death.

There is no more honorable mission than to be chosen to represent a constituency in the United States House of Representatives. It is an honor that may well be coveted by our fellow citizens. The Congress is the most distinctly representative legislative body in the world. Here we find literally and actually a cross section of the American people. Every school of thought, every political philosophy has in this Hall its representative, as it has the right to have. If we at times seem to be in confusion and wandering in a wilderness of conflicting objectives, then it is largely because the American people are unsettled and undetermined. This Congress is just what the American people wish it to be. Individually and collectively, its membership compares most favorably with any other group of American citizens. Upon the roster of the Congress we find the names of men who have been leaders in the business, professional, and the commercial life of the Nation as well as those who have served their communities and their States and the Nation in places of high honor and great responsibility, both the judicial and the executive branches of government. Every type and every calling is represented here. Let us not forget for an instant that every Member of this House holds his commission only because a majority of the citizens of his district, entitled to suffrage, desired that he represent them. He will be kept here or retired, rewarded or condemned, according to whether that same constituency shall feel that he has served them well or ill. This is representative government in its truest sense. So long as that continues, the Republic is safe. It seems to be a popular pastime to ridicule and criticize the national legislative body. It is always open season on Congress. I suppose this is no different today from what it has been in other days; nor do I make any complaint. Undoubtedly, we often deserve and merit criticism.

Unquestionably, the casual visitor in our galleries, noting a scarcity of attendance, a lack of interest, and oftentimes bedlam and confusion will form a very erroneous and unjustifiable opinion of this body and its work. He perhaps has not taken into consideration the fact that the speeches being made upon the floor, under the rule of general debate, have little relation to the legislation under consideration, and that the particular bill or resolution, which will ultimately pass, and probably without contest, has been the subject of weeks and months of careful thought and patient study by a responsible committee of the House. He does not take into account the fact that the real work, the determining battles are in committee work, and that often the issues are settled before the legislation comes up for consideration. There may be found in the Membership some of the most conscientious and hard-working men I have ever known—men who literally grind out and spend their very life's energy in an effort to serve. We are made up of just plain human beings, with all of the frailties and imperfections of the race. I do say, however, that the Membership of this House individually are men of honor and capacity, striving, according to their own individual opinions and the understanding that they have to serve their constituents and their country; and I say very deliberately and emphatically that if you give this House the true facts, and sufficient time for deliberate and orderly consideration, its ultimate determinations will generally be in keeping with American ideals and for the best interests of our people.

As I meditated upon this occasion, my mind went back 18 years to a day when a great man stood upon the Speaker's rostrum, about to relinquish voluntarily the high robes and office of the Speaker of the House of Representatives. The day was March 4, 1925, and Mr. Speaker Gillett, of Massachusetts, was leaving the House of Representatives after 32 years of service to accept a commission as a Member of the United States Senate. Today, as I have done before, I commend to you, my colleagues, the entire remarks of Mr. Speaker Gillett on that occasion. For the purposes of this ceremony, however, I desire to quote briefly from his address:

It is the fashion to sneer at Congress, as it always has been the fashion, and I have no doubt always will be, because Congress is expected by legislation to put into concrete and definite form the hazy and contradictory ideals of the people, and as realization generally falls short of expectation, "as man never is but always to be blest," so congressional action must always be disappointing. * * *

This House becomes in time a pretty infallible judge of a Member's merit. It learns to appraise motives. It discriminates between the modest men who with sincerity are trying to render service and the men who are working only for display and self-advancement.

And it is refreshing to note that although the home folks may often be deceived by the fake statesman who is always playing to the gallery, yet the sincere and industrious and modest man has his recognition and reward. I would deem the genuine esteem and respect and confidence of this body the highest tribute a man could earn. * * *

You may remember when first elected Speaker I said that I had attained the goal of my desires and my ambition was completely satisfied. I feel exactly now as I did then. Thanks to you, my friends, my enjoyment of it has been equal to my anticipation. I would rather be Speaker of this House than hold any other position in the world, and it was no ambition or initiative of my own that led me to relinquish it.

Such, my friends, were the sober reflections of a great man who had rendered a great service to his country.

Service in the Congress of the United States at this critical hour carries a great responsibility. Decisions are being made that may vitally affect the very perpetuity of our institutions. This service calls for courage.

I sought from Socrates, the sage,
Whose thoughts will live through every age
A motto to direct my life,
A hero make me in the strife
Socrates said, "Know thyself."

To know myself would not suffice,
To make me truly great and wise,
I sought Aurelius, good and great,
Wise ruler of the Roman State—
Aurelius said, "Control thyself."

O Nazarene, Thou who didst give Thy life
That men might truly live—
What motto dost Thou leave for me,
That I may truly follow Thee?
The Master said "Deny thyself."

Deny thyself—self-sacrifice, self-abnegation. A willingness to spend and be spent for one's country. A willingness, if need be, to lay our political ambitions upon the altar of sacrifice. That is the call of the hour in this body. It matters not too much how long I serve here. It may matter very much what I do while here. May we not upon this occasion, when we pay tribute to our friends of yesterday, resolve in our hearts to rededicate our efforts to this great job at hand.

Time moves on apace, my friends. Seasons come and go, but a quick swing of the horolog of time, and other voices, will resound in this sacred Chamber.

Those friends of yesteryear have gone—on what voyage, or to what shore, I know not. But I am a follower of the faith that believes they have reached a harbor where there is anchorage safe from storm and gale. Toward that harbor of peace and rest, all of us do devoutly turn our eyes.

Sometime at eve, when the tide is low,
I shall slip my moorings and sail away,
With no response to the friendly hail
Of kindred craft in the busy bay.
In the silent hush of the twilight pale,
When the night swoops down to embrace the day,
And the voices call in the water's flow—
Sometime at eve, when the tide is low,
I shall slip my moorings and sail away.

Through purple shades that darkly trail
O'er the ebbing tide of the unknown sea,
I shall fare me away with a dip of sail
And a ripple of waters to tell the tale
Of a lonely voyager, sailing away
To mystic isles, where at anchor lay
The craft of those who have sailed before,
O'er the unknown sea to the unseen shore.

A few who have watched me sail away
Will miss my craft from the busy bay;
Some friendly barks that were anchored near,
Some loving souls that my heart held dear,
In silent sorrow will drop a tear.
But I shall have peacefully furled my sail
In moorings sheltered from storm and gale,
And greeted the friends who have sailed before
O'er the unknown sea to the unseen shore.

Hon. EVERETT M. DIRKSEN, a Representative from the State of Illinois, delivered the following address:

DAY FOR REMEMBRANCE

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, we meet for remembrance.

What a divine endowment it is.

It is one of the most ennobling attributes of mind and spirit.

What tragedy if we could not remember.

Suppose each moment and the substance of each moment were blacked out when it had been spent on the wings of time.

How impoverished would be the spirit if we could not recall the echoes of some lilting refrain when the last note had died away?

If we could not recall the refreshing melody of some stirring hymn which gave fire to the soul and resolve to the heart?

If we could not recall the tenderness of a caressing hand on a fevered brow?

If we could not recall a soft whisper of long ago that spoke of love and hope?

If we could not recall a gentle voice which was like a spring-scented zephyr to a weary spirit?

If we could recall no golden smile, which like a lovely sunburst, warmed all within its aura?

If we could not recall a noble deed, the very doing of which brought a new faith in the dignity and goodness of man?

If we could not conjure up the gracious fellowship of a good man, whether great or humble, whose very goodness was like an elixir to ebbing hope,

If we had no power to reach into the inexhaustible storehouse of remembrance to order forth a gaily caparisoned cavalcade of sweet and gracious and lovely memories of men and deeds, smiles and laughter, of melodies and voices, of tenderness and goodness to rekindle waning hope, surcharge faith, and make plain the continuity of past and present, of present and future?

Remembrance is the light which makes the way ahead less tortuous and lonely.

It makes us kin to the endless pattern of the Republic.

It makes us a fixed part of the golden tapestry of mankind, for in that tapestry we too have been privileged to weave a golden thread.

As we meet for remembrance of those who for a brief time have slipped away from this Chamber, we pay testimony to that divine gift of memory which makes us a part of all that has gone before, and gives hope that we shall be a part of all that comes after.

THE QUEST FOR ASSURANCE

There can be no memorial without the living and the dead.

What shall we the living find in this memorial?

We can find comfort, faith, hope, and inspiration.

Since time's dawn, men have sought comfort in the hour of transition from the known to the unknown.

The afflicted Job, surrounded by Zophar, Bildad, and Eliphaz, contemplated the end of all things and then phrased the deathless question: "If a man die, shall he live again?"

From the unlettered cave man to the scholarly philosopher has come that eternal question.

It is echoed at every graveside.

It tumbles through the thoughts of all the world at Eastertide, when the earth is touched with the sweet breath of resurrection and men ask, "If a man die, shall he live again?"

COMFORT

A swelling faith choruses the answer.

Today, in remembrance, we find comfort in the conviction that our colleagues live, and live again.

They whisper to us from the crannies and vaulted spaces of this Chamber.

Their hushed whispers respond to every calling of the roll.

They are a deathless part of the endless stream of our national life.

Consider the host which has gone before—which has marched through the legislative design of this Republic!

Consider the golden stars, woven in deathless luster upon the flag of this House by the hand of time and what pride it evokes in the continuity of the Republic.

Stars are there for Madison, Monroe, and Randolph.

Stars are there for Muhlenberg and Baldwin.

Stars are there for Harrison and Breckinridge.

Stars are there for Calhoun, Clay, and Webster.

Stars are there for Sherman and Blaine, for Lovejoy and Stephens.

Stars are there for Hoar and Garfield and McKinley.

A burnished star is there for Lincoln.

Stars are there for Reed and Gillette, for Crisp and Clark, for Wadsworth and Cochran.

Stars are there for Underwood and Payne, for Mann and Madden, for James and Sherley, for Vreeland and Longworth.

Stars are there for Rainey, Byrns, and Bankhead.

Stars are there for each generation.

Short days ago time's hand has woven other stars upon the banner of this body—the stars of FRANK BUCK, PHILIP BENNETT, and HARRY ENGLEBRIGHT.

They are a part of the imperishable genius of the Nation.

Each in his own way has impressed himself upon the institutions and the welfare of this our common country.

With delicate tracery, each has woven his golden thread upon the design of our living and forsook the loom only for a brief while when touched by the moving finger.

How enriching to the spirit to find comfort in remembrance of them.

From this remembrance comes belief in the abiding truth that human personality is indestructible.

It is but transmuted into a new and living force at a spiritual level.

The Creator creates all and destroys nothing.

From a plane I have looked down upon Pentagon and Panama, upon Empire State and Mount Rushmore, upon Boulder Dam, and T. V. A.

What massive monuments they are to human ingenuity.

Yet basically no part of these was created by the hand of man.

Man but took what the mystic force of creation provided, transmuted it into new forms, new shapes, new compounds.

None of it did he create.

None of it can he destroy.

Stone may be wrenched from stone, but still they remain stones.

Wood and fiber, metal and alloy, may be burned or consumed, but it is only transmuted into a new force, a new energy.

The falling leaf becomes the plant food for a lovely flower.

Thus does nature follow her own cycle of indestructibility.

Who can believe that human personality, fashioned in the image of the Creator can be destroyed, can be lost, can be blacked out and extinguished forever?

Everywhere about us is the shining proof that they live to perfect the work which they have undertaken and thus in the hour of remembrance we find comfort.

RESURRECTION IS THE RULE OF LIFE

Resurrection is the rule of life.

Look from the window of this Capitol upon the magnificence of nature and there find the answer to Job's question.

But a brief while ago, the earth was brown and sere.

And lo! there came the mystical magic of the resurrection.

It is the miracle of spring, the irresistible conqueror.

Spring zephyrs caress the inviting bosom of the earth and new life swells.

Trees have been pruned and scrubbed by snow and rain and wind. The sap rises. Swelling buds unfold with dainty leaves. Winter's sleep is over. The new life is at hand.

There comes the grass like a green mantle over all the earth.

Lilac and syringa, hydrangea, and azalea extend their slender arms in suppliance to a mystic power and then comes fulfillment of the promise of new life.

Star flower and wake robin, tulip and pansy, violet and honeysuckle flaunt their majesty upon each passer-by like a colorful salute to departing winter and a new life.

The holiness of beauty is at hand.

In this magnificent panoply there is resurgent hope, a new faith.

Here is the rule of life.

It is the resurrection.

It brings comfort in this hour of remembrance.

As one beholds this majesty of new life in the domain of all nature, can he believe that the end of human personality, of human fellowship, and human endeavor is but a dismal black-out?

Can he believe that the mystic force which sheds its beneficence upon the earth as the sun crosses the vernal equinox, cannot awaken human personality that it might carry on its work at a higher unseen level?

This is the ordered majesty of the universe which brings comfort and affords the answer to the query of Job.

FAITH

In this hour of remembrance, we find precious comfort in the continuity of all things living and in the conviction that dust is not the goal.

But we find something more.

We find a resolute and stimulating faith to carry on in a tumultuous world.

From the first day of the first Congress of the Republic, we have been beset with problems foreign and domestic.

Without precedent or example, our legislative predecessors were confronted with the problem of spelling out the new-found powers of the Constitution.

They saw the Nation expand.

They saw a centrifugal force hurl a growing population toward the Allegehenies, toward the Mississipppi, toward the Rockies, toward the placid Pacific, and saw the frontier close upon itself.

With this expansion came problems of transport and communication, of agriculture and the public domain, of commerce and industry.

They saw the phenomenon of a centripetal force siphon families and individuals into growing centers of population and bring with it problems of subsistence, security, and protection.

In their generation, as in ours, there came for solution the unsolved problems of the Constitution, bringing with them bloody conflict and a more compact Union.

Each of the thousands in that shadowy host who have gone before and for whom a star is fixed upon the banner of this body, met the problems of his own generation, in his own good way and so contributed to the march of national progress.

FRANK BUCK, PHILIP BENNETT, and HARRY ENGLEBRIGHT, each in proportion to his light and talent, fought the good fight. Each met the issues of his day and generation with resolution and courage and so joined that galaxy of redoubtable souls who for more than 150 years have given direction and force to the progress of our country.

Quietly and unobtrusively they labored diligently in the common cause.

From them we find a revitalized faith to carry on and do our share.

These are days for men with faith, with courage, and with vision, who can catch the sound of the universal voice.

The Lord, speaking from the fiery mist to a prostrate Ezekiel, said: "Son of man, stand upon thy feet and I will speak with thee."

With faith born of remembrance, we shall stand boldly upright and carry on.

HOPE

In this hour of remembrance we find comfort and faith. But we find something more. We find hope. It is the greatest of all spiritual forces. How vital it is in a dark hour.

I think of Abraham Lincoln, standing on the balcony of a hotel in Washington watching the troops go by, and then saying to a stripling girl who had been presented to him, "My child, what a world we live in today."

We can reecho that sentiment. What a world we live in today.

There is the tramp of a hundred million booted feet, the drone of planes, the swish of tin fish, and the roar of guns. Millions of young bodies have been bruised to eternal sleep.

The casualty lists are at once messages of glory and of sorrow and despair.

The ordeal of battle brings with it sacrifices, dislocations, and maladjustments, which completely reorder and reshape our daily living.

Like incredulous children, we take account of increasing expenditures, mounting debt, regimentation, and the ever-growing dislocations in our economic structure.

As we envision that future day when the stalwart sons of America return from far-flung battle lines and the healing processes of peace are resumed, we grow apprehensive over the solvency of the world, the integrity of our own institutions, and the perpetuity of the Republic and its traditions.

We are assailed with doubts and fears of the future.

And then in remembrance of those who have gone before, we find hope.

They, too, encountered fears and doubts in other days.

They met each doubt and fear, each problem and situation, with courage and resolve, and the Nation still lives.

The annals of other days are redolent with gloom and despair.

One hundred and six years ago a Louisiana publication observed that "all is darkness, doubt, and despair."

Eighty-five years ago one could have read in Harpers that "Not in the lifetime of most men who read this paper has there ever been so much grave and deep apprehension."

Seventy years ago one could have read in a New York newspaper that "There are those who believe that the days of the Republic are numbered."

Fifty years ago one might have read in a New York editorial that "The perspective of the year is a study of shadow and prevailing gloom."

Thirty-five years ago there appeared in a leading publication the observation that "The ship of state is on the verge of sinking."

Only 5 years ago an editorial stated that "It was a twelvemonth of gloom, uncertainty, and apprehension. Are there still men of good will? Perhaps; but they are hard to find."

Here is the recurring pattern of fear and doubt, spread over 100 years of national life.

But the Nation still lives. And the Nation will live.

From the pages of history and from the fellowship of our beloved colleagues we shall find a stimulating hope to aid us in resolving the doubts of today and the fears of tomorrow.

When conflict becomes wearisome; when the fatigued spirit cries for relief; when faith is bruised and the cup of frustration seems full to overflowing; when the way is dark and the future seems but a yawning void, let us but think of them and of the glorious tradition to which they belong and find a resplendent and invigorating hope with which to meet the problems before us and do our full part to preserve the heritage which is ours.

INSPIRATION

In remembrance we find comfort, we find faith, and we find hope.

But we find something more. It is inspiration.

What would they have us do?

If they could speak from the vastness of their shadowy world, what would they say?

They would with all the fervor which comes from a larger perspective enjoin upon us the defense of freedom as the only true moral climate in which there can be true progress.

They would have us preserve the Republic in a world where the virus of total government is at work.

They would have us requite the sacrifices for freedom abroad with a determined defense of freedom at home.

They would have us search our souls for the way which leads to better living through real brotherhood.

They would have us sternly pursue the moral law and stand on that side which is right and just.

They would have us affirm and reaffirm our courage and capacity to bring about a better world.

They would have us seek enduring peace by giving peace a chance to endure.

They would have us sing God Bless America and work to make it worthy of every blessing.

With rapture born of fervor and high purpose, they would have us say:

Our father's God, to Thee,
Author of liberty,
To Thee we sing.
Long may our land be bright,
With freedom's holy light,
Protect us by Thy might,
Great God, our King.

Doris Doe sang Consolation (S. Webbe).

Taps was sounded by Sgt. William Lamb.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., pronounced the benediction:

The Lord bless you and keep you, the Lord make His face to shine upon you and be gracious unto you, the Lord lift the light of His countenance upon you and give you peace, both now and evermore. Through Jesus Christ, our Lord and our Saviour. Amen.

AFTER RECESS

At the conclusion of the recess, the Speaker called the House to order, and then, pursuant to House Resolution No. 231, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, declared the House adjourned.

ADJOURNMENT

Accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, May 27, 1943, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON THE CIVIL SERVICE

This committee will hold public hearings on investigation of civilian employment in governmental departments, Thursday, May 27, 1943, at 10 o'clock a. m. in room 246, House Office Building.

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS

There will be a meeting of the committee at 10 a. m. on Thursday, May 27, and Friday, May 28, 1943, for consideration of housing bills, in the caucus room, House Office Building.

COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION

The Committee on Immigration and Naturalization will hold hearings at 10 a. m. on Thursday, May 27, 1943, on bills dealing with the Chinese Exclusion Act—H. R. 1882 and H. R. 2309.

COMMITTEE ON THE MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold a public hearing Thursday, May 27, 1943, at 10 o'clock a. m., on H. R. 2750, to amend section 353 (b) of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, relating to experience of radio operators.

The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold a public hearing on Thursday, June 10, 1943, at 10 o'clock a. m., on H. R. 2731, to facilitate the award and payment of just compensation for property requisitioned under the authority of section 902 (a) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, and for other purposes.

COMMITTEE ON FLOOD CONTROL

The Flood Control Committee will conduct hearings on flood-control reports submitted by the Chief of Engineers since the passage of the Flood Control Act of August 18, 1941, and on amendments to existing law. Flood-control projects for post-war construction will be among the most satisfactory public works, and the committee plans an adequate backlog of sound flood-control projects available for construction following the war.

1. Tuesday, June 1: Maj. Gen. Eugene Reybold, Chief of Engineers, will open the hearings with any statements and recommendations he desires to submit covering national flood control and the projects that should be included in the bill to be reported, especially as they are related to national defense and as they will be important following the existing war to provide sound flood-control projects and desirable public works. General Reybold is now on an airplane tour of inspection of the flood areas and will submit a first-hand report covering recent major floods along the Missouri, Arkansas, White, Mississippi, Illinois, Wabash, Ohio, and other rivers in the recent flood areas. He will be followed by Gen. Thomas M. Robins, Assistant Chief of Engineers, who has previously advised the Flood Control Committee during hearings and who will also appear before the committee and submit his views and discuss generally the projects that have been favorably reported since the hearings were conducted on H. R. 4911, Seventy-seventh Congress, first session, reported on June 9, 1941, which became the Flood Control Act of August 18, 1941. Col. George R. Goethals, Chief of the Flood Control Branch, Office of Chief of Engineers, will attend the hearings and will furnish to the members of the committee in detail any and all available information respecting the said projects on which favorable reports have been submitted by the Chief of Engineers.

The district engineers and the division engineers have furnished to the Chief of Engineers data and information respecting major floods since August 18, 1941, and particularly with respect to recent major floods in the various drainage basins of the country, which will be submitted to the committee.

2. Wednesday, June 2: General Reybold, General Robins, Colonel Goethals, other representatives of the Office of Chief of Engineers, and proponents on projects for the New England region, including the Connecticut and Merrimac Rivers, and the Middle Atlantic region, including New York, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey.

3. Thursday, June 3: General Reybold, General Robins, Colonel Goethals, other representatives of the Office of Chief of Engineers, and proponents on projects in the upper and lower Ohio River and tributaries, and on projects of the South Atlantic region, including rivers flowing into the Atlantic Ocean and Gulf of Mexico east of the Mississippi River.

4. Friday, June 4: General Reybold, General Robins, Colonel Goethals, other representatives of the Office of Chief of Engineers, and proponents on projects along the Missouri River and tributaries and the upper Mississippi River and the Great Lakes region.

5. Tuesday, June 8: General Reybold, General Robins, Colonel Goethals, other representatives of the Office of Chief of Engineers, and proponents on projects in the lower Mississippi River and tributaries, including the Arkansas and White Rivers, and on rivers flowing into the Gulf west of the Mississippi River, and in the western Rocky Mountain region, including Texas and Colorado, and in the Pacific Northwest region, including the Willamette River and the Columbia River and tributaries.

6. Wednesday, June 9: General Reybold, General Robins, Colonel Goethals, other representatives of the Office of Chief of Engineers, and proponents on projects in the Los Angeles area and in the State of California, including the Sacramento, San Joaquin, and Kern River Valleys, and on projects in other regions and in other parts of the United States.

7. Thursday, June 10: Representatives of the Department of Agriculture and the Bureau of Reclamation, and other governmental agencies.

8. Friday, June 11: Senators and Representatives of Congress.

NOTICE

The Members of the House and Senate have been circularized twice for information relative to members of their families in the armed services.

If any Members have failed to furnish this information or have become eligible for membership in the Congressional War Parents Association since, will they please notify either the gentlewoman from Ohio [Mrs. BOLTON], president of the association, or Senator BRIDGES, secretary, furnishing the necessary information immediately.

SENATE

THURSDAY, MAY 27, 1943

(Legislative day of Monday, May 24, 1943)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father God, open to us, we pray Thee, the gates of the morning as at its swinging portals we bow here at this wayside shrine of Thy grace, for these are troublous times; the margin of our inner strength seems often perilously low; we stand in dire need of courage and fortitude and stability. Grant us now the grace of a quiet heart and an humble mind. With Thy light upon our ways send us forth contrite, forgiven, and cleansed.

May the gates of the morning shut out the failures and mistakes of the yesterdays—the concern for transient and trifling things which have so often, we confess, turned our minds from high pursuits and set our hearts upon unworthy ends. Save us from spoiling the music of this new day by cherished hates, remembered slights, and corroding resentments. Let no unguarded word of ours bruise the rightful self-respect of any traveler by our side. As we turn to our waiting tasks may the love of friends, the confidence of those who believe in us, the inner vision of the soul, the spur of conscience, and the commanding call of goodness be the high white stars to lead us on. So may we follow the gleam until the gates of the morning open into the light of the eternal day. In the Redeemer's Name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. HILL, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Monday, May 24, 1943, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS

A letter from the Director of the Selective Service System, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend section 4 of the act of December 29, 1941, so as to make the provisions of said act applicable to officers or employees certifying to pay rolls of the Selective Service System for payment by Army disbursing officers (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

DISPOSITION OF EXECUTIVE PAPERS

A letter from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, a list of papers and documents on the files of the Departments of War (3), Post Office, Navy, Commerce, and Labor; The National Archives (2), National Housing Agency, and Federal Works Agency which are not needed in the conduct of business and have no permanent value or historical interest, and requesting action looking to their disposition (with accompanying papers); to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Papers in the Executive Departments.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. BREWSTER members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

ADDITIONAL REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE ON REDUCTION OF NONESSENTIAL FEDERAL EXPENDITURES—TRAVEL AND COMMUNICATIONS IN THE GOVERNMENT (S. DOC. NO. 57)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], chairman of the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures, transmitting a report relating to travel and communications in the Federal Government, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BYRD. I ask unanimous consent that the report just laid before the Senate by the Vice President be printed as a document and also be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report is as follows:

REDUCTION OF NONESSENTIAL FEDERAL EXPENDITURES—REPORT TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, THE VICE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES, PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE, AND THE SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

In accordance with title 6 of the Revenue Act of 1941, Public Law 250, Seventy-seventh Congress, an additional report herewith is presented by the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures.

This report reflects the continued governmental extravagances in travel and communication expenses of a nonmilitary nature which the committee has noted since its initial investigation of this matter in 1941. Based on total of the 6-month period between July 1, 1942, and January 1, 1943, it is possible to estimate that the total travel and communication expenditures for the Executive branch of the Federal Government in the fiscal year 1943 will exceed $100,000,000, excluding the War and Navy Departments.

The committee believes that this figure can be drastically cut in view of the present emergency. With the public at large obliged to reduce travel and communications it is no more than fair to expect their Government to do likewise. When agencies not essential to the war effort allow their travel and communication expenses to double—treble—even swell to nine times their peacetime levels, when departments and agencies allow increases totaling hundreds of thousands of dollars—then it is time to call a halt to such wasteful and unpatriotic expenditures.

COMMUNICATION EXPENSES

A total of $15,573,833.91 was spent for communications by the Federal Government, excluding the War and Navy Departments, in the 6-month period between July 1, 1942, and January 1, 1943, according to reports submitted to the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures.

Of this amount $4,147,941.50, or 27 percent, was spent for local telephone calls; $3,538,024.29, or 23 percent, was spent for long-distance calls; $3,590,717.44, or 23 percent, was spent for telegraph and cable communication; $1,482,096.01, or 9 percent, was spent for teletype expense; $1,830,610.88, or 12 percent, was spent for special services; and the remainder went to miscellaneous expenditures. All of this expense was of a nonmilitary nature.

Eight departments and agencies far outstripped the rest in communication expenditures. They are as follows:

Communications expense for the 6-month period between July 1 and Dec. 31, 1942

Department	Amount	Percent of total
Office of War Information	$1,812,061.78	11.6
War Production Board	1,735,071.46	11.1
Commerce Department	1,415,609.88	9.1
Agriculture Department	1,153,937.00	7.4
State Department	1,054,732.13	6.1
Office of Price Administration	940,443.42	6.0
Justice Department	936,442.00	6.0
Treasury Department	811,967.66	5.2

In other words, over 60 percent of the entire Federal communications expense (bearing in mind the exception of the War and Navy Departments) may be placed in the hands of eight Government agencies and departments.

Certain striking examples of large expenditures may be noted. For example, computing the long-distance calls on the average night-rate basis, one finds that the Government might make 488 3-minute calls around the world at the equator daily and have the cost no greater. Again, the War Production Board spent nearly a million and a half dollars in the 6-month period on telephone expenses, two-thirds of which was in long-distance calls. No other agency remotely approached this total. The tremendous proportions of this figure may best be judged when one realizes that for the same yearly cost, at night rates, the War Production Board could put in hourly 3-minute telephone calls to the moon, 221,463 miles away, every hour in the day, every day in the year.

The departments and agencies having the telephone bills over $100,000 are as follows:

Telephone expense for the 6-month period between July 1 and Dec. 31, 1942

	Amount	Percent of total
War Production Board	$1,346,093	17
Agriculture Department	736,556	9

Those establishments having the highest telegraph and cable expense are as follows:

Telegraph and cable expense for the 6-month period between July 1 and Dec. 31, 1942

	Amount	Percent of total
State Department	$851,020	23
Office of War Information	480,994	13

Treasury Department	137,570	3
Reconstruction Finance Corporation	119,651	3
Federal Communications Commission	116,012	3
Justice Department	102,894	2

At 30 cents per telegram the State Department would average thus 15,500 such telegrams a day.

Those establishments having the highest teletype cost are as follows:

Teletype expense for the 6-month period between July 1 and Dec. 31, 1942

	Amount	Percent of total
Commerce Department	$659,201	44
Justice Department	190,066	12

High postage costs were found in the following establishments:

Postage expense for the 6-month period between July 1 and Dec. 31, 1942

	Amount	Percent of total
Treasury Department	$100,210	13
Office of Price Administration	72,328	9
Justice Department	62,596	8
Reconstruction Finance Corporation	58,498	8
Agriculture Department	45,171	6
Central Administrative Service (Office for Emergency Management)	45,060	6

Considering the franking privilege allowed to Government agencies, the cost of postage is extraordinarily high, including as it does only the purchase of stamps for special delivery, air mail, bulk packages, investigators' reports, etc., and not including regular correspondence.

High special-service costs were found in the following establishments:

Special-service expense for the 6-month period between July 1 and Dec. 31, 1942

	Amount	Percent of total
Office of War Information	$1,104,684	60
Commerce Department	273,720	14
Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs	198,090	10
State Department	73,065	4

By the very nature of their functions many establishments have peculiarly distributed communications expenses. However, generally speaking, it seems normal to assume that long-distance telephone calls should not be in excess of local departmental expenses and that telegraph and cable expenses, with specific exceptions, should not outweigh telephone expenses.

Long-distance call costs exceeded local costs in the following departments and agencies: Office of Civilian Defense, National War Labor Board, Office of Scientific Research and Development, War Production Board, War Relocation Authority, War Shipping Administration, Office of Price Administration, National Labor Relations Board, National Mediation Board, Reconstruction Finance Corporation, Tennessee Valley Authority, United States Maritime Commission, Justice Department, and Labor Department. Outstanding examples are War Production Board, whose long-distance calls cost $50,000, as compared with $395,000 for local calls, a ratio of more than 2 to 1; Reconstruction Finance Corporation, whose long-distance calls cost $126,000, as compared with $59,000 for local calls; and Justice Department, with $345,000 for long-distance calls, as compared with $190,000 for local calls.

COMPARISON WITH 1941 EXPENDITURES

During the entire fiscal year 1941 the expenses for communication service for the executive establishments of the Government totaled $14,805,993. This amount, compared with the $15,573,833 spent in the 6-month period between July 1, 1942, and December 31, 1942, shows a more than 100-percent increase in these communication expenses. Moreover, it must be borne in mind that these expenses do not include those of the War and Navy Departments in either instance.

Following is a table of communication expenses for those Federal establishments in which a comparison is made of expenditures of the two periods. To effect a comparable situation the expenditures between July 1, and December 31, 1942, were projected to June 30, 1943, by doubling the 6-month total now available. The percentage of increase is indicative of trends in Government communication expense.

TRAVEL EXPENSES

According to figures submitted to the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures by the various departments and agencies of the Federal Government a total of $35,672,858.84 of a nonmilitary nature was spent on travel expenditures in the 6-month period between July 1 and December 31, 1942. Tnis does not include amounts spent by either the War or the Navy Departments. Of this amount by far the largest item was that of per diem expenses, this amount running to $18,527,694, or 52 percent. Railroad expenses accounted for 18 percent of the total, or $6,379,630. Automobile expenses amounted to 14 percent, or $5,119,045. Airplane expenses amounted to 7 percent, or $2,640,208. The remainder were miscellaneous expenses or unproportioned totals.

Of this total 52 percent of the expenditures are found in just six agencies. The list follows:

Travel expense for the 6-month period between July 1 and Dec. 31, 1942

Agency	Amount	Percent
Agriculture Department	$5,175,796	15
Justice Department	3,434,998	10

Treasury Department	2,671,691	7
Federal Security Agency	1,935,001	5
Office of Price Administration	1,723,151	5

Following is a list of those agencies which spent the largest sums in each category. The following five agencies accounted for 45 percent of the total railroad expenditures:

[1] Projected on basis of actual expenditures of the first 6 months of fiscal year 1943.

The committee believes that the travel and communication expenses for most branches of the Federal Government are inordinately high. The committee feels that, considering the specific exclusion of the War and Navy Departments from these computations, no small group of departments and agencies should completely dominate each category of travel and communication expenditures. For example, it is believed that no group of five agencies and departments of a nonmilitary type should comprise from 45 to 61 percent of the total of each of the types of travel expenditures of the entire Government.

It further believes that responsibility rests jointly with the departments and agencies involved and with the Bureau of the Budget to take necessary measures to reduce immediately such excessive expenditures.

The following tables indicate in detail the tremendous amount the various branches of the Government are spending on travel and communication expenses. It must be remembered that the amounts stated are for the 6-month period between July 1 and December 31, 1942, and not for the entire fiscal year.

RESOLUTION OF CUBAN HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES — PUERTO RICAN INDEPENDENCE

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of State together with copy of a motion or resolution of the Cuban House of Representatives, which, together with the accompanying motion or resolution, was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, May 26, 1943.

The VICE PRESIDENT,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR MR. VICE PRESIDENT: The Chargé d'Affaires of Cuba at Washington, under instructions of his Government, has forwarded to the Department the text of a motion approved April 7, 1943, by the Cuban House of Representatives, with the request that it be transmitted to the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States.

I transmit the text, in accordance with the request of the Chargé, and a translation for your convenience.

Sincerely yours,

CORDELL HULL.

[Enclosure: As stated above.]

REPUBLIC OF CUBA,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
OFFICE OF THE SPEAKER,
Habana, April 7, 1943.

The PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: The house of representatives in session on this date has adopted by unanimous vote the resolution which reads literally as follows:

"To the House:

"Upon drafting in 1892 the platform of the Cuban Revolutionary Party, its founder, an apostle of our liberties and a distinguished American patriot, José Martí, set forth in article 1 that: 'The Cuban Revolutionary Party is constituted for the purpose of gaining, by the united efforts of all men of good will, the absolute independence of the island of Cuba, and to foment and aid that of Puerto Rico.' Once the independence of our island was obtained, the Cubans were obligated, both morally and materially, to continue the struggle for that of Puerto Rico. The Democratic Senator, MILLARD TYDINGS, chairman of the Territories Committee, proposed on the 2d day of April last, in the United States Senate, the granting of complete and absolute independence to Puerto Rico. TYDINGS declared, upon announcing the presentation of the bill in the Senate, that 'When Puerto Rico obtains its independence, the American Government will have demonstrated modern conceptions of civilization that are in accord with the highest aspirations of the human race.' And he added: 'There is no reason why the independence of Puerto Rico, considered within the concepts of modern practicality, should not be as successful as the independence of Cuba and the approaching independence of the Philippines.' With the independence of Puerto Rico, there will be broken the chain which fetters the sister island, and on the American continent, illumined by the sun of freedom, will shine another star on the day when a flag like ours floats proudly as a symbol of the growing nation: The Republic of Puerto Rico. On the basis of the high democratic ideals of humanity and with a feeling of solidarity with the Puerto Rican patriots who long for and desire the liberty of their people, the undersigned representative submits to the consideration of the House the following resolution: That the House of Representatives of Cuba send to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America a message expressing the sympathy of the Cuban representative and the people of Cuba for the bill of Senator TYDINGS to grant total and absolute independence to Puerto Rico, and making known in the same message a plea for the liberation of the Puerto Rican nationalist leader, Pedro Albizu Campos, and of others who likewise are suffering imprisonment. Session chamber of the house of representatives, the 5th day of April 1943.

"Dr. A. INOCENTE ALVAREZ."

I have the honor to bring the foregoing to the knowledge of the distinguished body through your official intermediary.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate or presented and referred as indicated:

By the VICE PRESIDENT:

A resolution adopted by the Grand Parlor of the Native Sons of the Golden West assembled in annual session at San Francisco, Calif., favoring the exchange of disloyal interned Japanese of American birth for either civilian or military prisoners now held captive by Japan; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

A resolution adopted by the Grand Parlor of the Native Sons of the Golden West assembled in annual session at San Francisco, Calif., favoring prompt amendment of the Constitution providing that a child born of Japanese parents shall not be a citizen of the United States, notwithstanding such birth occurs or occurred in United States territory; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A resolution adopted by the Grand Parlor of the Native Sons of the Golden West assembled in annual session at San Francisco, Calif., favoring the continued internment of all Japanese irrespective of place of birth and nominal American citizenship; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A resolution adopted by the City Commission of Ironwood, Mich., favoring continuance of the National Youth Administration or some other worth-while youth training program; ordered to lie on the table.

A telegram from Palfrey Perkins, secretary of the American Unitarian Association, of Boston, Mass., embodying a resolution favoring continuance of the work of the National Resources Planning Board; ordered to lie on the table.

A concurrent resolution of the General Assembly of Pennsylvania; to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

"House Resolution 71

"Whereas December 7, 1941, at Pearl Harbor proved America cannot stay out of war because she wills it so; and

"Whereas the radio and the airplane have obliterated distances and brought all the world into close and related contact, thereby destroying our former isolation and rendering necessary dealing with global problems as part of our own; and

"Whereas it has, therefore, become necessary for us to be thinking of world peace because it will be part of our own peace and we must not be unprepared for that peace as we were for the war: Therefore be it

"Resolved (if the senate concurs), That the Congress and the people of the United States give more thought to a closer association of the United Nations to further the speedy termination of the war and the winning of the kind of peace that will rid the world once and for all of the banditry and aggression that have made life intolerable for all people who believe in liberty and justice and the dignity of mankind."

By Mr. LODGE:

Resolutions of the General Court of Massachusetts, favoring amendment of the Federal Motor Carrier Act, 1935 (now pt. II of the Interstate Commerce Act); to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

(See resolutions printed in full when presented by Mr. WALSH on the 20th instant, p. 4646, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

By Mr. CAPPER:

A petition of sundry citizens, members of the First Christian Church, of Holton, Kans., praying for the enactment of Senate bill 860, to provide for the common defense in relation to the sale of alcoholic liquors to the members of the land and naval forces of the United States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

RECOGNITION OF PROVISIONAL GOVERNMENT OF KOREA—LETTER FROM REV. RALPH H. JENNINGS

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred a letter from the Reverend Ralph H. Jennings, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Kansas City, Kans., expressing himself in favor of recognition of the provisional government of Korea.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH,
Kansas City, Kans., May 13, 1943.

The Honorable ARTHUR CAPPER,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SENATOR: I would urge you to enact the Resolution 49 providing for the recognition of the provisional government of Korea. The Korean people have been dominated by the Japanese since 1905. Our recognition of 23,000,000 Koreans at this time would bring encouragement and hope for enslaved peoples everywhere.

Very truly yours,

RALPH H. JENNINGS.

PROHIBITION OF THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC AND ALSO OF LIQUOR SALES AROUND MILITARY CAMPS

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred resolutions adopted by the board of directors of the Anti-Saloon League of America, urging the passage of legislation that will control liquor and vice conditions in Army camps.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

1. We appeal to the President of the United States as the Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy, to whom have been given most sweeping wartime powers, to take action to prevent the sale of intoxicating liquors, including beer, on any property controlled by the Government, or to any man or woman in United States uniform; to create dry zones around all military and naval establishments and around industrial establishments which are engaged in the production of any form of equipment or material being manufactured for war purposes; and to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors, including beer, on railroad trains.

2. We recommend that the Presdent use his war powers so that no food products, metals, rubber, or any other products or facilities, whose use is essential in the carrying on of the war, be diverted to the manufacture, sale, or distribution of beer, or of any alcoholic liquors.

3. That the President is hereby urged to follow the example set by Canada, to prohibit any form of advertising which will promote the continued and increasing drinking of intoxicants while the Nation is at war, as wasteful and detrimental to both civilian and military manpower and morale.

4. We recommend that the President, as Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy, prohibit the sale of alcoholic liquors anywhere in the Nation as a genuine help in the promotion of sobriety and consequent physical, mental, and moral activities.

5. We call upon the Congress of the United States to cooperate with the President in meeting his great responsibility by passing any additional legislation which may be necessary for him most effectively to prevent during wartime the evils growing out of the use of intoxicating liquor.

6. We favor the passage of any and all legislation which will aid in the accomplishment of the great aim of the Anti-Saloon League of America, namely, the extermination of the beverage liquor traffic.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE CALIFORNIA LEGISLATURE

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, in the absence of the senior Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], and at his request, I ask consent to present and to have printed in the RECORD, under the rule, and appropriately referred, resolutions adopted by the California State Senate and the California State Assembly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolutions presented by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] on behalf of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] will be received, appropriately referred, and printed in the RECORD under the rule.

To the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry (two resolutions):

Assembly Joint Resolution 46

Joint resolution relative to repair facilities and materials for agricultural machinery and implements

Whereas the production of a sufficient food supply is essential to the continued health of the Nation and its successful prosecution of the war; and

Whereas such production cannot be maintained unless necessary farm machinery and equipment is kept in working condition; and

Whereas shops devoted to the repair of such machinery and equipment are being forced out of operation because of inability to get supplies: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California (jointly), That the Congress and President of the United States and the War Priorities Board are memorialized to make such laws, rules, or orders as may be necessary to make available to shops engaged in the repair of farm machinery adequate supplies of welding rod, acetylene, oxygen, and other essential materials; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly is requested to forward copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives from California, and to the members of the War Priorities Board.

Assembly Joint Resolution 44

Joint resolution relative to the appointment of the Honorable Jesse Tapp as Assistant to the Food Administrator of the United States

Whereas the State of California has been called upon to increase its agricultural production goals during 1943 although it is faced with an agricultural labor supply which is less than that available in 1942; and

Whereas the President of the United States has appointed the Honorable Chester C. Davis as Food Administrator with the duty, among others, of obtaining adequate agricultural labor for this year's crops; and

Whereas the Honorable Chester C. Davis, Food Administrator, has appointed the Honorable Jesse Tapp as his assistant, thereby recognizing the need of having in Washington, someone familiar with the problems of western agriculture: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California (jointly), That the Honorable Chester C. Davis, Food Administrator, be commended for his recognition of the problems of western agriculture in appointing the Honorable Jesse Tapp as his assistant; and be it further

Resolved, That the Honorable Jesse Tapp be congratulated upon his selection for this important assignment; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly transmit copies of this resolution to Hon. Chester C. Davis, Food Administrator, to Hon. Jesse Tapp, Assistant to the Food Administrator, to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and to the Senators and Representatives from California in the Congress of the United States.

To the Committee on Banking and Currency:

House Resolution 296

Resolution relative to memorializing the Office of Price Administration in relation to gasoline allowances for the purposes of taking deer

Whereas the State of California annually produces over 40,000 mature deer which may be, and ordinarily are, taken by sportsmen; and

Whereas, it may be conservatively estimated that such deer will produce over 400,000 pounds of meat, and that the hides will produce over 14,000 coats or over 130,000 pair of gloves; and

Whereas the Federal Government needs buckskin for many military uses for which no suitable substitute has been found; and

Whereas deer hunting is a form of recreation for thousands of sportsmen who solely because of gasoline rationing will be forced to spend their vacations otherwise; and

Whereas by the simple expedient of allowing each deer hunter a maximum of 12 gallons of gasoline, the deer hunters of the State, through share-the-ride programs, could take the normal share of the State's annual crop which otherwise will not be taken; and

Whereas the unchecked multiplication of large game animals is not in the best interests of the agricultural and livestock industries of the State; and

Whereas a plan has been worked out by the sportmen's organizations of the State whereby each deer hunter in return for the allowance of such additional gasoline will agree to ship the deer skins to fixed receiving points to be processed and made available to the Federal Government, to save the surplus fat and tallow for sale to local butchers for rendering it usable for making explosives, and to utilize all of the meat for human consumption; and

Whereas all these desirable results can be obtained by allowing prospective deer hunters only 12 additional gallons of gasoline each: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly of the State of California, That the Office of Price Administration is hereby respectfully requested to give consideration to the allowance of an additional 12 gallons of gasoline to each deer hunter to be used by him under such conditions and restrictions as will result in the utilization of the meat, hides, tallow, and fat in the manner most conducive to the war effort; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly is hereby directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the Office of Price Administration, Washington, D. C., the Fish and Wildlife Service of the Department of the Interior of the United States, and to each Representative and Senator from California in the Congress of the United States.

To the Committee on Commerce:

House Resolution 289

Resolution memorializing Congress to enact necessary legislation to permit the reuse of bottles used as containers of alcoholic beverages

Whereas under the provisions of Federal law the reuse of bottles containing bonded alcoholic beverages is prohibited, and compliance with the Federal laws requires a complete destruction of bottles used for the purpose of containing alcoholic beverages once filled and stamped; and

Whereas replacement of bottles so destroyed constitutes an extravagance and waste of essential manpower, manufacturing equipment, production facilities and raw materials that would be of inestimable value in production for war; and

Whereas the Federal legislation is designed and intended to protect Federal revenue under internal revenue statutes and adequate provision to safeguard such revenue could be made without the necessity of destruction of containers: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly of the State of California, That the House of the State of California hereby respectfully petitions the Congress of the United States to so amend the provisions of the Federal law to permit for the duration of the war the reuse of bottles used for the purpose of containing alcoholic beverages; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly is instructed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States and to the Senators and Congressmen from California in the Congress of the United States; and be it further

Resolved, That the Senators and Congressmen from California in the Congress of the United States are respectfully requested to urge the legislation set forth in this resolution.

To the Committee on Finance (four resolutions):

Senate Joint Resolution 1

Joint resolution relative to old-age assistance

Whereas it is the desire of the Legislature of California to make sufficient provision for the needy aged of this State; and

Whereas prior to July 1, 1941, the old-age security law of California permitted a recipient of aid to receive up to $15 per month from certain specified sources, including the earnings of the recipient, without deduction thereof from the amount of his aid, and it was with the greatest reluctance that the Legislature of California in 1941 amended the California law to deny the aged this privilege, which amendment was made solely to enable the State to comply with the Federal Social Security Act as that act was construed by the Federal Social Security Board, and so to continue to receive Federal old-age assistance; and the Legislature of California believes that this privilege should be afforded to the aged, and that the withdrawal of the privilege was hasty and ill-advised; and

Whereas, at the present time a recipient of aid in California may receive income in addition to the aid only by showing excess need therefor, and submitting to the most detailed and onerous supervision of his personal budget, and so is discouraged from engaging in gainful employment despite the well-recognized need for the maximum utilization of the services of every American in the furtherance of the war effort; and

Whereas the maximum amount of old-age assistance granted to an eligible aged person which the Government of the United States will recognize for the purpose of reimbursing the State to the extent of one-half of the assistance granted is $40, which sum is entirely inadequate under present conditions to provide an aged person with the necessities of life or to permit him to maintain a proper standard of living: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and the Assembly of the State of California (jointly). That the President and Congress of the United States are hereby memorialized to amend the Federal Social Security Act to provide for Federal participation at the present rate in the payment of aid in the amount of $60 to any eligible individual in any month, or, if this is not possible, to amend the Federal Social Security Act to permit the State agency, in determining need, not to take into consideration other income and resources of an individual claiming old-age assistance to the extent of $20, or such greater sum as the President and Congress may determine to be proper and just; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of the senate is hereby directed to send copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States.

Assembly Joint Resolution 19

Joint resolution relative to memorializing and petitioning Congress to enact legislation giving to draftees and others entering the military and naval service of the United States adequate insurance protection for themselves in the form of permanent total disability insurance as well as life insurance protection

Whereas from 1919 up to and including October 8, 1940, persons entering the military and naval service of the United States were given the privilege of applying for United States Government (converted) life insurance, including the permanent total disability features thereof, which protected the soldier himself; and

Whereas Congress in the passage of the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, approved October 8, 1940, provided in section 611 of said act that, "No United States Government life insurance shall be granted hereafter to any person under the provisions of section 300 of the World War Veterans' Act of 1924, as amended"; and

Whereas the National Service Life Insurance Act does not provide permanent total disability benefit features or protection for the soldier himself, and protects only the dependents and near relatives of the soldier; and

Whereas it is estimated that 90 percent of those now in the military and naval service are without dependents and therefore not in need of such insurance but are in need of insurance with permanent total disability features protecting the soldier himself; and

Whereas experience during and since the World War has adequately proved and demonstrated the merits of permanent total disability features of Government insurance, particularly as relates to the so-called misconduct cases, which are noncompensable for both compensation and pension, thereby taking care of these unfortunates who would otherwise be thrown upon local communities for care and sustenance; and

Whereas it appears that in the passage of the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, including section 611 thereof, which prevented further application for United States Government life insurance with total permanent disability features thereof, those persons, including National Guard units entering Federal service after October 8, 1940, were discriminated against and were denied the privilege of taking out United States Government (converted) life insurance with permanent total disability features thereof, whereas those persons, including National Guard units entering Federal service prior to October 8, 1940, were allowed and permitted to take out such insurance; and

Whereas we believe in order to give to every commissioned officer and enlisted man and every member of the Army Nurse Corps (female) and the Navy Nurse Corps (female) when employed in active service under the War Department or Navy Department, proper protection for themselves and their dependents, the United States should again permit such persons, including draftees, the opportunity to apply for and be granted either national service life insurance or United States Government (converted) life insurance with permanent total disability features as now constituted: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of California (jointly), That the Legislature of the State of California hereby memorializes and petitions Congress to enact legislation which will provide that such persons so entering the military and naval service of the United States, including draftees, shall be given the opportunity of taking either national service life insurance or United States Government (converted) life insurance, at their option, including the permanent total disability features thereof; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this joint resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, to the Vice President of the United States, and to each Member of the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States, and that the Senators and Representatives representing the State of California in Congress be urged actively to support such legislation.

Assembly Joint Resolution 30

Joint resolution relative to an increase of pay for employees of the department of employment

Whereas by the passage of senate bill No. 15 the Legislature of the State of California has indicated its policy is to provide for increases in the salaries of State employees to offset the increase in living costs caused by war conditions; and

Whereas the increase provided for State employees amounts to $25 per month for employees whose salaries do not exceed $300 per month and $20 per month for employees whose salaries exceed $300 per month; and

Whereas such an increase in compensation is just and equitable; and

Whereas the employees of the department of employment do not participate in said increase, although the necessity and propriety of granting such increases is equally applicable to them; and

Whereas the department of employment lacks the necessary funds to provide for such an increase for the employees of that department: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of California (jointly), That the regional board of the Social Security Board is hereby requested to transmit to the Social Security Board at Washington, D. C., a statement of the facts hereinabove recited, and that said Social Security Board is hereby memorialized and petitioned to make an allocation to the California unemployment administration fund of sufficient money to pay to the employees of the department of employment salary increases equivalent to those granted State employees pursuant to said senate bill No. 15; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly shall transmit to the regional board of the Social Security Board, Humboldt Building, San Francisco, and to the Social Security Board, Washington, D. C., copies of this resolution and copies of said senate bill No. 15 as enrolled; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly shall send copies of this resolution to each Member in the Congress of the United States from California.

Assembly Joint Resolution 32

Joint resolution relative to auditing the accounts of the department of employment

Whereas the receipts and disbursements of the benefit fund of the State department of employment receiving vast sums of money from employers and employees of California have never been audited by any State or Federal agency; and

Whereas the employers of this State, subject to the Federal Unemployment Tax Act, normally pay 2.7 percent of the wages paid by them into the Treasury of the United States; and employees pay 1 percent of their wages to that source; and

Whereas it is desirable and necessary that every agency of Government expending money have a periodical audit of its books and accounts; and

Whereas the Federal Social Security Board has made no allowance to the State of California for auditing the accounts of the department of employment, and has declined itself to make such audits for the California Department of Employment or a similar department in any other State: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California (jointly), That the Congress of the United States is hereby memorialized to pass such legislation as will make it mandatory upon the Social Security Board to allocate funds to the various States of the Union, and particularly to this State, for a proper audit under the supervision of the State department of finance, of the funds and accounts of the State department of employment; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk is hereby directed to send a copy of this resolution to the President of the United States, the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, every Member of the Senate and House of Representatives from California, the Social Security Board, and every Governor and State legislature.

To the Committee on Foreign Relations:

House Resolution 232

Resolution relative to the Post-War International Economic and Food Conference

Whereas the State Department of the Government of the United States has announced that a conference of the United Nations will be held at Hot Springs, Va., on Tuesday, May 18, to discuss, study, and plan the problems of freedom from want, post-war interests in full employment, free enterprise, and the lightening of government controls, relief of devastated countries, international currency arrangements, and trade reciprocity; and

Whereas this recital of the agenda of the Food and Economic Conference marks it as one of the greatest national and international importance and of paramount interest to the world and to the people of the United States; and

Whereas 42 nations have been invited to send representatives to this noted conference; and

Whereas it has been declared by those in charge of the arrangements for the holding of the said conference that all representatives of the press will be barred from attendance at all meetings of the conference: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly of the State of California, That the members of the assembly protest the closing of the conference to representatives of the press as undemocratic, declare it to be a breach of the American principle of freedom of the press, deplore it as a reversion to star-chamber procedures and an infringement of the right of a free people to know in full and complete detail the daily happenings of this world-important conference; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk be directed to prepare and transmit copies of this resolution to the President, Vice President, and Secretary of State of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and each Member of the House of Representatives from California in the Congress of the United States.

To the Committee on Immigration:

Assembly Joint Resolution 45

Joint resolution relative to facilitating the employment of Mexican citizens in agriculture

Whereas the United States of America is sorely in need of skilled agricultural labor and has entered into arrangements with the Government of the Republic of Mexico for permitting its citizens to engage in agricultural pursuits in the United States; and

Whereas there reside within close proximity of the borders of California and other States bordering upon the Republic of Mexico a large number of citizens of the Republic of Mexico, who, if existing governmental arrangements permitted, could either continue to reside in Mexico and work in the United States or reside intermittently in the United States for agricultural purposes; and

Whereas existing regulations governing recruitment of Mexican citizens for agricultural labor in the United States require application for such work in Mexico City; and

Whereas the President of the United States on Tuesday, March 30, 1943, stated that importation of Mexican agricultural workers was one of three means of relieving the farm labor shortage in the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California (jointly), That Hon. Cordell Hull, Secretary of State, and Hon. Chester C. Davis, Food Administrator of the United States of America, be, and they are hereby, memorialized to enter into negotiations which will, for the duration of the current emergency, permit the citizens of Mexico residing in proximity to the borders of the United States to enter the United States freely for the purpose of engaging in agricultural pursuits, without the necessity of making application personally in Mexico City; and be it further

Resolved, That Hon. Cordell Hull, Secretary of State, and Hon. Earl G. Harrison, Director of Immigration, be and they are hereby requested to make such adjustment in the immigration regulations of the United States as will, for the duration of the current emergency, facilitate the free ingress and egress of such Mexican citizens for the purpose of engaging in agricultural pursuits; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly transmit copies of this resolution to Hon. Cordell Hull, Secretary of State; to Hon. Chester C. Davis, Food Administrator; to Hon. Earl G. Harrison, Director of Immigration and Naturalization; and to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and to the Senators and Representatives from California in the Congress of the United States.

To the Committee on the Library:

House Resolution 226

Resolution relative to the Spirit of Freedom Monument as designed

Whereas the flag of the United States of America and the Liberty Bell are symbols of the highest American ideals; and

Whereas no monument has been erected to personify the ideals and spirit for which the American flag and the Liberty Bell are fitting emblems; and

Whereas one Amos A. Wyckoff, of Oakland, has designed a monument which is known as Spirit of Freedom, which would be a most fitting, imposing, and inspiring memorial to the people of the United States, and which monument is more particularly described as follows:

1. The 13 steps represent the Thirteen Colonies.

2. There are 48 columns, one to represent each State.

3. The gear wheel represents the power of our United States.

4. There are 48 cogs, one for each State in the Union, to represent the power of each State. Inside each cog will be the exhibit room for each State.

5. Between each cog there will be placed a statue of the pioneers who fought their way here to make it possible for our people to live.

6. The building is constructed of four cross-like sections with niches in which to place statues.

7. On top of the building will be the statue of the California Bear.

8. Facing the east, will be a statue of the first mother of California, holding a child, which represents, as the sun rises, the newborn is coming to light.

9. Facing the west will be a statue of the first emigrant scout to California.

10. The Liberty Bell forms the dome. Inside the dome will be the paintings of war scenes. Also a statue of the man who rang the Liberty Bell so hard he cracked it.

11. Then comes the tower rising to a great height of approximately 800 feet. In this tower will be elevators running to the observation room, where visitors will pay a small fee to have a view of beautiful cities and surrounding area, as well as the beautiful blue Pacific Ocean. The income can be used for the upkeep.

12. On the top of the tower will be a powerful light for protection and guidance of airplanes.

13. Four large American eagles, representing the keenness of vision of our United States, will face the north, south, east, and west. The eagles to be outlined in neon lights are guarding the American flag, which is flying high over their heads.

14. On the point of each cog shall be a duplicate of each State seal: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly of the State of California, That the members of this assembly hereby commend Mr. Amos A. Wyckoff as the originator and designer of the artistic and symbolic Spirit of Freedom: and be it further

Resolved, That the members of this assembly do recommend the construction of this symbolic monument on a suitable site to any commission for post-war reconstruction or planning as a project worthy of their most careful consideration: And be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly be instructed to prepare and transmit copies of this resolution to any commission for post-war reconstruction or planning and to the commission in charge of the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the State of California, as a project worthy of their most careful consideration, to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to each Senator and each Member of the House of Representatives from California in the Congress of the United States and to the aforesaid Mr. Amos A. Wyckoff, of Oakland, Calif.

To the Committee on Military Affairs (two resolutions):

Assembly Joint Resolution 40

Joint resolution relative to memorializing Congress to enact legislation to establish a military and a naval academy on the Pacific coast

Whereas the United States is to have a great Army and Navy and will need twice and three times the number of officers that West Point Military Academy and Annapolis Naval Academy can produce because these institutions have reached the limit of expansion at their present sites, cannot provide needed room for airplanes to fly and tanks to maneuver and can not teach adequately more students than they have taught in the past; and

Whereas there are many miles of coast along the Pacific which would afford the country ideal locations for both a military and a naval academy; and

Whereas world conditions and the war have made it advisable that cadets and midshipmen can be made familiar with the Pacific coast as well as with the Atlantic coast; and

Whereas Army and Navy traditions could be maintained by having cadets and midshipmen receive their first 2 years of training on the Pacific coast and complete their training at West Point or Annapolis and in so doing become familiar with the west coast and the Pacific as well as with the east coast and the Atlantic: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of California (jointly), That the Congress of the United States be memorialized immediately to enact legislation to establish a military and a naval academy on the Pacific coast; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly is hereby requested to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and to the Senators and Representatives from California in the Congress of the United States, and that the Senators and Representatives from California are hereby respectfully requested to urge such action.

House Resolution 257

Resolution relating to the return of gold mines to partial production

Whereas the complete stoppage of gold mining is resulting in the destruction in the economic life of the communities engaged primarily in this industry; and

Whereas if the industry were permitted to continue on a limited scale during the war an income sufficient to defray taxes and maintain essential businesses could be produced; and

Whereas under such conditions of partial production the existence of the communities located in the gold-mining areas could be continued to the benefit of their residents and of the State in general: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly of the State of California, That the Congress and the President of the United States and the War Production Board are memorialized to make such laws, rules, or order as may be necessary to provide for the return of the gold mines of the State to partial production during the continuance of the war; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly is requested to forward copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of of the House of Representatives and to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives from California, and to the Chairman of the War Production Board.

To the Committee on Naval Affairs (two resolutions):

Assembly Joint Resolution 21

Joint resolution memorializing the President and the Secretary of the Navy to name a Navy cruiser of the United States Fleet for the city of Long Beach, Calif.

Whereas the city of Long Beach, State of California, is now and for many years has been a home port of the Pacific Fleet of the United States; and

Whereas the said city of Long Beach has recently presented to the United States Government a tract of oil-bearing land consisting of 105 acres of an estimated value of more than $10,000,000, situated along the water front to be used for a great permanent naval base; and

Whereas the Navy Department has located a large naval hospital near the city of Long Beach; and

Whereas many of the homes of the officers and men of the Navy are located at Long Beach, and the citizens thereof are all interested in the welfare and progress of the Navy; and

Whereas throughout many years of loyal support the city of Long Beach, and its citizens, have from time to time extended numerous benefits and favors upon the Navy; and

Whereas it is the custom for the President, through the Secretary of the Navy, to christen the naval cruisers for some prominent city of the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of California (jointly), That the President and the Honorable Secretary of the Navy are hereby respectfully solicited and requested that one of the naval cruisers of the United States Fleet, now under construction, or to be constructed, when launched, be christened "Long Beach" in honor of the city of Long Beach in the State of California; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly be hereby directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President of the United States and to the Honorable Secretary of the Navy and to the Senators and Representatives of the State of California in the Congress of the United States.

House Resolution 246

Resolution relative to memorializing the President and the Secretary of the Navy to name a Navy cruiser of the United States Fleet for the city of San Pedro, Calif.

Whereas Fort MacArthur is situated at the city of San Pedro, State of California, and is now and for many years has been a home port of the Pacific Fleet of the United States; and

Whereas Fort MacArthur, at San Pedro, at the city of San Pedro, aforesaid, is a supply base for the Navy; and

Whereas many of the homes of the officers and men of the Navy are located at San Pedro, and the citizens thereof are all interested in the welfare and progress of the Navy; and

Whereas the citizens of San Pedro have loyally supported the Navy and, from time to time, have extended numerous benefits and favors upon the Navy; and

Whereas it is the custom of the President, through the Secretary of the Navy, to christen naval cruisers for some prominent city of the United States; now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly of the State of California, That the President and the Secretary of the Navy are hereby respectfully solicited and requested that one of the naval cruisers of the United States Fleet now under construction, or to be constructed, when launched be christened "San Pedro" in honor of the city of San Pedro, State of California; and be it further

Resolved, That the clerk, chief clerk of the assembly be hereby directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President of the United States and to the honorable Secretary of the Navy, and to the Senators and Representatives of the State of California in the Congress of the United States, and an engrossed copy to the San Pedro Junior Chamber of Commerce.

To the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads:

House Resolution 284

Resolution relative to memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact S. 971 or H. R. 2426, Seventy-eighth Congress, first session, providing for Federal participation in financing of a post-war highway construction program

Whereas two measures are pending in the Congress of the United States, namely, S. 971 and H. R. 2426, to authorize Federal assistance to the States in financing a post-war construction program on rural and urban highways; and

Whereas such legislation is designed to, and will provide useful employment for those returning from services in the armed forces, or released by war industries after the war, and will, accordingly, tend to prevent unemployment, and the necessity for unemployment relief; and

Whereas necessary wartime restrictions on gasoline and highway transportation have resulted in curtailment of revenues received by the highway departments of the States, and restrictions on use of materials have curtailed construction and reconstruction of needed highways during a period in which many highways have been damaged by heavy wartime truck traffic, engaged in transportation for the war effort; and

Whereas such legislation will assist the States in bringing their highway systems and their highway construction programs back to normal, and in making up the time lost due to necessary deferment of highway construction during the war; and

Whereas there will be particular need to provide employment in California, following the war, due to the large number of war industries in this State; and

Whereas there will be particular need in California for reconstruction of highways due to such war conditions: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly of the State of California, That the Congress of the United States be and the same is hereby memorialized to enact either S. 971 or H. R. 2426; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk shall transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to the chairman of the House Committee on Roads, and to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, and to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States from California.

REPORTS OF APPROPRIATIONS COMMITTEE DURING ADJOURNMENT

S. 1140 (by request). A bill to provide for the appointment of an additional Assistant Secretary of the Interior; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

PROVISION FOR POST-WAR FEDERAL AID PLANNING

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I ask consent to introduce for appropriate reference a bill to provide for post-war planning, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill introduced by the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] will be received and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The bill (S. 1137) to provide for post-war planning, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

PAYMENT FOR CERTAIN NEWSPAPER ADVERTISING IN CONNECTION WITH SALE OF BONDS—AMENDMENT

Mr. WILSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1073) to aid in the stabilization program and the war effort by paid newspaper advertising in connection with the sale of United States bonds, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed.

"FREE CZECHOSLOVAKIA" — STATEMENT PREPARED FOR BROADCAST

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, 25 years ago the 29th day of May, Secretary of State Robert Lansing issued a statement in which he officially expressed America's approval of the efforts which the Czechs and Slovaks were then making to free themselves from Austro-Hungarian domination. To commemorate that event in part I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD at this place a statement entitled "Free Czechoslovakia," prepared for broadcast in America and over short-wave radio.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement is as follows:

Twenty-five years ago today Secretary of State Robert Lansing issued a declaration in which he officially expressed America's approval of the efforts which the Czechs and Slovaks were then making to free themselves from Austro-Hungarian domination.

The military and political events which rapidly followed that declaration resulted in the creation of Czechoslovakia—a bold experiment in whose success many people doubted. The new state contained many diverse ethnological elements, was bounded by bitter external enemies, and was led by rather untried statesmen. But in spite of these handicaps Czechoslovakia proved to be one of the most promising republics in modern history. It was the chief bulwark of democracy in central Europe; it enabled all its citizens to enjoy freedom such as that part of the world had never known; it rapidly raised their material and cultural standard and it worked for international harmony.

The two chief ethnological groups in the new state were the Czechs and Slovaks. The government's most outstanding achievement was what it did for the Slovaks. It enabled the Slovaks to make greater progress in 20 years than they had made during any previous century in their whole millenial history.

In the first place, the number of Slovaks grew very rapidly. During the 30 years from 1880 to 1910 under Hungarian domination, the Slovak population in Slovakia had increased by only 5 percent—that is, one-sixth of 1 percent a year. They had remained practically stationary, due to the fact that they were being Hungarianized.

After the creation of Czechoslovakia, the Slovaks increased by more than 1 percent each year. The total population of Slovakia swiftly rose, both in town and country. From 1920 to 1938 the population of the chief Slovak cities practically doubled, and general progress, both material and cultural, kept pace with the advance in population.

For instance, the number of voters in Slovakia increased by 900 percent, namely, from 200,000 to 1,790,000. Complete adult suffrage was granted, and all men and women of all nationality origins participated in political life.

In 1910, under the Hungarians, the Slovaks had two national representatives in parliament. As citizens of Czechoslovakia, they had 58 representatives in parliament and 30 senators, an increase from 2 to 88.

They also had mayors, city councilors, city clerks, prosecuting attorneys, judges, ministers, and other state functionaries by the scores of thousands.

The improvement in education was no less phenomenal. The number of Slovak primary schools increased from 140, under the Hungarian masters, to 3,277 in free Czechoslovakia. Under the Hungarians the Slovaks had no secondary Slovak school, no Slovak normal school, and no Slovak industrial or trade school, but in Czechoslovakia they had 246 Slovak secondary schools, 14 normal schools, and 69 trade schools of various kinds. The number of Slovak primary teachers increased from 390 to 8,726; the number of Slovak high-school teachers from 2 to 493; the number of university professors from none to 53. All that in 20 years.

During that period literacy among the Slovaks mounted from 57 to 93 percent.

The number of Slovak newspapers in the Slovak language increased from 22 to 289.

Such was the cultural advance the Slovaks made in free Czechoslovakia. But their material advance was no less striking. In the first place, the great Hungarian feudal estates were broken up and almost 2,000,000 acres of farm land were distributed among the peasants, to a large extent among Slovak peasants.

Improvements in industry paralleled those in agriculture. The number of persons in Slovakia living from trade and industry increased by 23 percent during the first 10 years after the creation of Czechoslovakia.

The number of persons engaged in mining increased by 19 percent, in building by 88 percent, in stone work by 82 percent, in electric plants by 136 percent, in the food industry by 23 percent.

Slovakia, in free Czechoslovakia, was covered with new buildings. One-fifth of all the homes were new as well as half the school houses and many public buildings.

The production of electricity mounted from 68 million kilomatts annually to 410 million kilowatts, namely 600 percent.

The number of communities supplied with electricity increased by 400 percent.

Transportation facilities improved rapidly. The number of persons engaged in transportation increased by 50 percent. More than 1,000 miles of new roads were constructed and 250 miles of new railroads were built in very mountainous areas.

Bank deposits and savings increased by 300 percent.

The number of cooperative credit institutions for the common people increased from 233 to 927; their capital from 56 million to 1,132 million.

These figures may seem dull, but they show the extraordinary progress which men, women, and children made in free Slovakia during the 20 years it was a part of free Czechoslovakia.

They became self-respecting, better educated, more prosperous, self-governing. They read their own papers written in their own language, elected their own officials, studied in their own schools, from their own text books, worked in their own shops or in their own fields. All these statistics were compiled by Slovaks.

Hitler, aided by a handful of stupid or wicked Slovak traitors temporarily destroyed that state. Hitler's so-called free Slovakia is deprived of every breath of freedom, and a worthy people has been tied to the chariot of the world's most terrible despot, who is rapidly moving to his doom. When he is crushed by the irresistible power of the United Nations, among whom are Czechs and Slovaks, the Czechs and the Slovaks will again be free. They will again take their place near the head of Europe's procession moving toward prosperity and enlightenment. Once more they will show the people of Danubia and of all the world the blessings of true Democracy.

REPORT TO CONGRESS ON LEND-LEASE OPERATIONS FOR PERIOD ENDED APRIL 30, 1943 (H. DOC. NO. 209)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read by the legislative clerk, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

To the Congress of the United States of America:

As I transmit to the Seventy-eighth Congress a report of operations under the Lend-Lease Act from March 11, 1943, to April 30, 1943, the last members of the once vaunted Afrika Korps and their Italian allies are streaming into prison camps. The peoples of Tunis and Bizerte are hailing their liberation—and Italians among them are as enthusiastic as any for their deliverance.

An entire continent—the continent of Africa—has now been cleared of the enemy. Its people have been freed from Nazi and Fascist rule. In Africa we have dealt a blow which is sorely felt in Berlin and Rome and Tokyo; and we have brought hope to millions still to be liberated. Liberation of Africa is a forerunner of the future.

In the coming battles for Germany and Japan, we shall need the full support and the full resources of the peoples of the newly liberated areas. This is a military and political necessity of the first order. Their fields can produce food not only for their own people, but for the United Nations' forces. Their factories and mines can supply not only themselves, but our armies as well.

The peoples in liberated areas are enlisting in support of the United Nations' cause. Their support will reflect itself in active cooperation at the proper time by millions still to be liberated. They appreciate, as only those who lost freedom can appreciate, the compelling necessity for overthrowing tyranny.

Our lend-lease operations in north and west Africa—the first of the liberated areas—have demonstrated how a freed people can aid in the defeat of the Axis. In this victory, our military operations have been backed up by the friendly support of the peoples behind the lines. We also were aided by the new French armies. They were equipped with lend-lease weapons. They were and are an important part of the United Nations' fighting forces. Aid has also been given us and the other United Nations by the liberated peoples of French Africa in the production and shipment of strategic and critical materials for our war production program.

As we progress to victory, the United Nations have brought and are bringing food for the starving and medicine for the sick in the areas which we set free. Our promises are being fulfilled in deeds.

Our integrity is enlisting the peoples and resources of these areas as effective fighting partners in the common fight against Axis aggression and tyranny.

While Axis prisoners have streamed into captivity at the end of our campaign of liberation in north Africa, lend-lease has shipped greater and greater quantities of war material into the battle areas—and into the other countries allied with us.

In my lend-lease report to the Congress on September 11, 1941, I stated that "it is our task to turn the workshops of our industry into mighty forges of war—to outbuild the aggressors in every category of modern arms."

Today, we are outbuilding the aggressors in every category of modern arms. And we are delivering them in the amounts necessary to build up the striking power for offensives that will end only in Berlin and Tokyo.

As lend-lease moves ahead in its third year, our armed forces, our supplies, and the combined efforts of the United Nations are driving ahead to complete victory over the enemy.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed consideration of House bill 1762, making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I understand that the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] intends to address the Senate on the subject matter of the committee amendment on page 4, beginning in line 23, and dealing with the National Resources Planning Board. Before he begins to speak I wish to ask unanimous consent to strike certain language from the committee amendment. In the first place, on page 5, beginning at the end of line 3, I desire to strike the words "acceptance and utilization of voluntary and uncompensated services of officers and employees of any State or political subdivision thereof."

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, of course the Senator from Tennessee would have the right to modify his own amendment, but if it is a committee amendment, that is quite a different situation, and the matter should be referred to the committee. I ask the Senator if the amendment in question is a committee amendment?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes, Mr. President, it is a committee amendment, and I have no authority from the committee to make the request. There are certain items in the amendment which I am convinced should not be in it, and I should like to put the amendment in such shape that it can be discussed properly, and so that there will not be any question about it. I hope the Senator from Oregon will not object. Of course, I understand he has a right to object.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am quite conscious of that right. If the Senator can demonstrate the validity of his request I should make no objection, but it is rather unusual for such a request to be made without reference of the matter to the committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is. The Senator is exactly right. The language I read is one of two phrases or subdivisions appearing on the same page which I shall ask leave to strike out. Both subdivisions appear on page 5. The first is the language I have read from the end of line 3 to the beginning of line 6.

Mr. President, on page 5, line 10, after the word "Nation" and the semicolon, I propose to insert the words "not to exceed $20,000 for"; then I propose to strike out the following language, beginning in line 10:

> Not to exceed $20,000; payment of actual transportation and other necessary expenses and not to exceed $10 per diem in lieu of subsistence of persons serving, while away from their homes without other compensation from the United States, in an advisory capacity to the Board; and not to exceed $20,000 for temporary employment of persons or organizations by contract or otherwise without regard to section 3709, of the Revised Statutes, or classification laws.

As to the latter part of that provision I am advised by the Parliamentarian of the Senate that it may be subject to a point of order. Of course, I do not want to have before the Senate any provision which is subject to a point of order. The Parliamentarian is of the opinion that it is legislation, and that is why I am making the request at this time.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, on what page does the language appear?

Mr. McKELLAR. On page 5. The Senator will understand what I desire to do if the Senator will look first at line 3, beginning with the word "acceptance" and ending with the word "thereof", in line 6, and put a parenthesis around that portion; and then, in line 10, after the word "Nation" and the semicolon, insert the words "not to exceed $20,000 for"; and in the same line, after the word "expenses", insert a colon and strike out the words, beginning with "not" and ending with the word "laws" and the comma following it in line 18.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I understand the reason for the request of the able Senator is that the language is in violation of the rule against the insertion of legislation in an appropriation bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is a part of the reason.

Mr. McNARY. That is the basis of the objection, I believe.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. I have no doubt that the request is a worthy one, because the language is wholly subject to a point of order.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senator. May the request be put, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. McNARY. Of course, Mr. President, strictly under the rule, when legislation is found in an appropriation bill, and when a point of order is made, the bill automatically goes back to the committee. But I shall not make that point.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to do so, I desire to offer an amendment so that it will be pending at the time when the Senator from Ohio discusses the matter. The amendment is one which I propose to offer as an individual. The reason why I offer it is because the substance of the amendment was defeated by a tie vote in the committee, and I feel that it is my personal duty to offer the amendment. Therefore, I send the amendment to the desk and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McCLELLAN in the chair). The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 5, line 18, it is proposed to strike out the numerals "$200,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$534,422"; and on the same page, in lines 22 to 25, inclusive, to strike out the following: "Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used except for correlation and coordination of planning with State governments and with political subdivisions in such States"; and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Provided further, That of this appropriation not less than $300,000 shall be used for correlation and coordination of planning with State governments and with political subdivisions of such States."

APPROPRIATIONS FOR CIVIL FUNCTIONS ADMINISTERED BY THE WAR DEPARTMENT—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2346) making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, for civil functions administered by the War Department, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 4, 5, and 6; and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "and, in addition, $3,000,000 of the unobligated balance on June 30, 1943, of the appropriation "Maintenance and improvement of existing river and harbor works", is hereby made available for the execution of detailed investigations and the preparation of plans and specifications for projects heretofore or hereafter authorized"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "and, in addtion, $3,000,000 of the unobligated balance on June 30, 1943, of the appropriation "Flood control, general", is hereby made available for the preparation of detailed plans and specifications of authorized flood-control projects, and for rescue work or the repair or maintenance of any flood-control work threatened or destroyed by flood, pursuant to section 5 of the Flood Control Act, approved August 18, 1941, for reimbursement to the city of Hartford, Connecticut, as authorized by the Flood Control Act approved August 18, 1941, and for construction of the flood-control projects heretofore authorized for the Mermentau River, Bayou Teche, and Vermilion River, Louisiana"; and the Senate agree to the same.

ELMER THOMAS,
CARL HAYDEN,
JOHN H. OVERTON,
RICHARD B. RUSSELL,
ROBERT R. REYNOLDS,
STYLES BRIDGES,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. BUELL SNYDER,
JOE STARNES,
JOHN H. KERR,
GEORGE MAHON,
D. LANE POWERS,
ALBERT J. ENGEL,
FRANCIS CASE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the House conferees accepted the Senate amendments, save in two particulars. The House bill originally provided that the Board of Engineers should have $2,000,000 with which to make plans and specifications for improvement of rivers and harbors, and $2,000,000 for making plans and specifications for flood-control works.

We removed the $2,000,000 limitation, and left the amount to be fixed at the discretion of the Secretary of War. In the conference committee the House conferees were unwilling to leave the matter so wide open, and insisted upon having a limitation placed on the two items. So the committee agreed to a $3,000,000 limitation, which is $1,000,000 more than the House originally put in the bill.

So, as the matter now stands, the Board of Engineers will have $3,000,000 for making plans for river and harbor improvements, and $3,000,000 for making flood-control specifications, so that when the war is over the engineering surveys may be ready to give employment to such of our citizens as may need employment.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Is not that the same subject which is supposed to be handled by the National Resources Planning Board?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The bill covers only the money for the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors of the War Department, and has no relation to the National Resources Planning Board, as such. As to whether the work is being duplicated, I am not fully advised.

Mr. President, I submit the conference report and ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I rise to discuss the conference report, with a view to submitting a concurrent resolution. I do so because at the present time, devastating floods throughout the Central West and the Southwest, covering some 6 or 8 States, have flooded some 4,000,000 acres of land and made some 80,000 persons homeless. In my State of Illinois we have in the Illinois River the highest water known in the history of the State. In 1844, the records show, the highest water previous to now occurred; and yet in the floods which have just reached their crest along the Illinois River, I am advised that the water is some 3 feet higher than it was at that earlier day.

Mr. President, under section 5 which is referred to in the concurrent resolution, the Army engineers in making plans and specifications for the rebuilding or the reconstruction of any walls or levees along the Illinois River can replace such walls or levees only at the same height at which they are at the present time, or at the same height at which they were immediately prior to the present floods. That is exactly what section 5 would do.

The concurrent resolution I propose to submit would not only give the Army engineers more money to spend in connection with the flooded areas, but also would give them the immediate right to start their planning for the future, not in connection with what the height of the walls of the present projects is or recently has been, but for any height they deem to be necessary as a result of the experience they have had in the presently flooded areas. This is probably the most important part of the resolution, but let me return to the floods in my native State.

Mr. President, in Illinois alone, for example, we have 1,250,000 acres totally inundated. That means that probably 750,000 crop-acres have been totally destroyed as a result of the breaking of the levees and the overflowing of the land. That does not include thousands of acres of land on the prairies east and west of the Illinois River, where the water has stood for days, and in some places weeks, on the wheat, oats, and rye, and some of the corn which has been planted thereby destroying the germ of the plant, which means that no wheat, oats, or rye will be harvested upon those lands. If anything is done at all it will be necessary to replant those wheat and oat fields in some crops which may be harvested, provided the weather is favorable through the summer and fall.

Eleven thousand farmers are affected in Illinois as a result of this flood. The Red Cross is on the job doing its duty in connection with the refugees. There are 11,500 being cared for in Red Cross shelters in my State. This represents about one-fifth of the total families affected.

I wish to commend the War Production Board for its liberality in granting priorities to the Red Cross for building materials and fences which are necessary in connection with the rehabilitation of these flooded areas.

Mr. President, as I said in the beginning, the concurrent resolution would permit the Secretary of War, who, under section 5, is authorized to spend not to exceed $1,000,000 for any one fiscal year in rescue work or the repair and maintenance of any flood control work threatened or destroyed by flood, to use discretionary power with respect to the spending of the unobligated balance because of the damage which has been done. He would be authorized to spend any portion of the unexpended balance.

In addition, the elimination of section 5 by the passage of the concurrent resolution would accomplish two further objectives. No provision is made under section 5 for improving flood-control operations damaged in a flood. For example, if the water should rise 4 feet above the wall, in repairing that wall the Army engineers could not build the wall higher than it was originally constructed. Certainly this legislation should be amended. To now start plans and specifications for the rebuilding of levees under the old plan would be little less than criminal. That is particularly true when we realize that the present high water breaks all previous records. Also, as section 5 now reads, there would be no authority, even temporarily, until the necessary legislation authorizing it were enacted, to take any flood-control measures at any place where flood-control operations did not exist before, even though such measures are vitally necessary in view of the existing emergency. The language of the concurrent resolution takes care of that point.

Mr. President, I submit the concurrent resolution and ask that it be read.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Illinois what caused the flood?

Mr. LUCAS. The flood which came down the Illinois Valley was caused by heavy rains. In the month of May we had the heaviest rainfall on record there. It was not caused by diverting water from Lake Michigan into the Illinois Valley, if that is what the Senator has in mind.

Mr. LANGER. If it rains in the North, does not the water all come down the Mississippi River and other streams from the North?

Mr. LUCAS. One watershed is in the Illinois Valley. The waters which have come into the Illinois River and overflowed some 60 counties along that river have been entirely from the rainfall during the month of May and the latter part of April.

Mr. LANGER. But if it rained in the northern part of the country, would not the water flow south?

Mr. LUCAS. Certainly.

Mr. LANGER. If that be true, why does not the Senator amend his concurrent resolution so as to provide enough money for the Missouri River diversion, to dam some of the streams so that the water may be held back?

Mr. LUCAS. I will say to the Senator that that is not what I am trying to do at the moment. This is an emergency; and if the engineers of the War Department are now beginning to replace the levees, or to set the levees back, under the present law they are compelled to plan and specify in line with the present height of such levees. As I stated a few moments ago, as a result of the floods the Illinois River is 3 feet higher than it has ever been at any time before in history, at least so far as any record is concerned.

That is the primary purpose of the concurrent resolution, plus the fact that it would give the engineers the right to spend more than $1,000,000, which is now the limit under section 5 of the Flood Control Act.

What the Senator is talking about has merit; but it seems to me that it should come a little later, probably in connection with an over-all program to take care of the entire matter.

Mr. LANGER. I wished to be certain that the Senator had in mind the Missouri River diversion.

Mr. LUCAS. I am glad the Senator called attention to it, because I am extremely interested in the flooded areas. I visited my home State last week. I have never seen anything like what I saw there with respect to the high water and the damage and ruin which was being wrought as a result of it. I wish to do anything that is possible so far as legislation is concerned to make certain that such a thing shall not happen again if we can control it in any way.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Under the rule, of course, a conference report cannot be amended; but I am in sympathy with the statements made and the relief suggested by the Senator from Illinois.

During the past 5 days, in company with Major General Reybold, Chief of Engineers, I traveled over six States in the flooded area. We flew over Indiana, Arkansas, Missouri, Kansas, Illinois, and a part of Oklahoma. In some sections of those States, Mr. President, during the past 5 days the waters have been higher than they have been since 1844, or 99 years ago. During the past 5 days I have seen tens of thousands of acres of the finest lands in the central West entirely covered with water. All that can be seen from an airplane is the tops of houses and barns. On the outskirts of the towns could be seen the fine lands adjacent to the flooded areas. From the tops of buildings which could be seen, I know the character of improvements on the land.

Yesterday there was a group meeting in St. Louis, seeking to provide some plan for the relief of stricken farmers in that area. In the past 5 days I saw towns entirely under water. They are not large cities, but small towns, in which there is no building without water on the first floor, the second floor, or even the roof. So, of course, those towns are wholly destroyed for the time being. The residents of those towns must have some kind of relief from the Red Cross, the Public Health Service, the States, and the Federal Government. The farmers in those areas must likewise have relief.

Three things must be done: First, the people in those areas must have relief, and must have it now. Second, we must provide some plan for rebuilding the roads and bridges. Across the rivers the bridges are gone. In some places half the spans are gone. In other places the approaches are gone. In some places the roads are entirely destroyed. So in addition to helping the farmers and the residents of the towns we must help rebuild roads and bridges.

Third, as a result of this experience we must devise some plan for controlling floods to the extent they can be controlled. I am of the opinion that no reasonable amount of flood-control works would have saved the land in this emergency, because the rains have been unprecedented.

To summarize, the three points which must be given attention by the country are: First, to take care of the people in those areas; second, to rebuild roads and bridges; and third, to provide plans for the control of flood waters in the future.

At this time I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill proposing to remove the restrictions of the Department of Agriculture against the planting of certain crops. The bill would permit the people in those areas, as soon as the flood waters recede, to plant whatever crops they can plant this year. I ask that the bill be referred to the appropriate committee and printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 1133) for the relief of farmers and to increase production of farm commodities during 1943, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of existing law or rules or regulations promulgated by any agent or agents of the Government, the owner, lessee, tenant, or operator of any farm land which has been inundated by floodwaters since March 1, 1943, caused by the overflow of any lake, river, stream, or canal, causing the destruction of any growing crop or crops thereon, or causing the delayed planting of any crop or crops on any such land, may, at their discretion, plant or replant any such land in any crop or crops that will mature during the growing season of 1943: Provided, That the provisions of this section shall apply to any farm lands on which the growing crops have been destroyed by green bugs: And Provided further, That the crops so grown and produced on any such farm land shall not be governed with respect to the sale thereof by any existing law or rules or regulations made or to be made by any agent or agents of the Government.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma subsequently said: Mr. President, at the end of the statement just made by myself, I ask permission to insert a news item descriptive of the damage being done by floods.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The news item is as follows:

[From the Washington Evening Star of May 26, 1943]

1,000-MILE FLIGHT OVER FLOOD EMPHASIZES VAST DESOLATION—PEOPLE, FLEEING OVER ANGRY WATERS, CAN COME BACK, BUT CAN 1943'S CROPS?

(By Walter McCallum)

CHICAGO, May 26.—A windmill, futily beating useless arms as at waste of waters in a groove where a turbid river lapped at the eaves of abandoned homes. Cattle, abandoned on a yet dry tongue of land in the middle of yellow flood. Houses careening unoccupied down the snarling waters of an inland empire. Chickens marooned on the roof of floating barns, huddled in terror.

These were the sights seen by a group of newspapermen who flew in an Army flying fortress 1,000 miles along the course of raging rivers above the confluence of the mighty Mississippi with some of its satellite streams.

PEOPLE FLEE IN BOATS

In the picture were villages all but abandoned, residents fleeing across the face of rising waters in small boats, groups of abandoned automobiles isolated on a levee top, a cresting roar of angry waters as the rain-fed flood poured through dozens of breaks in the levee holding back the Mississippi, Illinois, and Ohio Rivers between Memphis and Peoria.

We left Washington on a routine training flight in the post midnight chill, flying through rain over the Great Smokies, over the sleeping towns of Roanoke and Asheville, reaching Memphis as dawn broke. Capt. Spencer Treharne, pilot of the big B-17, based at Hendricks Field, Fla., throttled the ship down and roared above Memphis for long minutes as he awaited daylight to fly above the flooded areas.

Memphis has not yet been badly hit. The river is high, but not outside its banks at the Tennessee city. But soon, as we flew barely 200 feet above the flood, gasoline pumps began to appear in the middle of hundreds of yards of muddy waters, roads abruptly came to a stop as the water lapped at hilltops, bridges creaked at the weight of water, and trains crept through inches of the flood.

One hundred miles above Memphis the raging waters began to get rough. The flood spread out for miles on either side of the normal river channel. Submerged houses showed roof tops, factories stood in the middle of the raging river. Devastation and desolation ruled the waters.

AIRPORT HANGARS SUBMERGED

We flew low over villages whose houses showed only their upper floors, whose church spires stuck out starkly above the flood. We flew over a new airport whose new hangars, fresh-cut wood showing yellow in the dawn were buried under water, and barracks were completely submerged. Gas tanks and gravel dumps loomed above the waters. At St. Louis, where floods are an old story, not much damage was visible. The flood was controlled between banks of concrete.

But above St. Louis we flew for miles over drowned country, where railroads stopped at the edge of the flood and frightened householders waved from upper stories as the big Fortress dipped low at 175 miles an hour.

A hundred miles north of St. Louis, where the muddy Illinois emptied its waters into the Mississippi, we saw barns and houses floating in a great inland lake whose waters spread out over a wide plain between high bluffs. At Cape Girardeau, Mo., the devastation was almost complete.

MAN'S POWER FUTILE

As a scene of waste and destruction it was impressive. As a commentary on the inability of man to handle nature on the rampage it showed man to be the futile tool of raging rivers.

The four-motored bomber thundered through the bleak valley, Captain Treharne, a veteran of Pearl Harbor, turned over the controls to one of his students.

"Not since December 7 have I seen such destruction," he said. "And this hurts almost as much."

"Gosh," said one of the young navigators, "there's more farmland and crops ruined down there than all the victory gardens in the country can produce."

The flood may not be as bad as that of 1926, although some claim it is. It may recede faster than did that one. But it has done a complete job of submerging a tremendous sweep of the most fertile farmland in America.

IMMENSE CROP DAMAGE

Damage is counted in many millions of dollars, although in spots the water has only lapped thinly over fields where the green of crops has just begun to show. They may come back. But in other places the surging river has completely covered thousands of acres with a yellow flood which will leave nothing but a coating of mud when it recedes.

America's farm production is going to be hard hit here. The humans will come back to their ruined homes, sweep out the mud, and resume living. But will the crops come back in time for this critical war year of 1943? No one knows yet.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). The parliamentary situation is that the conference report must first be adopted before there can be consideration of the concurrent resolution. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 2346) making appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, for civil functions administered by the War Department, and for other purposes, the Clerk of the House of Representatives is authorized and directed to substitute the following language for that proposed to be inserted by Senate amendment No. 3, as amended: "and so much of the unobligated balance on June 30, 1943, of the appropriation 'Flood control, general,' as the Secretary of War determines to be necessary is hereby made available for the preparation of detailed plans and specifications of authorized flood-control projects, for rescue work or the repair or maintenance of any flood-control work threatened or destroyed by flood, for improvements to any such flood-control projects or flood-control work, for necessary flood-control measures where the Secretary of War, upon the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers, determines that an emergency exists, for reimbursement to the city of Hartford, Conn., as authorized by the Flood Control Act approved August 18, 1941, and for construction of the flood-control projects heretofore authorized for the Mermentau River, Bayou Teche, and Vermilion River, La."

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, before any objection is made to the concurrent resolution in the way of a point of order, I wish to speak for just a moment on the bill which was introduced by the Senator from Oklahoma with respect to the removal of all restrictions so far as the planting of crops is concerned.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. Do I understand correctly that the Senator desires immediate action upon the concurrent resolution, or is it to be referred to a committee?

Mr. LUCAS. As I understand, a point of order will be raised against the concurrent resolution because it provides for legislation upon an appropriation bill, and I cannot very well object if the point of order is made. I hope it will not be made, but I understand it will be, and obviously I shall abide by the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I do not wish to interrupt, but I shall assume the responsibility of making the point of order. I think the Senator should know that.

Mr. LUCAS. Very well. Certainly I cannot object to it, because I am aware that the concurrent resolution is subject to a point of order. However, I wish to make a record so far as concerns what I claim to be necessary in connection with these floods, that is we need speed in enacting appropriate legislation. I present this concurrent resolution in order that I may apprise the Senate and the country of the urgency and immediate need of flood relief legislation.

Now I wish to say a word or two in connection with the bill which was introduced by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS]. I have contacted Chester Davis, in the Department of Agriculture, who advises me that he has removed practically all the restrictions in the rules of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration which have prevented the expansion of crops. In the conference which I had with Mr. Davis he assured me that all doubtful rules and regulations which might be construed as restrictions upon the planting of crops would be looked into immediately with the view of having them removed.

Mr. President, that is very important. My only reason for mentioning it is that I should not like to have the farmers of the Nation get the notion, as a result of the bill which has been introduced by the able Senator from Oklahoma, that the Agricultural Department, through Mr. Davis, is not attempting by rules and regulations to give to the farmers in my section of the country, as well as in every other section where lands are flooded, the right to plant practically any crop which they can plant, provided the floods sufficiently recede and the lands dry up to such a point that they can plant soybeans, or 90-day corn, or any other crop which they desire to plant. In my judgment, that is one thing about which the farmers are not apprised at the present time.

I believe that sooner or later Mr. Davis will make a statement in connection with this important problem, and the statement should be made as soon as possible with respect to the removal of restrictions and regulations concerning the planting of crops.

Mr. President, there is one other thing which I should like to have the country know: The Disaster Loan Corporation, which was set up a few years ago by the Congress, is now on the job in these flooded areas, ready to take over when the floods recede to such a point that they can move in and fairly appraise the damage which has been done to the individual home owners in various towns and cities throughout the country, as well as the owners of farm homes.

The Disaster Loan Corporation was a great success in the Ohio Valley, and in every other flooded area where it operated. It now has representatives in the flooded areas contacting the people where necessary, urging them to make applications for loans if they need aid in the rehabilitation and repair of their homes.

I should also like to add that insofar as the loaning of money to the farmers for seed purposes is concerned, I was advised yesterday, in talking with officials of the Farm Credit Administration, that they are on the job in St. Louis, which is the central area of the flood, and that they have plenty of money with which to make all necessary loans in connection with any seed which may be necessary to replant any of the crops which have been inundated and destroyed as a result of this unprecedented flood. It would seem to me that this is extremely important, and I am sure that if they need more money for that purpose the Congress would not hesitate to grant it.

The Federal Housing Authority is also looking into the program with respect to sending trailers into the flooded areas. I understand they have frozen, or have on hand, some 400 or 500 trailers which are available for any of the flooded areas in the event the citizens of a community might find it necessary to use them in connection with the housing of employees or the housing of those who have been evacuated from the flooded area. At least, the trailers might be of considerable help.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I am glad to hear the explanation of the able Senator from Illinois with regard to the Disaster Loan Corporation loaning money to farmers, because the same situation exists in the Northwest. I have not had a chance to read the concurrent resolution submitted by the Senator from Illinois. Does it apply to a particular area or the entire United States?

Mr. LUCAS. It covers the entire United States.

Mr. LANGER. From what the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] has said, am I to understand that the maintenance of roads which is to be provided for would include new bridges where the old bridges have been destroyed?

Mr. LUCAS. No; the concurrent resolution which I have in mind would have nothing to do with that problem. To meet such a proposal we would necessarily have to enact additional legislation. As the Senator from Oklahoma has said, millions of dollars of damage will result from the destruction of bridges and roads. Among the cities which have been inundated as a result of floods are municipalities which will not be able to take care of the replacement and repair of municipal equipment and property. It will be necessary for the Federal Government to step in and make grants to a number of towns and cities. It may be necessary to rehabilitate completely communities where the destruction of waterworks, streets, and similar utilities has resulted from the floods. Provision for such aid will have to come in a separate measure. It is not included in the proposal now before the Senate.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, may I inquire if it is the intention of the distinguished Senator to introduce such legislation to provide for the building of bridges?

Mr. LUCAS. It is. I have already taken it up with the Federal Works Administration, and it is my understanding that they will ask to appear before the Lanham committee next week when the committee will hold hearings on a bill to aid and promote the war effort. I am advised that the Federal Works Administration will ask a minimum of $25,000,000 for that particular purpose. I can whole-heartedly support that measure, and if necessary, if what is expected to be done by the House is not done, I will introduce proposed legislation here to that end.

Mr. LANGER. Would that proposed legislation cover floods all over the country?

Mr. LUCAS. Yes. Everything I have done here covers the situation all over the United States. The only reason I pointed out Illinois was because it is my home State, and the floods there are so devastating and ruinous that my attention has been focused on conditions there; but I shall leave no stone unturned to give all the legislative help that is necessary to alleviate suffering and the damage throughout the Nation which has been caused by an act of God.

Mr. LANGER. I wish to assure the Senator that he will have all the help I can give him.

Mr. LUCAS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. LANGER. I desire to call the Senator's attention to the fact that we have in North Dakota some 15 or 17 counties that are not in shape to build bridges. Many bridges are out. One bridge is out on the main highway across the State farther west at Fallon, Mont., with the result that it is necessary to haul war materials 70 or 80 miles south in order to get them across the State. I hope that legislation on this subject will be energetically pushed, and I will do all that I can to help the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. The legislation I have in mind would cover the situation disclosed by the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, in the interest of the proper and appropriate control of legislative procedure, and in deference to the rules of the Senate, I think our legislation should always follow a proper and appropriate line. I am in very deep sympathy with the proposal made by the distinguished Senator from Illinois; indeed, I shall support prudent legislation at the proper time to give relief to the distressed people now suffering from this great disaster; but, Mr. President, it cannot be done in this fashion.

This is an effort to amend an appropriation bill after a conference report has been acted upon by the Senate. One would have to proceed without any regard to the Senate rules if he did not make a point of order, which I now do, first, that the resolution can only be received by unanimous consent, and to that I object.

Secondly, it is an effort to attach legislation to an appropriation bill which has passed both Houses of Congress, and is now the product of a conference committee. So I make the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the rules of the Senate, the point of order made by the Senator from Oregon is sustained.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I recognize the validity of the point of order, and I ask at this time, out of order, to introduce a bill to amend section 5 of the Flood Control Act, approved August 18, 1941, which will accomplish what I proposed in the concurrent resolution. I request that the bill be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be received and referred as requested.

The bill (S. 1134) to amend section 5 of the Flood Control Act, approved August 18, 1941, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. HILL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Gerry	Pepper
Andrews	Gillette	Radcliffe
Austin	Green	Reed
Bailey	Guffey	Revercomb
Ball	Gurney	Reynolds
Bankhead	Hatch	Robertson
Bilbo	Hawkes	Russell
Bone	Hayden	Smith

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

VISIT TO THE SENATE OF HIS EXCELLENCY, HON. EDWIN BARCLAY, PRESIDENT OF LIBERIA

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, in a few minutes President Barclay of Liberia will visit the Senate, and I ask unanimous consent that the Chair name a committee to escort him to the floor of the Senate, and that then the Senate stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Chair appoints the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], as the committee to greet the President of Liberia and escort him into the Chamber.

Pursuant to the unanimous consent agreement, the Senate will now stand in recess, subject to the call of the Chair.

The Senate being in recess, at 12 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m., His Excellency, Hon. Edwin Barclay, President of Liberia, escorted by the committee appointed by the Vice President, consisting of Mr. Hill, Mr. McNary, Mr. Wagner, and Mr. Capper, preceded by the Secretary, Edwin A. Halsey, and the Sergeant at Arms, Wall Doxey, entered the Chamber and took the place assigned him on the rostrum in front of the Vice President's desk.

The members of the party accompanying the President of Liberia, including Hon. W. V. S. Tubman, President-elect of Liberia; Capt. Alford Russ, the military aide to President Barclay; Brig. Gen. Benjamin Davis, United States Military Aide; Mr. Fred Hibbard and Mr. Stanley Woodward, on behalf of the United States State Department; and Mr. Walter Walker, Liberian Consul General, New York City, entered the Chamber and were escorted to the seats assigned them on the floor to the left of the Vice President's desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Members of the Senate, ladies and gentlemen, I introduce to you the President of Liberia. [Applause.]

President BARCLAY. Mr. President and Members of the Senate, I wish to express to you my high appreciation of the courtesy shown me in permitting me to observe for a few moments the processes of lawmaking in the United States. [Applause.]

Following his salutation, the President of Liberia and the distinguished visitors accompanying him were escorted from the Chamber.

At 12 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m. the Senate reassembled, when it was called to order by the Vice President.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had severally agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the following bills of the House:

H. R. 170. An act to confer jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of O. T. Travis;

H. R. 328. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior, because of military operations, to defer or waive payments under nonmineral leases of public lands in Alaska;

H. R. 535. An act for the relief of the legal guardian of Donna Pittel;

H. R. 940. An act for the relief of Howard E. Dickison;

H. R. 1160. An act for the relief of Alva Burton Rickey;

H. R. 1468. An act for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Azer; and

H. R. 2067. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Middle District of Georgia to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of H. M. Reid & Co., of Macon, Ga.

The message also announced that the House had severally agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills of the House:

H. R. 777. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the hours of employment and safeguard the health of females employed in the District of Columbia," approved February 24, 1914;

H. R. 1153. An act for the relief of Cordie Underwood and Wilbur Kea;

H. R. 1667. An act to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of Mount Vernon, Alexandria & Washington Railway Co., a corporation; and

H. R. 2115. An act to amend the District of Columbia Unemployment Compensation Act to provide for unemployment compensation in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to each of the following bills of the House; asked conferences with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. MCGEHEE, Mr. PATTON, and Mr. PITTENGER were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conferences:

H. R. 235. An act for the relief of Forrest W. Dickey; and

H. R. 1784. An act for the relief of the legal guardian of Leonard L. Gay.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1463) for the relief of Florence B. Hutchinson, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. MCGEHEE, Mr. KEOGH, and Mr. PITTENGER were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 7. An act making unlawful the requirement for the payment of a poll tax as a prerequisite to voting in a primary or other election for national officers; and

H. R. 2427. An act to amend section 32 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 170. An act to confer jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of O. T. Travis;

H. R. 328. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior, because of military operations, to defer or waive payments under nonmineral leases of public lands in Alaska;

H. R. 535. An act for the relief of the legal guardian of Donna Pittel;

H. R. 777. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the hours of employment and safeguard the health of females employed in the District of Columbia," approved February 24, 1914;

H. R. 940. An act for the relief of Howard E. Dickison;

H. R. 1153. An act for the relief of Cordie Underwood and Wilbur Kea;

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED

The following bills were each read twice by their titles and referred as indicated:

H. R. 7. An act making unlawful the requirement for the payment of a poll tax as a prerequisite to voting in a primary or other election for national officers; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H. R. 2427. An act to amend section 32 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1762) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I believe the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] desires to make a speech on the bill at this time, and I therefore yield to him.

Mr. TAFT obtained the floor.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield long enough for me to ask a question of the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. At the meeting of the Senate on Monday an amendment was offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], which was agreed to, providing for the restoration of the salaries of the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission to their statutory level.

Mr. MCKELLAR. It left out the members of the Tariff Commission——

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. And of the Maritime Commission.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. This is a question to be settled in conference, and since the same action was not taken in regard to the members of the other two commissions, would it be out of harmony with the ideas of the acting chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if I should ask unanimous consent that the members of the Tariff Commission and the members of the Maritime Commission be treated as were the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission, so that the whole question may go to conference and be considered as an entirety, instead of the amendment probably being thrown out because one commission is treated in one way and the others in another?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator was present on Monday last, and will recall that in the discussion which then arose between the Senator from Montana and me I suggested, as I recall, that the members of the other two commissions named in section 102 were in exactly the same attitude, insofar as the law enacted by Congress in 1932 was concerned, as were the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission. I suggested, then, that if the salaries of the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission were increased, by the same token the salaries of the members of the two other commissions should be increased, and if the Senator asks unanimous consent thus to amend section 102, on page 66 of the bill, I shall not object.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that section 102 may be amended by removing the limitation on the salaries of the members of the Tariff Commission and members of the Maritime Commission.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, and I am not sure that I will, I think that the suggestion made by the Senator from Utah fits in with the provisions of the bill. I will ask the Senator from Tennessee whether that is correct?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; it does fit into the bill. The language of the bill, on page 66, section 102, is as follows:

SEC. 102. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, the salaries of the Commissioners of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Commissioners of the United States Maritime Commission, with the exception of the Chairman so long as the office is held by the present incumbent, and the Commissioners of the United States Tariff Commission shall be at the rate of $10,000 each per annum.

The unanimous consent request made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] refers to the language of section 66 on page 102.

I wish to say that these salaries were changed through an act of Congress, and, by the way, in an appropriation bill, in 1932, and they have continuously since that time remained at $10,000. I am very frank to say that I do not think that members of the Government, even though their duties are increased, who are receiving as much as $10,000—what I say does not apply to the lower paid employees—should ask or expect an increase of salary, but if the salaries of the Interstate Commerce Commissioners are increased, the same action should be taken with respect to the members of the Maritime Commission and the Tariff Commission.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, may we have a ruling on my unanimous consent request?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS]?

Mr. REED. Yes, I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas objects.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I yielded only for the purpose of a question; not for the purpose of a unanimous consent request being made.

Mr. President, I rise to oppose the proposed increase in the appropriation for the National Resources Planning Board offered by the Senator from Tennessee, and also to oppose the committee amendment which would appropriate $200,000 for the National Resources Planning Board, after all appropriations for that board have been eliminated by the House of Representatives. In opposing the proposed amendment and the proposed appropriation I wish to make it clear that I am not opposed to the making of post-war plans. I strongly supported the resolution creating the George post-war planning committee, and I am a member of that committee. I believe the George committee will undertake to develop as constructive a program as possible, with some relation to the realities, and I believe that the making of post-war plans in a broad way should be left to that committtee It is not as if the National Resources Planning Board were going to make any detailed plans. They do not make detailed plans. A few moments ago the Army engineers were granted $6,000,000 for the making of actual plans for public works on the rivers and harbors. The National Resources Planning Board is merely trying to do with Government appropriations what the George committee can perfectly well do.

Mr. President, I am not opposed to planning by private organizations, no matter what they may be. I should be glad to have plans made by communistic organizations, or Socialist organizations, or even Fascist organizations, insofar as they are merely private organizations, but I oppose this proposed appropriation because of the kind of planning which the National Resources Planning Board has done, and is doing, and is proposing to do, and the kind of plans which they are making for the people of the United States.

I cannot understand why a Congress which believes and constantly reasserts its beliefs, in one philosophy of government, approximately the same philosophy which has guided this country for the last 150 years, should provide hundreds of thousands of dollars promiscuously for the making of plans by an agency which believes in an entirely different philosophy, which appears to be partly socialistic and partly the product of a dangerous financial imagination. Why should the Congress finance a propaganda which is aimed directly at the principles and convictions of a large majority of both Houses of Congress? Why should we give the agency in question 10 times or even 4 times the amount of money we have given to the George post-war problems committee? If there is to be an administrative agency to deal with planning, a new one should be created, its powers and duties carefully defined, and the appointment of its members confirmed by the Senate of the United States. There is no legislative authority for this board except in one small respect, and the members, so far as I know, have never been confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. President, I am opposed to the planning of the National Resources Planning Board, because after reading practically all the documents which they have prepared, I find they are based on two principles which I thoroughly disapprove and which I believe are disapproved by a majority of the Congress of the United States in both Houses.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will permit me to interrupt him in order that I may comment about the statement just made that there was no statutory authority for the National Resources Planning Board I should like to explain to the Senator that in 1939 a point of order was made against a similar appropriation on the ground that there was no statutory authority for it. That point of order was overruled by the Senate. In the debate it was explained that the legislative authority for the Board is contained in the Federal Employment Stabilization Act of 1931 which was passed under the administration of President Hoover, and in a joint resolution of July 7, 1939, public resolution No. 20, Seventy-sixth Congress. It is found on page 230 of the Senate hearings on this bill.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, probably I overstated the fact when I said there is no legislative authority. There is nothing in the statute which authorizes the writing of this kind of legislation or which authorizes any of the activities in which the National Resources Planning Board has engaged. The statute contains a carry-over authority of some kind from the Federal Employment Stabilization Committee. Strictly speaking I may be wrong, but as a practical matter I am correct, when I say that the Congress has never passed a planning law, has never created a planning agency, and has never given the Board authority to do the kind of things it is doing, unless by the appropriation of money from time to time.

As I have said, I have read the reports. I cannot claim that I have read every word of them. I have gone through them page by page. In my opinion, they are based on two policies and theories. The first is the theory of unlimited public spending and the constant increase of the public debt after the war. A policy of deficit spending is implicit in the measures the Board proposes and in its attitude toward the spending of Government money. In the second place, the Board's plans are based on unlimited Government interference in and regulation of all business activity, plus a very large amount of Government regulation of what is now private industry. I intend to review the reports in order to support those conclusions.

I note the letter from Mr. Charles E. Merriam, vice chairman and member of the Board, which was inserted in the RECORD of May 20 by the distinguished majority leader. In that letter Mr. Merriam denies that the Board advocates deficit spending as a continuous policy of the Federal Government. In spite of Mr. Merriam's denial, I think I can show that the Board has taken just that position. Mr. Merriam further denies that the Board believes that we are no longer in an expanding and dynamic economy. I do not know who criticized him for that, but certainly the criticism was justified. The real fact is that the Board is in favor of an economy expanding like a balloon, and just as certain to be blown up if we keep following the program it has advocated.

I wish to have printed in the RECORD at this point, Mr. President, in fairness, the letter I have received from Mr. Frederic A. Delano, chairman of the National Resources Planning Board, in which he also denies that a policy of deficit spending is advocated by the Board. In the letter he says:

> The position of the Board is that public financing should be used as an instrument of public policy and whether financing by deficit or otherwise, it should depend upon the condition with which Government must deal at the time.

It seems to me that that statement itself is an equivocal one. It seems to say that deficits are wholly unimportant except as instruments of public policy. I think that position is reflected by the complete absence from all the Board's reports of any answer to the question with respect to where the money is coming from.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have the letter printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL RESOURCES PLANNING BOARD,
Washington, D. C., May 20, 1943.

Hon. ROBERT A. TAFT,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR TAFT: I have just read with much interest a report in the New York Times for May 20 of an address delivered by you to the National Society of the Sons of the American Revolution.

I found your remarks very interesting. In many particulars the position taken by you on questions of government policy is substantially the same as that taken by the National Resources Planning Board. I refer especially to what you had to say about private enterprise, the appropriate role of Federal loans, a social security program, etc.

I am sure you will not object, however, to my calling your attention to a part of your address which, unfortunately, charges the National Resources Planning Board with advocating policies which in fact the Resources Board advocates no more than do you. I refer to the statements you made regarding deficit financing. No doubt you were misled into the statement you have made by the recent book published by Dr. Moulton. Mr. Beardsley Ruml, one of the Board's consultants, recently said in New York "Dr. Moulton's reference to the Board is an uninformed misstatement of the Board's recommendations."

It is the policy of the Board, and in that the Board merely accepts the policy which this country has adhered to from the beginning, that there are conditions in which public expenditures must exceed the revenues, and deficit financing must be resorted to. The present war provides one of those conditions, and no one would deny the appropriateness of deficit financing at this time This is far from saying that continuous deficit financing is either necessary or proper, for the Board neither advocates nor believes in such a policy. Quite the contrary, there are times when the revenues of government should exceed expenditures—sometimes by wide margins. It is possible that shortly after the end of this war conditions will develop wherein the tendency to inflation will have to be controlled by collections in excess of expenditures and sharp reduction in debt.

One of the statements quoted by Dr. Moulton in itself states this position. It is as follows:

"Whether taxes should equal, fall short of, or exceed expenditures must be decided according to economic conditions" (p. 17, National Resources Development, 1942 report, National Resources Planning Board).

The position of the Board is that public financing should be used as an instrument of public policy and whether financing by deficit or otherwise, it should depend upon the condition with which Government must deal at the time.

Personally, I write thus fully because I know that you will not at any time willfully misrepresent our position, and I am sure you realize also that at this time it is most important that all good Americans understand one another.

Sincerely yours,

FREDERIC A. DELANO,
Chairman.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I turn now to the reports of the Board itself. Up to the year 1940 the Board's reports were comparatively harmless. In February 1940 we discussed the appropriation for the Board; and about all the Board said it was going to do was to inaugurate a study of national relief policy and a study of transportation. The only question before Congress at that time, 3 years ago, was whether the Board was the proper agency to do that work or whether other agencies were already engaged in it. Even at that time the motion of the senior Senator from Louisiana to reduce the appropriation to $100,000 was rejected in the Senate by only one vote; but in 1941 the Board started on its course of advanced thinking, and its program reached its culmination in the recent 1943 report. Let me say that also in 1940 the Board was recommending a program of Federal public works. It had very limited ideas or figures at that time, and the total program it was submitting was one calling for approximately $6,000,000,000 of expenditures. A large part of the works recommended were actually planned by the Army engineers and consisted of the same kind of public works we had previously undertaken.

But the general method pursued by the Board in its reports is to state broad ideals with which no one would disagree as general objectives of public policy, then to belittle all past efforts to reach those ideals, and finally to promise the American people that the reaching of those ideals is a simple matter if we merely follow the methods proposed by the National Resources Planning Board. The actual methods presented are vague and indefinite; but no argument is admitted to exist in opposition to the Board's proposals. The proposals are plausible because no analysis of them is made.

The difficulties of carrying out the proposals are never mentioned, and the unfortunate results of abandoning certain basic American principles are completely disregarded. The result is that the general effect of the reports is to make false promises to the people, to assure them of obtaining results which cannot possibly be secured, and which at best can only be a far-distant goal.

In order to show what I mean, I shall read first from the 1942 report. In that report the Board says that the American Bill of Rights and the Constitution are more or less outmoded, and that the Board has drawn up a new bill of rights to take their place.

The 1942 report proposes, therefore, a bill of rights. It follows up the "four freedoms" in general:

> Any new declaration of personal rights * * * here and now must include:
> 1. The right to work, usefully and creatively through the productive years.
> 2. The right to fair pay, adequate to command the necessities and amenities of life in exchange for work, ideas, thrift, and other socially valuable service.
> 3. The right to adequate food, clothing, shelter, and medical care.
> 4. The right to security, with freedom from fear of old age, want, dependency sickness, unemployment, and accident.
> 5. The right to live in a system of free enterprise, free from compulsory labor, irresponsible private power, arbitrary public authority, and unregulated monopolies.
> 6. The right to come and go, to speak or to be silent, free from the spyings of secret political police.

That right is already guaranteed in the Bill of Rights.

> 7. The right to equality before the law, with equal access to justice in fact.

That is a right which our people have had for 150 years.

> 8. The right to education, for work, for citizenship, and for personal growth and happiness; and
> 9. The right to rest, recreation, and adventure; the opportunity to enjoy life and take part in an advancing civilization.

The Bill of Rights which is set forth in the report is a new Bill of Rights. Of course, most of the rights are perfectly proper goals. Everyone would like to attain them. But to promise every citizen of the United States those rights is to promise something which a large number of people may never succeed in securing.

In the 1943 report, that program is joined with the Atlantic Charter and the "four freedoms." On pages 6 and 7 of the report we find:

> It is time to outline more sharply a program through which democratic ideals may be more perfectly realized in the affairs of the community in the post-war period. The broad bases of such a program have already been stated in the "four freedoms" and in the Atlantic Charter. We have previously endeavored to spell out the program in greater detail in the new Bills of Rights and in the five specific objectives presented in our report for 1942.

In the 1943 report the rights are again stated, and with the statement that—

The Board further believes that it should be the declared policy of the United States Government:

To underwrite full employment for the employables;

To guarantee a job for every man released from the armed forces and the war industries at the close of the war, with fair pay and working conditions;

To guarantee and, when necessary, underwrite:

Equal access to security,

Equal access to education for all,

Equal access to health and nutrition for all, and Wholesome housing conditions for all.

It is proposed to underwrite and guarantee every one of the rights in the new bill of rights which is set out in the 1943 report. The language in the 1943 report is large and global. It is attractive; but it either states principles which everyone has admitted, or it states as rights and promises something that we cannot possibly in good faith promise the American people.

We look to and plan for:

1. The fullest possible development of the human personality, in relation to the common good, in a framework of freedoms and rights, of justice, liberty, equality, and the consent of the governed.

There is page after page of that sort of language. It has been written before. So far as substance is concerned, if any of these reports could not be written with one-fourth the space and paper used, I should be very much mistaken.

As a means of protecting justice, freedom, and democracy:

2. The fullest possible development of the productive potential of all of our resources, material and human, with full employment, continuity of income, equal access to minimum security and living standards, and a balance between economic stability and social adventure.

There we have the ultimate goal. We are to assure everyone a balance between economic stability and social adventure. The United States Government is to make this world an adventurous world, in which everyone shall have a tremendously good time and the opportunity to enjoy all the adventures which he may witness on the silver screen.

I read further:

As means of insuring the peaceful pursuit of life, liberty, and happiness:

III. An effective jural order of the world outlawing violence and imperialism, old or new fashioned, in international relations—

The Board is stepping out a little when it departs from the domestic field. I do not believe it claims to have any power to make post-war international plans—and permitting and energizing the fullest development of resources and rights everywhere.

The three factors—democracy, dynamic economy, and peace—never in the history of our time have been united in a political system.

But the National Resources Planning Board finds no difficulty in doing so. It says:

This is a novel combination never before attempted as a whole, although tried in part, nor ever before possible in man's history until the present time.

All previous rules are to be set aside; all the difficulties involved are to be overcome; and we are to step into a complete Utopia.

Mr. President, I have studied the reports with some care, and I have yet to find any specific recommendations to explain, for example, how the Government can underwrite a full and useful job for every citizen of the United States, which the Board says we must guarantee. Certainly we must guarantee some relief, but how can we guarantee a full and useful job for every person in the United States? Suppose there are 15,000,000 people in need of a "full and useful job." How are we to find useful things on which to employ them? How are we to find the money to pay them $1,500 or $2,000 a year each, which would amount to $20,000,000,000, to give every man a full and useful job?

Does the Board say where the money is to come from? It does not. There is no suggestion anywhere as to how this vast promise is to be carried out.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. I should be interested to be advised, if the Senator has the information, as to what becomes of the reports and suggestions, couched in such beautiful generalities. I do not recall that any bill sponsored by the National Resources Planning Board to carry out any one of these recommendations, whether good, bad or indifferent, has ever been submitted to the Congress. Of course, we have had legislation dealing with the various topics to which the Board refers; but, so far as I know, no bill or plan has been presented to the Congress to carry out any of the objectives to which the National Resources Planning Board refers. I am wondering whether or not it is a waste of time, paper, and good literature to prepare and submit such reports, and have nothing done about them.

Mr. TAFT. I believe the Senator to be correct. I do not know of any bill which the National Resources Planning Board has ever prepared, except one, proposing the appropriation of more money to provide State planning associations to work in cooperation with the National Resources Planning Board. I know of no actual legislation.

Furthermore, I do not think anyone who might actually set out to write a statute would find any help in anything I have read from the National Resources Planning Board's reports. The reports may give one a global idea of the situation; but so far as getting down to brass tacks is concerned, so far as real legislation and the creation of real work is concerned, I do not think the reports would be of any assistance.

Mr. OVERTON. I thoroughly agree with the Senator.

There is another phase of the matter. Does the Senator know of any particular project which has been recommended by the National Resources Planning Board as such, which has come before the Congress for authorization?

Mr. TAFT. I should not like to say that there were none. There have been measures relating to some of the matters recommended by the Board. My impression is that those bills have come from the departments more directly interested.

Mr. OVERTON. I am familiar, for example, with the work done by the Army engineers with reference to rivers and harbors, flood control, and various other projects. They make their recommendations made by the Chief of Engineers with respect to those projects. However, I understand—I may be in error—that there was an Executive order that all the projects approved by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors should be submitted to the National Resources Planning Board before any report thereon was made by the Chief of Engineers. Nevertheless the Commerce Committee of the Senate and the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House act upon the recommendations of the Chief of Engineers. We do not wait for any recommendation to be made by the National Resources Planning Board in respect to any such projects.

Mr. TAFT. I thank the Senator.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HILL. With reference to the Senator's inquiry about any of the plans suggested by the Board being written into legislation, I think we should understand, first, that the National Resources Planning Board is not what might be termed a "line" agency; it is not an executive or administrative agency. It is a staff agency for the coordination and correlation, in large measure, of the plans of other agencies. It serves very much the same purpose for planning as does the Bureau of the Budget for appropriations or financing.

Take the subject of social security as an example. The National Resources Planning Board would not come to Congress with a bill in connection with social security. It would help coordinate and correlate the plans of agencies dealing with social security. However, any proposed legislation would very likely come from the administrative or line agency having to do with social security, which is, of course, the Federal Security Administration.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, it seems to me that the development of a proper social-security program—and I am in favor of it—can best be accomplished in the most constructive way by the George committee preparing a social-security program, and the Finance Committee of the Senate developing such a program. I do not believe they will receive much assistance from the report on Security, Work, and Relief Policies issued by the National Resources Planning Board. They may receive some assistance from it, but so far as specific measures are concerned, I doubt it.

Mr. HILL. I disagree with the Senator. Since I have been a Member of Congress I have not found that the Congress has been able to draft any comprehensive legislation dealing with a fundamental, over-all subject such as social security. It must have the benefit of the advice, opinions, and studies of those at the other end of the Avenue who have the time to make such studies, which the Congress and its committees do not have. The Congress does not have time to make studies and investigations, and bring forth expert advice.

Mr. TAFT. Perhaps Congress can do better in the future than it has done in the past, now that the Senator from Alabama is a Member of the Senate.

Mr. HILL. To be perfectly frank, in my opinion, no group of men anywhere work harder, more devotedly, or more indefatigably, than Members of Congress. However, the average Member of Congress, be he in the Senate or in the House of Representatives, has so many things to do that he cannot become an expert on the various phases of social security in the same way that a man in the Social Security Administration, who devotes his full time to one particular thing, can become expert.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, whether or not Congress can do it, it is certain that the National Resources Planning Board will not do it. The department concerned with the matter will do it. If it is not done in Congress, the Social Security Board will prepare and present a measure, as it has presented a number of social-security measures heretofore.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. In that connection, may I inquire of the Senator from Ohio, the Senator from Alabama, or any other Senator, if he knows whether the Chairman or any member of the National Resources Planning Board has ever appeared before the Senate committee dealing with social-security legislation and made a recommendation or submitted any concrete plan for legislation?

Mr. TAFT. So far as I know, he has not appeared before the Finance Committee since I have been a member of that committee.

Mr. HILL. As I understand, it is not the function of the officials of the National Resources Planning Board to appear before congressional committees. The so-called line agencies, the executive and administrative agencies having jurisdiction of the particular matter, come before Congress to present proposed legislation on the present testimony. Much of what they present may well be based on plans which have been correlated or coordinated for them, or provided for them, by the National Resources Planning Board.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I wish to read a few more of the global promises, so to speak, of the National Resources Planning Board before proceeding to a discussion of their financial policy.

The report states:

Enough for all is now possible for the first time in history.

Mr. TOBEY. Enough of what?

Mr. TAFT. Enough food and everything else for all for the first time in history. There is always a reflection on the past. No one really did anything before the Board came into existence.

I continue reading:

With the will to act it is possible to reach this peacetime goal with no great departure from the pattern of life and enterprise that we have enjoyed. Government can and should underwrite effective demand for goods and services. * * *

The Government need not, and should not, alone undertake the attainment of such high national production, but can underwrite it and cooperate in its attainment. * * *

In peace no less than in war, leadership must come from the stout-hearted, the buoyant of spirit, and the fertile of mind.

I do not know whether the Board was referring to the present administration, or whether it was referring to the members of the Board. In any event, it is certainly promising something big when it asserts that:

In peace no less than in war, leadership must come from the stout-hearted, the buoyant of spirit, and the fertile of mind.

The report continues:

The best discipline, the highest morale, the greatest productivity are alike the products of good will, mutual confidence, and genuine cooperation among men. The loftier values of life are not fostered by brutality and violence, but by reason and justice.

The Board certainly has made an extraordinary discovery. All this language is along that general line. It seems to me to be a pure waste of time. So far as it is merely a promise to create this condition and a statement that it can be done without the slightest difficulty, I think it is most unfortunate in its results.

Mr. President, I have studied the reports with some care, and I have yet to find any specific recommendation explaining, for instance, how the Government can underwrite a full and useful job for every citizen of the United States. I have yet to find any method proposed by which we can guarantee to every man social adventure or the right to fair play. In short, the reports are a combination of "hooey" and false promises which can only prove a snare and a delusion to those who take them seriously.

Coming to the financial policy implied in these reports, I think it is fair to say that they endorse the theory that there is no limit to Government spending because I can find nowhere any suggestion as to how the money is to be raised. In one place the reports contain a recommendation that corporate taxes and consumption taxes should be reduced, although at the same time they recommend a large increase in peace-time expenditures.

In the 1941 report we find the first reference to the general theory which underlies the remainder of the reports. On page 4 there is a kind of paean of joy at the results of the war spending. For the first time the Government has spent a considerable amount of money.

The 1941 report states:

The barrier that stands between us and the attainment of what we have looked on as the American standard of living is in part a psychological barrier. It is the notion that only through a vast national abstinence can we provide heeded capital improvements or public works; that if we wish to provide these things we shall have to tighten our belts; that is, reduce our standard of living.

In other words, it is no longer necessary for anyone to accumulate savings or save capital. All we need to do is to allow the Government to provide it.

The report continues:

The current and dramatic example, the decision by the Congress and the Executive to do the things required in our defense program—has set in motion a connected series of forces which will in time go far toward attaining the goal of full employment. Given our resources, equipment, techniques, and skills, only that decision—only that courageous implementation of the will-to-do—was required to release the log jam of idle plants and idle men.

This was back in 1941—

Just spend enough Government money.

True, many of those "logs" will be long in reaching the mills, will require time in reaching their final stage of finished products, but the jam has been broken. It is an instructive commentary on our times that only under the threat of external aggression could we as a people summon the courage to implement this will-to-do.

There is no suggestion or mention of the fact that the will-to-do is implemented by a $6,000,000,000 Government deficit which since that time has become a $60,000,000,000 Government deficit.

There is no suggestion whatever that there is any problem in financing any of this program. All we have to do is to go ahead and spend the money, and everything will be Utopian. The clear implication is that since employment was produced by a Government deficit in wartime, it should be produced by a Government deficit in peacetime.

In the fall of 1941 the Board issued a pamphlet called After Defense—What? On pages 3 and 4 thereof I find the following statement of its views:

When we organize for maximum production on the basis of full employment, without being stopped by the costs, we discover, as have other nations, that increased production pays the real costs involved. Doing the job pays the bill. In other words, the central problem is not money: it is manpower, resources, and organization. At last we are beginning to see that finance was made for man, and not man for finance.

A modern nation cannot avoid balancing its total production-consumption budget.

When the Board says that "doing the job pays the bill," it can mean only one thing. Obviously it does not pay the Government debt. It means that the Government debt makes no difference. If deficits make no difference, there is no object in avoiding deficits, and we are bound to have a continuing deficit policy, in spite of Mr. Merriam's denial.

On page 15 of this pamphlet there is a reference to the President's request for a plan of financing post-war activities, but neither here nor elsewhere has any plan been suggested.

> The President has asked the Board, in cooperation with other departments and agencies, to study how the needed activities of the post-defense period are to be financed and what devices can be evolved for appropriate sharing of the costs.

That is the only reference I can find anywhere to the question as to where the money is to come from to pay for this "courageous implementation of the will to do."

All these reports, like the 1941 quotation regarding the "courageous implementation of the will to do," are based on the theory that we can prime the pump by public works and Government spending; that such spending is a good thing, no matter whether the public works are valuable or not. As Mr. Yantis, one of the members of the Board, testified several years ago before a House committee, the Board believes that "even leaf-raking creates wealth." If leaf-raking creates wealth, that means, in effect, that Government spending itself creates wealth, and that we do not need to do anything else; we do not need to worry about anything further.

In my opinion, public works should be undertaken for the value they give the public or as a means to furnish absolutely necessary relief. They should not be undertaken for the purpose of spending money.

I shall make a brief reference to Prof. Alvin H. Hansen because he is the economic adviser of the Board, and probably the most influential adviser of the Board. I quote briefly from some of his views on the same subject. He says:

> We shall come out of the war debt-free. We shall have no external debt, only an internal debt. A public debt internally held has none of the essential earmarks of a private debt. A public debt is an instrument of public policy. It is a means to control the national income, in conjunction with the tax structure, to regulate the distribution of income. An internal debt is, in fact, so different from what we commonly think of as debt * * * that it should scarcely be called a debt at all.

He says further:

> The attack on chronic unemployment by means of public expenditures financed by a continually rising public debt is essentially a conservative proposal and—

The Board has not endorsed Mr. Hansen in every respect, but, nevertheless, he is a guiding factor in their financial economy.

I have already referred, Mr. President, to the many rights which the Government is required to guarantee and underwrite. This implies that the Government must provide all these rights, no matter what the cost. The cost would be staggering, probably half the total income of the people of the United States in normal times. There is not even a hint in the reports of the tremendous cost of guaranteeing these rights, and underwriting them, even if it were desirable to do so.

The next element of spending proposed is found on pages 6 and 7 of the 1943 report. On those pages there is discussed spending for foreign or international purposes after the war. I quote from the report:

> The United States must gear its agriculture and industry to the tasks involved, and perhaps apply some form of lease-lend, use its shipping facilities, and supply technicians and organizers on a scale unknown heretofore.

The report further states:

> Whatever domestic policies we adopt for insuring full employment might, therefore, be adjusted to the fact that there will be a large-scale development and growth of our capital goods industries for a number of years in order to aid in the development of Europe, China, Latin America, or other areas.

They are going to spend Government money in order to aid the development of all the rest of the world.

While I am on this point, I read a little reference to immigration:

> Another question of external-internal relations which will rise again is that of migration and population resettlements after the war. The United States can maintain its present restrictive migration policy with a clear conscience only to the extent to which we help to maintain employment and production elsewhere so as to make need for immigration less urgent.

In other words, we either have to spend a great amount of money helping other nations to support their unemployed, or we have to let them come here and work in the United States.

When we come to the industrial part of the 1943 program we find countless proposals for spending Government money in industry. First of all, we have the numerous public-works projects. We are going to spend, so far as I can estimate, on public works anywhere from three to six million dollars a year; and when we come to the industrial proposals we find that we are going to finance practically all industry. I will refer later to the different regulations; but every single proposal that is made involves the spending of Government money on industry.

When we come to the social-security report on security work and relief policies, there is not even an estimate of the expense. I estimate that the Beveridge plan in England as applied to this country would cost about $21,000,000,000 a year. The program of the National Resources and Planning Board would certainly cost all of that, plus a number of billions for education and various other services not included in the Beveridge report.

On page 15, without any real study of housing needs, the Board advocates "a large public-housing program." Anyone with any sense would advocate a housing program that is financed, so far as possible, by private money, supplemented only to the extent absolutely necessary by public funds; but the Board is in favor right off, quickly, without any further consideration of a large public-housing program.

Surely a board that can propose all this Government spending, and suggest nothing in the way of taxes except a reduction both of corporation and consumers taxes, is really advocating a continuous taxation policy. There is not the slightest evidence to discuss the dangers of Government spending.

We shall come out of this war with a public debt of at least $300,000,000,000. That presents the most serious threat to our entire economy; the problem of meeting that threat is the most serious problem that any post-war planner could confront; and yet the National Resources Planning Board passes it off without a word.

Instead of that, we are asked for a continuation in peacetime of the tremendous spending of war and after the war a constant increase of the public debt for peace expenditures as well as to replace those of war. Incidentally, apparently, we are going to continue the war expenditures at the rate of some $20,000,000,000 a year for 2 or 3 or 4 years to come. There can be only two results of such a spending policy. The first is tremendously to increase taxation. Such taxation would be a heavy burden on every worker. It would choke industrial activity; it would start every new enterprise with two strikes against it before it started. The alternative to a tremendously burdensome tax system, practically choking further development of the country, is inflation, taxing the wage-earner in the increased wages which he pays for food and clothing. We have seen how difficult it is even in war-time to prevent inflation resulting from vast Government spending. In peace-time, when the people would simply refuse to submit to the fierce regulation of wages and prices, there would be no possibility of stopping the indefinite rise of prices and the destruction of the value of money, savings, life insurance, and all the accumulations of a lifetime.

Mr. President, apart from this spending philosophy which underlies every suggestion of the National Resources Planning Board, and will underlie everything they do hereafter, we find now another plan to create prosperity. That plan is Government action to stimulate industry or to operate industry. That is a new feature of the 1943 report. Up to that time it was largely a question of private enterprise, and even in the 1943 report lip service is constantly paid to private enterprise and at the same time that socialistic plans are advanced to regulate and socialize and governmentize all industry. I quote briefly from the 1943 report which sets forth this philosophy, beginning with page 10.

In dealing first with the demobilization of war plants, machines, and war contracts, the Board is to plan "for a more desirable regional distribution of manufacturing from the standpoint of national defense and local diversification, by retaining in operation selected plants, financed in new industrial areas during the war by the Defense Plant Corporation or directly by Government allowance of rapid depreciation." Other plants are to be checked up.

The Government is to decide where industry is to be and where industry is not to be. At one point the Board indicate that they wish to have industry arranged so that there will not be as much hauling on the railroads, or cross hauling. It is all to be arranged. They are to give "technical assistance to private operators of war plants to find the most appropriate peacetime use for their buildings, equipment, and labor skills." Then they will only lend money, apparently, to those plants which take their advice. In other words, they are going into the post-war period and declare what kind of industries shall be engaged in, where they shall be, and what kind of machinery shall be employed.

Placing of orders for new major development projects, especially in the fields of urban reconstruction, river-basin development, agricultural rehabilitation, and modernization of transportation, by Government agencies, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, or the modified form of Federal Development Corporation suggested below. (The procedure would stimulate activity in such basic industries as steel and light metals, other construction materials, machinery, and machine tools, as well as in the construction industry itself.)

In other words, they are going to direct just exactly how industry is to be made over, and how it is going to start in the new world.

Provision for plant rehabilitation grants to be used for diversion of plant to peacetime production.

In my opinion, Mr. President, there will be no difficulty whatever in the post-war world for plants to finance themselves. If we only have a free capital market, if it is not suppressed, if the Government keeps out of business, I do not think they will have any difficulty in financing themselves. I do not believe there is any necessity for Government financing, except, perhaps, in the case of smaller industries and the small plants which have not access to proper financing, and if we make proper plans to secure financing fror the public it seems to me that even such plants should be able to secure it. It has not been difficult in the past; and I believe that through a proper organization of private capital, and the investment of capital in small plants, Government assistance can be eliminated even in that field. I read further from the report:

Granting of low-interest-rates Government loans to projects approved for conversion.

In other words, it is proposed that we subsidize industry, but as an accompaniment of subsidizing industry, it is proposed that we decide exactly what industries shall go ahead and what industries shall not go ahead.

Then the Board proceeds to the general question of Government operation. They say:

Extension and new forms of joint private and governmental partnership, through use of mixed incorporations, granting or insurance of loans, or other joint ventures, etc. Government is already taking considerable part in the management of the many war industries which have been greatly expanded by the use of Government funds. Consideration should be given to the desirability of various types of partnership in the direction of those industries of crucial importance in both a wartime and a peacetime economy and in which the Government has made great investments In this category are aluminum, magnesium, shipbuilding, and aircraft. Government has a direct responsibility and should participate in the decisions as to what areas and what concerns should continue to operate in these industries.

That idea is developed further. They say:

Wartime experience has indicated the public importance of certain industries and the desirability of continued Federal control of their operation. Industries based on scarce raw materials, or those with rapidly diminishing reserves, and industries supplying power and fuels, fall into this category. Transportation and other public services may likewise be more closely controlled in the interest of national defense and the public welfare. The Government should retain control over patents and properties seized from enemy aliens, and operate them directly or license their use in such a way as to encourage competitive development.

Further on it is indicated th..t the Government should develop a general plan on the question of real estate in cities. On page 35 of the report it is said:

We can accomplish the rebuilding of urban America in our generation if we will make and use the tools that are needed. Enlarged powers and programs of action will be necessary at all levels of government.

In localities we shall need:

* * * * *

Public power to construct, lease, sell or manage housing, commercial, or industrial structures, transportation terminals of all kinds including automobile and aircraft parking and storage facilities; to acquire terminal rights of all forms of transportation for redevelopment, relocation, or consolidation.

There is not any practical limit to the recommendations toward Government participation in industry. Nowhere do I find any suggestion that there should be any lessening of regulation of private industry. There is nothing said in any way about relaxing any of the controls which have practically choked the American people in wartime. In fact, we are warned specifically against relaxing a good many of the wartime controls. It is said:

It is possible that some whole industries created to meet the Nation's need will appropriately be the Nation's charge as they retool and convert for peacetime pursuits.

I do not know exactly what the Board meant by that, but it sounds again like Government control. All these existing agencies are to be continued. They say:

Administrative organization must be provided for the execution of this legislative authority and to assure the people of an orderly devolution of forms of economic, fiscal, and social controls required by war but which should be modified or relaxed. These forms will involve institutions which will be governmental, private, and mixed. They will be the instrumentalities through which the people will achieve the fruits of a democratic victory.

Then they suggest that all the existing agencies would better look out for their own work and their own jobs.

Some existing agencies of administration, regular and emergency, probably will be instruments for the execution of post-war programs.

They are going to continue these emergency organizations.

They should, without neglecting their supreme job of winning the war, plan now for their own conversion to meet the needs of cessation of war, the transition period, and then, for democracy, dynamic economy, and peace.

I think this warning has been taken seriously, because there is hardly an emergency organization in Washington that is not planning for its permanent continuation for the purposes of democracy, dynamic economy, and peace—and jobs.

Finally, Mr. President, it must be clear that if the Government enters into industry either by itself or in partnership with others, competition will soon cease, and private enterprise vanish from industry. Anyone who will read the report on transportation, which is very voluminous, must come to the conclusion that the idea is for Government operation of railroads, the Government taking over all the elements of transportation. It is suggested—at least there is the hint—that it should run bus lines, and develop the highways and use them for that purpose, and the hint at least that it should run all the air lines and that they should be coordinated into one grand operation. Of course, they recommend public ownership of power, but that is not any longer an extreme step.

Mr. President, after reading the other reports, I turned to the report on security work and relief policy, hoping that here, under a well qualified technical committee, there would be a constructive proposal to solve our social welfare problems. I can only say that my hopes were disappointed. The report apparently is written by Dr. Eveline M. Burns, a graduate of the London School of Economics and a socialist disciple of Mr. Harold Laski.

I was interested in reading in this morning's Times-Herald the following about Mrs. Burns, who directs the social-security program of the National Resources Planning Board:

Washington's best known family of former aliens are the Drs. Burns. Mrs. Burns is Eveline M. Burns, Ph. D., University of London School of Economics. She is employed by the National Resources Planning Board at $7,000 a year. The board is headed by Frederic A. Delano, uncle of President Roosevelt.

In 1932 Mrs. Burns wrote a campaign tract for the Socialist Party in which she said that methods of preventing indiscriminate use of resources should be devised by the Government which would call for "the imposition of controls that would refuse individuals to make what use they wish of their own labor and their own property." She now writes the Resources Board reports, such as the American version of the Beveridge cradle-to-the-grave security plan, which appear under the signature of Uncle Frederic.

NATURALIZED ONLY RECENTLY

Mr. Burns is Dr. Arthur R. Burns, also doctor of philosophy, London University, chief labor adviser to the War Production Board at $8,000 a year. The Burnses are natives of England and were not naturalized until recent years.

As I have said, they are both disciples of Mr. Harold Laski, whose views are extreme socialism, if not communism, so perhaps I should not be surprised in the result of the report.

The report is an unpleasant contrast with the Beveridge report in Great Britain. I read the Beveridge report with interest and admiration. Whatever one may think of the wisdom of some of the policies set forth in the Beveridge report, they are stated definitely and concisely, their cost is calculated, and the people and the House of Commons are left to judge and select such parts of the report as they may wish to accept. Compared to the Beveridge report, the National Resources Planning Board report is pure propaganda.

The Planning Board's report takes up and reviews all the various emergency agencies established from 1932 to 1942. It defends each one of those agencies and fails to mention their excesses or the criticisms which were so justly directed against many of them.

The program for post-war relief, finally, if one can cull it out from some 600 pages, appears to be a bigger and better P. W. A., a bigger and better W. P. A., a kind of combined and enlarged N. Y. A. and C. C. C., and all kinds of other agencies added thereto. It advocates the return of unlimited Federal grants to States, cities, school districts, and other local bodies for public works. It advocates a Federal work program, practically superseding all State activities in relief. It advocates Federal support of education on a program very similar to the National Education Association's plan, which would cost the Federal Government $3,000,000,000 a year.

Nowhere in the report is there suggested any possibility that the expense will be greater than the people can bear. Nowhere is there any recognition of the fact that all this social security must be financed by the people who work, and must, to some extent, reduce their standard of living. There is no way by which people can be supported without working; there is no way by which people can be given money, medical care, or any other care, except out of the wages or earnings of people who are working at approximately that time. There is not any other method of doing it. We cannot pull rabbits out of the air; we cannot get something for nothing. It cannot be done. Yet the whole report absolutely ignores the question whether or not the social-security program is more expensive than the people of the country can bear.

Nowhere is there any recognition of the fact that Government beneficiaries will in many cases be far better off than the men who earn their living and support their own families, and try to build homes for themselves. It seems to me obvious that in any social security program we must see to it that the people who are just above the underprivileged group we are helping must also receive some assistance. We must see to it that the man who saves enough to provide a home for himself should be able to obtain just as much as the loafer who has not worked 1 day up to the time he is 65 years old, and then draws $45 a month. We must have some recognition of the fact that the system of incentive must be retained. If some incentive to work is not given the people of the country, then there will be an end to all progress, and there will be no possibility of going forward with any kind of dynamic economy or any other kind of economy. Incentive to work is reward for work properly done. Incidentally, for the two-thirds of the people who are the most progressive and intelligent, and willing to work harder, the incentive must be retained if we are going to achieve any progress in this world or in America.

In this Planning Board report, as throughout all the reports, it is assumed that Government spending is a good thing in itself, and will itself create prosperity. Undaunted by the example of the 1930's, it is assumed that unemployment will disappear if the Government only spends sufficient money.

Mr. President, I think it is perfectly possible to work out a post-war program. I think it can be done within the four corners of the American Constitution. I think it can be done by encouraging private enterprise by relaxing a part of Government control, by permitting a free capital market, by holding down the S. E. C. to its problem of preventing fraud, instead of trying to control the flow of capital in the United States, by eliminating regulation so far as regulation can be eliminated, by taxation which will permit a man to take a chance with some hope that if a new enterprise is successful, he can retain some part of the money he puts into the enterprise; that he does not lose everything when he loses; and that the Government does not get everything when he gains. It all can be done within our Constitution. We can go ahead with a social program and a practical program. But when the Planning Board lays this tremendous report before the people of the United States and assures the people that all that is necessary to do is to order that it be done and it will be done; when it assures them that financial obligations can be disregarded to pay when it is due the bill which is incurred—all this is but a snare and a delusion, and the board which undertakes such a policy ought to be abolished, and ought to be abolished now.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, the independent offices appropriation bill is particularly important at this time since it contains items dealing with so many agencies which are supposed to be contributing to and assisting war production and the war effort generally. Some justify their wartime roles, while others, on the basis of the records of our hearings, are merely using the war needs of the Nation as a cloak for the retention or expansion of their bureaucratic domain.

I favor the action of the Appropriation Committee in confirming the action of the House in reducing the appropriations for the Federal Power Commission. However, were I free to do so, I would, for reasons which I shall disclose, enforce a much deeper pruning of this bureaucratic plum tree.

The Federal Power Commission maintains that it is charged with primary responsibility for seeing to it that our vastly expanded war industries are adequately supplied with electric power.

There is a good deal of doubt in my mind as to the validity of this assumption because of the War Production Board's directive of February 13, 1943, creating the Office of War Utilities as a major branch of the War Production Board, under J. A. Krug, chief power engineer of the Tennessee Valley Authority, on loan to the War Production Board.

Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD at the end of my remarks a copy of the directive of February 13, 1943.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit A.)

Mr. BRIDGES. The date on which this directive was made public—February 17—is of primary importance. It is important because that was the very day on which the House passed the independent offices appropriation bill.

It follows, then, that the House passed this appropriation without knowledge that another agency had been given sweeping powers duplicating, superseding, and greater than the supposed duties and responsibility of the Federal Power Commission.

The House Appropriations Committee gave this appropriation very serious consideration, and in the face of the Commission's plea of its indispensability to the war effort that committee still cut the appropriation by some 10 percent. How the Federal Power Commission would have fared had the House committee been advised of this edict of February 13, which robs it of much of its wartime justification for existence, is a matter of conjecture, but I am of the opinion that if the Senate should still further reduce the House appropriation the House conferees, in the light of the new situation, would gladly accede to the Senate's economy position.

Mr. President, I think it is time that the Senate should take a greater initiative in seeking out ways to reduce expenditures not directly in aid of the war effort.

The distinguished junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] is doing a splendid work of fact finding. But it is in matters of appropriation of funds that we can actually get action in reducing the enormous tax load and bond load which are burdening the national economy.

In this connection I think that it is eminently worthwhile to consider the relative merits of the Federal Power Commission on the one hand and of the Office of War Utilities on the other.

The Office of War Utilities is under the direction of J. A. Krug, as I have stated. Mr. Krug is an electrical engineer of national standing among electrical engineers, both public and private.

After a brief period in telephone communications work, Mr. Krug became chief engineer of the Wisconsin Public Utilities Commission. While there he became acquainted with David Lilienthal, who was a member of that commission. When Mr. Lilienthal became one of the directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority he recommended employment of Mr. Krug as chief power engineer for that project. In that capacity, Mr. Krug operated the largest electric power system in the world. Hence he is a man with operating experience as well as regulatory experience.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I simply wanted to say to the Senator that in the hearings on one of the proposed appropriation bills he will find a letter from Mr. W. L. Batt, saying that Mr. Krug is not an engineer at all, and never graduated from any school as an engineer.

Mr. BRIDGES. In other words, he has been operating the great Tennessee Valley Authority project just as a practical engineer, not as a graduate engineer.

In passing it might be noted that Mr. Leland Olds, on a direct question before the Senate Appropriations Subcommittee, as to his knowledge of Mr. Krug's experience, made a remark that can only be taken as disparaging of Mr. Krug. He stated he thought that Mr. Krug had had some experience in regulatory economics. Mr. Olds was avoiding an invidious comparison of qualifications as between himself and Mr. Krug, although he must have known of Mr. Krug's operating experience as power chief of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Mr. Krug has never been employed, so far as I know, by any private utility corporation. Supporters of Mr. Olds are therefore robbed of the threadbare and antiquated argument that there is some contamination in a man's life if he was once a success in the private business world. Therefore, the public power advocates cannot consistently raise any objection to Mr. Krug on ideological grounds. In fact, he was chosen to head the old O. P. M. utility division to succeed a private utility executive to whom many public power advocates objected.

I hold no brief for J. A. Krug. But I must assert that in comparison with the qualification and experience for the job of Leland Olds, Mr. J. A. Krug has by far the greater actual experience. With the Office of War Utilities functioning under the directive of February 13, the Federal Power Commission, insofar as the war effort is concerned, is largely a bureaucratic fifth wheel.

Senators from various sections of the country who recall the caucus of House Democrats which rejected membership to an important committee desired by a member of the American Labor Party will be interested to know that Mr. Olds received his position on the Power Commission, not as Democratic patronage, but as a political payoff to the American Labor Party of New York State.

In his biography in Who's Who, Mr. Olds maintains a thunderous silence as to his political affiliations. But the facts are that his political heart lies with the American wing of the Communist-minded group known in the State of New York as the American Labor Party.

Mr. Olds was temporary chairman of the New York State Convention of the American Labor Party in New York City on October 3, 1938. In that capacity Mr. Olds made the keynote speech of the convention. In that speech he repudiated the Democratic Party for asking the question "How can I escape war and find peace? He answered as follows:

> The old parties—that means the Democratic Party as well as the Republican Party—cannot answer this fundamental question of the people because their organizations are still based upon selfishness.

The only point I am seeking to establish here is that this man is not a member of the Democratic Party, and has been active in a third party of the extreme left-wing variety. It so happened that in that year, 1938, the American Labor Party did support certain Democratic candidates, and that support is said to have been sufficient to cause the defeat of Republican candidates. Mr. Olds was the American Labor Party county chairman for Rockland County, New York.

Mr. Olds became a member of the Federal Power Commission in 1939, after almost a decade on the pay roll of the State of New York, largely with the New York Power Authority, of which he was chairman at the time of his appointment to the Federal Power Commission.

If one did not know anything about the nature of the New York Power Authority, one would assume that this 10 years of experience would have given Mr. Olds a large practical background in the highly technical problems of electric generation, transmission, and distribution.

This is not the fact, however. The New York Power Authority does not now, and never did, own a generating plant of any kind whatsoever or a transmission line, distribution line, substation, or meter. It is an authority without authority, a paper agency in more than one sense of that word. It is an agency whose activity has been largely to propagandize the Nation and, from its ample funds, lobby in Congress in favor of the St. Lawrence Seaway, so-called.

Leland Olds never in his life, so far as I know, pulled an electric power switch as a part of his duty. Not once, so far as I know, has he bought or sold a kilowatt-hour of electric power except the electricity he buys for his own home. His record is so typical; it is unblemished by any stain of practical experience. He is one of the finest examples of simonpure, unadulterated theorists to be found within the framework of the New Deal. That is a high achievement against strong competition.

What did Mr. Olds do for a living before he came to the New York State Power Authority? What is his background of experience, qualification, and training prior to 1929? On this subject there is very little literature that is generally available to the public. It will be of interest, therefore, that I spread upon the record some additional facts about Mr. Olds' background prior to 1929.

This high New Deal executive earned his spurs as an electrical expert as a writer throughout most of the 1920's for the official daily newspaper of the Communist Party, the Daily Worker. I have here for Senators who may care to see them photostatic copies of Mr. Olds' writings for the Daily Worker. Here, for example, is an article on page 5 of the January 12, 1924, issue of the Daily Worker. The author's title is as follows: "By Leland Olds, Federated Press Industrial Writer." The article, which carries a 3-line, 2-column head, is a general attack on the capitalistic system all over the world. The heading is:

"Review of foreign labor status shows instability of capitalism the world over."

Here is another one on page 5 of the February 2, 1927, issue of the Daily Worker, an attack on the United States Steel Corporation, listed as "By Leland Olds, Federated Press." A year later, on March 20, 1928, on page 3, we have an article attacking the public utility industry, signed "By Leland Olds, Federated Press."

Skipping back to 1924, on February 20, we have a 4-column article on the editorial page of the Daily Worker, by Leland Olds, entitled "Yes, Capitalists Have No Brains."

I did not go to the expense of photostating each and every article by Leland Olds appearing in the Daily Worker from 1924 to 1929, but I have before me 6 typical examples spread over a period of 4 years. Olds' articles in the Daily Worker were usually signed "By Leland Olds, Federated Press."

This leads to the question, What is, or was, the Federated Press? In the Seventy-first Congress there was appointed by the Speaker of the House in the second session a Special Committee to Investigate Communist Activities in the United States. Mr. Laurence Todd, who at that time was the Washington correspondent for the Federated Press, and simultaneously was listed in press gallery section of the Congressional Directory as Washington correspondent for the Telegraph Agency of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics—as he still is—submitted a detailed statement at the request of this committee.

This statement disclosed, among other things, that one of the members of the executive board of the Federated Press was none other than Earl Browder, chief of the Communist Party in the United States, then and now.

However, we must search elsewhere for the record of Olds' connection with the Federated Press, which appears to be a sort of Communist-directed propaganda clip sheet circulated to labor newspapers and magazines. All its material appears to be class-conscious and devoted to the promotion of strikes and industrial unrest.

Here, for example, is a typical quotation appearing in the Federated Press news letter of April 14, 1926:

> The new age is being ushered in by revolutions in Russia, Italy, Mexico, Turkey, and China. History will bear witness to Lenin, Mussolini, and perhaps Sun Yat Sen, when the Coolidges and the Baldwins are forgotten.

As of 1926, Benito Mussolini was as much the darling of this left-wing ideologist as was Lenin himself.

Here is Olds' program for class conflict and his endorsement of David Saposs, and here I quote:

> To re-form rank under fire and carry the attack into the stronghold of big business is what American labor must do in the next 10 years. This should be helped by the study of left-wing unionism made by David Saposs of Brookwood Labor College. (From the Federated Press news letter of May 19, 1926.)

It will be recalled that the House Appropriations Committee not long ago recommended that David Saposs' name be severed from the Federal pay roll. Saposs, however, is a New Deal pet and has been kept on the pay roll in spite of the Congress. At the present time he is employed in the Labor Division of the War Production Board.

Now, who financed the Federated Press? I may state categorically that over these years Olds was supported in his propaganda activities by grants from the American Fund for Public Service, Inc., popularly known as the Garland fund. If I may digress a moment for the purposes of clarity, I will explain a little about this fund.

Back in 1922 young Charles Garland inherited a fortune of $900,000 in the stock of the First National Bank of New York City. He was persuaded by certain radical friends—whose self-interest is not above suspicion—to give away all his worldly wealth. So he set up this fund called the American Fund for Public Service, dedicated to the advancement of the radical movement in America.

I have here a copy of a financial report of this fund for the years 1925 through 1928, and a summary of operations of the first 6 years.

According to this report, Leland Olds received $3,640 for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1925, as a gift from the Garland Fund. He received $3,600 the following year, and again the same amount from the same source in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928. Inasmuch as his writings extend before and after the period shown in the report, it is fair to assume that Mr. Olds' remuneration remained about the same for the entire period of his work for the Federated Press. The Federated Press received additional grants, to a total of $13,000, according to the same report for the same period.

The character of the source of Olds' income is best revealed in this report by the type of activities which shared with Olds the benefactions of the Garland fund during this period.

Through a grant of $28,000 a weekly magazine, the New Masses, which is the official party line magazine in the United States, was founded during this period by the Garland fund.

In addition, the Daily Worker received advances from the Garland fund.

It is not my purpose here to make a personal attack upon Leland Olds, for personally he is a very likeable person and I have nothing against him personally.

My purpose is to show that the man is disqualified to act officially without prejudice between public and private enterprise because of his political bias.

My purpose is to show, further, that he is a political ideologist without the practical experience upon which he could base sound judgment in the many critical situations that must come before the Chairman of the Federal Power Commission.

It is indeed unfortunate that we did not have these facts at hand at the time Mr. Olds appeared before the Appropriations Subcommittee.

By the record of our hearings, Mr. Olds is responsible for the wastage of millions of pounds of copper in the so-called Ark-La line which was built in the name of national defense at the instance of Olds, when in fact its true purpose was the advancement of public ownership in Arkansas.

According to this record Olds demanded the construction of this big line on the grounds that an aluminum plant down there could not be served by the capacity of existing private utilities.

The record further shows that Mr. Olds, theorist that he is, was as wrong as he could be when the matter was put to a practical test. This Ark-La line broke down on one occasion for 84 hours, beginning the day after Christmas at the season of longest nights and peak loads of the year. Had his assertion that this line was essential proved true, this aluminum plant would have suffered irreparable loss when in fact private companies were able to supply the additional load without the loss of a kilowatt hour. The same test occurred for 5 hours on January 19 of this year with the same result.

The record shows that Mr. Leland Olds has made wrong predictions of power shortages for the national defense load. His opposite number, Mr. J. A. Krug has stated there is not now, never has been, and is never likely to be a shortage of power.

It has been shown that electric power is the one commodity that is not rationed and need not be rationed due to lack of capacity. The record shows that electric power is the only commodity necessary to our standard of living which has actually decreased in price in several instances since the war began. It further shows that Mr. Olds and the Federal Power Commission, not once but many times, have made the Federal Government look ridiculous by their insistence that a power shortage was impending. The ulterior motive behind these predictions probably was political and ideological. But the result has been to discredit the Federal Power Commission to a point where some day if they are right in a prediction of power shortage, neither the public nor the industry will give credit. It's the old story of crying "Wolf! Wolf!" once too often.

Olds recently addressed a group of farmers interested in rural electrification. These farmers were a cross section of rural America, dedicated to the uplift of the standard of living in rural America. They were working for and believed in the rural electrification cooperative, even as you and I. As a cross section, most of them are church-going, upstanding members of their community.

In his appeal to these farmers for a class-conscious attack on the system of private enterprise, he was much more subtle and clever than in the days when he was writing class-conflict propaganda for the Daily Worker. He indicted the American system by saying the obvious, that selfishness has made America the richest Nation in the world. Actually the incentive to gain established security may be a selfish thing, but it is also the instinct that has covered the plains with pioneers and brought forth the riches of our soil from agriculture, forests, and minerals. Selfishness is another word for the natural human desire of man to achieve security for his loved ones.

Not satisfied with inducing the War Production Board to grant priorities on the Ark-La line to waste several millions of pounds of copper on a project which, by actual tests, need never have been built, Mr. Olds took it upon himself to override States' rights, to override the Arkansas Public Utility Commission, and to institute a rate investigation which was beyond his legal province and which wasted thousands of man-hours of important war-production executives. The animosity of F. P. C. toward States' rights is clearly demonstrated in this bureaucratic witch hunt into the Southwest power pool.

As a former State public service commissioner, I am entirely familiar with the issues involved in this case. I should like to append as part of my remarks two exhibits in connection with it. The first is a letter from the special counsel for the Arkansas Department of Public Utilities, and the second is an amicus curiae brief for the National Association of Railroad and Utilities Commissioners representing all but two of the regulatory commissions of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibits B and C.)

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, to all friends of the American system of government, to all who are interested in the preservation of the sovereignty of the individual States which comprise our Federal Union, I recommend that these two documents be read in full. They are a shocking revelation of the inroads being made by this Federal bureaucracy in the name of the war effort on the rights of the States to govern themselves in the role cast for them by the founding fathers.

As a former member of a public-service commission, I have viewed with grave doubts the encroachment of Federal bureaucracy into the fields that properly, under our Constitution, belong to the jurisdiction of the sovereign States.

I long ago realized that only healthy, legal State regulation of noncompetitive industries such as gas and electric supplies, could destroy the spectre of State ownership and socialism.

In preparation for the hearing before the Senate Appropriations Committee I wrote a general letter to State public-service commissions to discover, if possible, the real situation between the State regulatory bodies and the Federal Power Commission.

The replies were candid. But I was shocked that so many of them, written from old friends who put their trust and confidence in me, gave me information under seal of strictest confidence. They asked that their identity be not revealed lest they and their independent sovereign States be subject to prosecution by the Federal Power Commission, or by other agencies of Federal bureaucracy.

One State commissioner says that a representative of the Federal Power Commission approached him on the simple basis of bureaucratic reciprocal back scratching. This representative of the Federal Power Commission urged that it would be helpful to the Commission's case for bigger and better appropriations if the State in question should request assistance of the F. P. C. in a certain rate case.

His purpose was not to serve the people's interest, it was to help maintain and enlarge his bureaucratic pay roll. He wanted some bureaucratic "leaf raking."

It is a sad commentary on the state of the Nation when officers of sovereign States will reveal information as to the infiltration and encroachment of Federal bureaucracy upon States' rights only under seal of confidence in fear of retaliation.

The Federal Power Commission has no legal right to regulate local electric rates, its powers under the law being confined to interstate wholesale rates. In fact, its spokesmen before the Appropriations Committee stated that the Commission had been unable to effectuate noticeable reduction in retail rates. Nevertheless it has usurped many of the functions of State regulatory commissions in fact finding.

Recently the Midwest Utilities Commissioners' Committee, headed by A. B. Hill, chairman of the Arkansas Utilities Commission, undertook a manpower survey of 58 major utility companies in the 5 States of Oklahoma, Kansas, Missouri, Arkansas, Louisiana, and part of Texas. This area represented approximately 2,154,000 electric consumers, or about 6½ percent of the 31,600,000 consumers of the Nation. The survey covered only the first 8 months of the year 1942. More than 843,805 man-hours were consumed by these utilities in this area in 8 months, at a cost in excess of $5,000,000 annually to fill out reports and questionnaires required by the Federal Power Commission.

On a yearly basis this would amount to about 1,263,000 man-hours and $7,500,000 added to the operating costs to the consumers in those areas alone, as the hidden burden of bureaucracy padded onto their electric-light bills in addition to what they pay for this agency in the form of taxes. As against this huge sum of money and time—which in manpower is now more precious than money—State and municipal regulatory bodies in the same period required only 38,583 man-hours, or about 3 percent of the work required by the F. P. C.

If the same proportion should be maintained for the Nation, as it is reasonable to suppose, approximately 22,000,000 man-hours annually will be diverted from the war effort and dedicated to the pursuit of useless information at the behest of the Federal Power Commission, to say nothing of approximately $120,000,000 which is thus added to the operating costs of electricity to consumers of the Nation. These, of course, are estimates based on the case history of five States, but there appears no reason why the same situation should not prevail everywhere.

Mr. President, the purpose of my discussion today has been threefold:

First, I have shown conclusively that the Federal Power Commission functions, in relation to the war effort, are in complete duplication, by its own admission in hearings and by the War Production Board directive of February 13, of the work of the Office of War Utilities, and are as unnecessary to the war effort as a fifth wheel on a baby buggy.

Second, it has been demonstrated that as between the Office of War Utilities and the Federal Power Commission the former is far more competent by comparison.

Third, it was my purpose to show that in the midst of war, the Federal Power Commission aggressively pursues its policy toward obliterating State boundaries and in fact uses war necessity as a means of obtaining that objective. The Federal Power Commission has clearly demonstrated itself to be an enemy of the doctrine of sovereign States as enshrined in the Constitution of this Federal union.

I might have added a fourth reason for this discussion.

While I take the position that the Appropriations Committee is to be congratulated on its "hold the line" resistance to bureaucratic pressure and on retaining generally the reductions contained in the House bill, I felt that this was an appropriate occasion to reveal publicly some of the information which has come to me as a result of my personal investigations in relation to the recent hearing.

There are a number of investigating bodies in the House and Senate which no doubt will find this material dealing with bureaucratic wastage and duplication in wartime under radical leadership to come within the scope of the resolutions which empower them to act

Mr. President, no real remedy for this situation can result from a single speech in the Senate; but, with faith in the integrity and courage of the several investigating committees of this Congress, I suggest that the wildness of the Federal Power Commission bureaucracy invites investigation and remedial legislative action.

OFFICE OF WAR INFORMATION,
WAR PRODUCTION BOARD,
Wednesday, February 17, 1943.

An administrative order and regulation providing the detailed administrative arrangements under which the new Office of War Utilities will operate have just been issued by Donald M. Nelson, Chairman of the War Production Board. The decision to create the new office, with J. A. Krug as its Director, was previously announced.

Mr. Krug will report directly to the Chairman on all policy matters and will be charged with the functions and responsibilities of the war production in the fields of electric power, natural and manufactured gas, water, central steam heating and communications services, except radio. The stated objective of the new orders is "to unify the War Production Board's authority and responsibility for war utilities, in order to assure the adequacy of war utilities to meet demands of the war-production program and essential civilian demands."

Mr. Krug today announced two appointments: Edward Falck as Deputy Director of the Office of War Utilities, and Barclay J. Sickler as Director of the Power Division in the new organization. Mr. Krug said no other changes in staff are contemplated.

Mr. Falck joined the Office of Production Management in July 1941 on loan from the Consolidated Edison Co. of New York. He became Chief of the Power Supply Allocation Section in October 1941: Assistant Deputy Director General for Priorities Control, War Production Board, in August 1942; and Assistant Deputy Director General for Distribution last November. Mr. Falck was associated with the Tennessee Valley Authority from 1933 to 1937 and subsequently with the Consolidated Edison Co., from which organization he has resigned.

Mr. Sickler became a consultant for the Office of Production Management in September 1941 on loan from the Bonneville Power Administration. He became Chief of the Priorities Section of the Power Division, War Production Board, in February 1942, and Deputy Director of the Power Division in August. Mr. Sickler has recently resigned from the Bonneville Power Administration. Prior to his association with the Bonneville Administration, he was on the staff of the Wisconsin Public Service Commission.

WAR PRODUCTION BOARD MANUAL OF POLICY AND PROCEDURES

GENERAL ADMINISTRATIVE ORDER NO. 2-78—FEBRUARY 13, 1943—OFFICE OF WAR UTILITIES

SECTION 1. Establishment of Office of War Utilities:

.01. There is hereby established within the War Production Board the Office of War Utilities headed by a Director who shall be responsible on policy matters to the Chairman, and on administrative matters to the Program Vice Chairman.

SEC. 2. Definition of war utilities:

.01. The term war utilities as used in this order shall be defined as including generation, transmission, and distribution of electric power; transmission and distribution of natural gas; production, transmission, and distribution of manufactured gas; pumping, storage, transmission, and distribution of water; production, transmission, and distribution of central steam heating; and communications services, except radio.

SEC. 3. Objective:

.01. It is the purpose of this order to unify the War Production Board's authority and responsibility for war utilities, in order to assure the adequacy of war utilities to meet demands of the war production program and essential civilian demands.

SEC. 4. Functions:

In achieving this objective, the Director shall perform the following functions:

.01. Obtain from Federal agencies, the appropriate industry, and other sources, data on and estimate requirements for war utilities. The Director shall establish, to the extent necessary, standard terms, methods, and techniques to be used in measuring these requirements.

.02. Obtain from Federal agencies, the appropriate industry, and other sources, data on and estimate available war utilities supply. The Director shall establish, to the extent necessary, standard terms, methods, and techniques to be used in measuring such available war utilities supply.

.03. Develop and take all appropriate steps to anticipate, forestall, and overcome shortages in war utilities supply which threaten to impair the war program. This will involve, among other things:

1. Programming the use of existing facilities, the interconnection of systems, and the coordination of operations of systems where such activities will provide greater availability of such war utilities.

2. Taking the appropriate steps to develop, to the extent that existing facilities are inadequate, the construction and installation of additional facilities necessary to correct such inadequacies with a minimum expenditure of critical materials.

.04. Develop and administer curtailment and allocation programs for war utilities in times and areas of shortage.

.05. Act as a claimant agency with respect to the materials required for war-utilities programs.

.06. Take the proper steps to insure that supplies, materials, and equipment necessary to construct, operate, and maintain facilities for war utilities are scheduled, produced, and delivered on time.

.07. Advise the appropriate agencies regarding the availability of war utilities supply to accomplish their proposed construction and production programs.

.08. Recommend to the Office of Production Research and Development the programming and execution of technical research and development activities which will lead to more efficient utilization of facilities and critical materials by war utilities.

.09. Keep the Chairman, Program Vice Chairman, and Production Vice Chairman currently advised as to the adequacy of war utilities to meet the need for war production and essential civilian requirements, and of the measures taken and progress made toward meeting actual or potential shortages.

SEC. 5. Authority:

.01. The Director shall exercise all powers contained in section 2 (A) of the act of June 28, 1940, as amended by the act of May 31, 1941, and by title 3 of the Second War Powers Act, 1942, as delegated to the Chairman of the War Production Board so far as they relate to war utilities.

.02. The Director is authorized:

1. In his own name to issue, amend, revoke, and administer regulations, orders, and directions relating to (1) producing, transmitting, and distributing electricity, manufactured gas, water, and central steam heating, (2) transmitting and distributing natural gas, (3) furnishing of communications services, except radio, (4) redistributing materials and equipment owned by, in the possession of, or held for the account of, persons engaged in such activities and services and (5) the construction of new facilities or the remodeling of existing facilities of persons engaged in the foregoing activities and services.

2. In his own name to issue, amend, repeal, and administer preference rating orders for the construction, maintenance, repair, and operation of facilities for such persons, and to make allotments of material to such persons under and to the extent authorized by the Controlled Materials Plan. No rating of Agricultural Adjustment Administration shall be authorized by the Director without prior approval by the Distribution Bureau.

3. To amend, repeal, and supersede any existing orders and directions of the War Production Board relating to the foregoing subject matter. All such existing orders and directions shall remain in effect until so amended, repealed, or superseded.

.03. All actions taken by the Director pursuant to this administrative order, or pursuant to Regulation No. 1 of the War Production Board, as amended, shall be in conformity with any program determinations of the Program Vice Chairman hereafter issued, and with any preference rating standards and materials allocations established by existing program determinations of the Program Vice Chairman.

.04. All orders of the types currently issued in the E, M, L, and P series (except individual orders in the present P-19 series) and amendments and supplements thereto issued by the Director pursuant to paragraph .02 above shall be circulated prior to issuance in the manner specified in Administrative Order No. 14, Office of the Program Vice Chairman, except in emergency situations. After such circulation has been completed, and after considering the views of any interested divisions or agencies, the Director may issue such orders without further clearance or approval. Any division or agency which dissents from a decision of the Director may appeal the decision to the Chairman of the War Production Board, or the Program Vice Chairman.

.05. Subject to the general supervision of the production vice chairman, and pursuant to general administrative orders Nos. 2-71 and 2-73, the Director shall continue to have responsibility for the production and scheduling of the equipment heretofore produced and scheduled under the direction of the Power Division and the Communications Equipment Division, and for the allotment of materials for the production of such equipment. All actions taken under this subparagraph .05 shall be issued in the name of the official formally authorized to take such action. Basic orders shall be cleared through the distribution bureau in the manner specified in administrative order No. 14. Administration of such orders will be carried on by the Director under delegations of authority.

.06. No action shall be taken by the Director to authorize or initiate the construction of facilities, other than facilities for the production, transmission, or distribution of electricity, manufactured gas, water, and central heating, furnishing of communications services, or for the transmitting or distribution of natural gas, without prior approval by the facilities bureau.

.07. The Director shall exercise such authority in regard to administrative, personnel, and Budget matters as is provided by general administrative orders and instructions.

SEC. 6. Relationships:

.01. Nothing herein shall be construed to be in conflict with existing arrangements between the War Production Board and the Board of War Communications nor with the provisions of the agreement between the Chairman of the War Production Board and the Chairman of the Federal Power Commission dated April 24, 1942.

SEC. 7. Organization:

.01. There shall be in the office of the Director one or more utilities requirements committees, of each of which the chairman shall be the director, ex-officio, and the vice chairman a person designated by the chairman.

.02. Each utilities requirements committee shall consist of a single representative of each claimant agency concerned with the matters within the jurisdiction of the particular committee.

.03. Each utilities-requirements committee shall perform the functions of an industry division requirements committee with respect to the particular activities and services assigned to it by the director.

.04. The Power Division and the Communications Equipment Division are hereby abolished and their functions, records, personnel, and funds are hereby transferred to the Office of War Utilities.

.05. The functions heretofore vested in the Facilities Bureau, Facility Clearance Board, Facility Review Committee, and Resources Bureau, insofar as they relate to the functions hereby delegated to the Director, are transferred to the Office of War Utilities.

.06. The Director shall prepare a plan of organization of the Office of War Utilities and submit it for approval of the Chairman of the War Production Board.

.07. Orders or parts of orders, the provisions of which are inconsistent or in conflict with the provisions of this order, are hereby rescinded or modified accordingly.

.08. Except as expressly limited in this order, the Director shall have the sole and exclusive responsibility within the War Production Board for performing the functions and exercising the authority vested in him by this order.

.09. The effective date of this order shall be February 13, 1943.

DONALD M. NELSON,
Chairman.

WAR PRODUCTION BOARD—W. P. B. REGULATION 1—FEBRUARY 13, 1943

PART 903—DELEGATIONS OF AUTHORITY

(W. P. B. Regulation 1, as amended February 13, 1943)

Delegating powers with respect to priorities to Director General for operations; and ratifying actions of Director of Priorities and Director of Industry Operations

SEC. 903.0. Regulation 1. (a) (1) The Director General for Operations shall perform the functions and exercise all the powers, authority, and discretion conferred upon the President by section 2 (a) of the Act of June 28, 1940, as amended by the Act of May 31, 1941, and by the Act of March 27, 1942, including the power of the Chairman of the War Production Board under paragraph (e) of Directive 1 of the War Production Board (§ 903.1) to delegate to the Office of Price Administration additional powers with respect to the exercise of rationing control and to amend the delegation with respect thereto contained in said Directive 1.

(2) The Director General for Operations shall review, clear, and approve for execution all requests or proposals originating from other Federal agencies, private industry, or other sources for priority action with respect to the procurement, production, transmission, or transportation of materials, articles, power, fuel, and other commodities; issue or provide for the issuance of all priority orders, warrants, certificates, or ratings with respect to the supply, production, transmission, or transportation of materials, articles, power, fuel, and other commodities, and, with reference to specific priority authorities vested by law in established departments and agencies of the Government, certify to such departments and agencies, when he deems such action necessary to the most effective prosecution of war procurement and production, that preferential treatment is essential for certain materials, commodities, facilities, or services.

(3) The Director General for Operations shall, in consultation with the United States Maritime Commission, determine when, to what extent, and in what manner, priorities shall be accorded to deliveries of material as provided in section 2 (a) (3) of Public, No. 46, 77th Congress, First Session, entitled "An Act to Make Emergency Provision for Certain Activities of the United States Maritime Commission, and for Other Purposes," approved May 2, 1941. Deliveries of material shall take priority as provided in said Act in accordance with such determinations and the orders issued in pursuance thereof by the Director General for Operations.

(4) The Director General for Operations shall perform the functions and exercise all the powers, authority, and discretion conferred upon the Chairman of the War Production Board by Executive Orders 8942, 9024, 9040, and 9138, under the act of October 10, 1940, as amended, and the act of October 16, 1941, as amended, except the power, authority, and discretion conferred upon the Chairman of the War Production Board by paragraph 1b of Executive Order 9040 to establish policies and to issue rules and regulations with respect to requisitioning under said acts.

(b) The Director General for Operations may exercise the powers, authority, and discretion conferred upon him by this regulation through such officers of the War Production Board and such other officials of the Government (including the contracting and procurement officers and inspectors of the War and Navy Departments) and in such manner as he may determine.

(c) All existing rules, regulations, orders, directions, certificates, and other actions of the Director of Industry Operations or of his predecessor, the Director of Priorities of the Office of Production Management, are hereby ratified and confirmed and shall remain in full force and effect until they expire by their terms or are revoked or amended, and any references therein or in any rule, regulation, order, direction, certificate, or other action issued on or after July 9, 1942, or taken, to the Director of Industry Operations, or to his predecessor, the Director of Priorities, shall be deemed to be references to the Director General for Operations. Any such rules, regulations, orders, directions, certificates, and other actions issued on or after July 9, 1942, or taken in the name of the Director of Industry Operations in any manner heretofore authorized shall be valid for all purposes to the same extent as if issued or taken in the name of the Director General for Operations, unless such authorization shall have been specifically revoked.

(d) In addition to, and without limitation upon, the foregoing delegation of authority, the Rubber Director of the War Production Board is hereby authorized to perform the functions and exercise the powers, authorities, and discretion conferred upon the President by section 2 (a) of the act of June 28, 1940 (54 Stat. 676) as amended by the act of May 31, 1941 (Public Law No. 89, 77th Cong.) and title III of the Second War Powers Act, 1942 (act of March 27, 1942, Public Law No. 507, 77th Cong.), to the extent necessary for the performance of the following duties and functions:

(1) To allot rubber among the War Department, Navy Department, Maritime Commission, Aircraft Scheduling Unit, Office of Lend-Lease Administration, Board of Economic Warfare, Dominion of Canada, the Domestic Requirements Section of the Office of Rubber Director, and any other public or private agency authorized to act as a claimant agency before the War Production Board, and also to allot rubber for civilian requirements;

(2) To allocate and apportion rubber among the users thereof, including all allocations and apportionments from the rubber stockpile;

(3) To issue, administer and, where necessary, amend or repeal new orders regulating the production, distribution, and use of rubber and rubber products, and to amend, repeal, and supersede any existing orders heretofore issued by the War Production Board regulating such production, distribution, and use: Provided, however, That all existing orders of the War Production Board affecting such production, distribution, or use shall remain in effect until specifically amended, repealed, or superseded. The authority hereby delegated shall not include authority to regulate or control the distribution of any material or products other than rubber and rubber products, even when such other material or products are for use in the production of rubber.

(e) The Rubber Director may exercise the duties and functions referred to above, either in his own name, through the Director General for Operations of the War Production Board, or through such other official, agency, or person as he shall designate.

(f) The Director of the Office of War Utilities of the War Production Board shall be directly responsible to the Chairman on policy matters, and to the Program Vice Chairman on administrative matters. In addition to, and without limitation upon, the delegations of authority set forth above, the Director of the Office of War Utilities of the War Production Board is authorized to perform the functions and exercise the powers, authority, and discretion conferred upon the President by section 2 (a) of the act of June 28, 1940, as amended by the act of May 31, 1941, and title III of the Second War Powers Act, 1942, so far as they relate to (1) producing, transmitting, and distributing electricity, manufactured gas, water, and central steam heating; (2) transmitting and distributing natural gas; (3) furnishing of communications services except radio; and (4) redistributing materials and equipment owned by, in the possession of, or held for the account of persons engaged in such activities and services.

The Director of the Office of War Utilities shall also have the authority to issue, amend, repeal, and administer (1) preference ratings for the construction, maintenance, repair, and operation of facilities for such activities and services, (2) allotments of material under the controlled materials plan, (3) other orders and directions to control the use of material and equipment owned by, in the possession of, or held for the account of persons engaged in the foregoing activities and services, including, with respect to all of the foregoing, authority to amend, repeal, and supersede any existing orders and directions heretofore issued by the War Production Board relating to the foregoing subject matter.

(g) The Director of the Office of War Utilities may exercise the duties and authority referred to above, either in his own name or through such other official, agency, or person as he shall designate.

Issued this 13th day of February 1943.

DONALD M. NELSON,
Chairman.

STATE OF ARKANSAS,
DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC UTILITIES,
Little Rock, March 31, 1943.

Hon. STYLES BRIDGES,
United States Senator,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR BRIDGES: At the request of Mr. A. B. Hill, chairman of the department of public utilities, I am replying to your letter of March 26. As indicated by Mr. Hill in his letter to you of March 30, the Federal Power Commission has not cooperated with this department to the extent contemplated by the Public Utilities Act of 1935. In addition to its failure to cooperate, it has injected itself into several matters exclusively within the jurisdiction of the department.

When the aluminum plant was located in Arkansas, the question of adequate power for it was paramount in all of our minds. The principal operating utilities in Arkansas, Louisiana, Texas, Oklahoma, and Kansas had pooled their generating facilities for the purpose of supplying the Arkansas Power & Light Co. with sufficient power for the operation of the plant. The Federal Works Agency had control of the hydro facilities known as the Grand River Dam, located in eastern Oklahoma and on the watershed of the Arkansas River. With small expense the power from this dam could have been delivered to the pool, and the pool offered to transmit that power, less a small line loss, to the aluminum plant free of charge. Notwithstanding this offer, Rural Electrification Administration cooperatives organized a supercooperative under the laws of Louisiana and entered into a contract with the Federal Works Agency for power from the dam, and through the efforts of Mr. Olds, Chairman of the Federal Power Commission, and Mr. Slattery, Administrator of the Rural Electrification Administration, this supercooperative entered into a contract with the Defense Plant Corporation for the sale to it of 32,500 kilowatts of power for use at the aluminum plant.

In order to carry out this contract it was necessary for the supercooperative to build approximately 200 miles of high-tension transmission line from the dam to the plant. It had to make application to the Department for authority for this construction. At that time there was under construction by the Government a dual-purpose dam near Norfolk, Ark., on White River, which it then appeared would be in operation the latter part of this year.

The pool proposed to link up the various companies in it by the construction of lines that would give them a two-way circuit into the aluminum plant. One of these lines, while not paralleling the proposed route of the Rural Electrification Administration line, could very well be treated as being parallel, and would have been located in such a way as to furnish an outlet from the Norfolk project.

The supercooperative filed an application before the Department for a certificate. At that time the applications of the private companies were also pending before the Department. They were not set for hearing at the same time as the supercooperative application.

Mr. Olds appeared as a witness at the hearing on the supercooperative's application and on the witness stand, while admitting that there was at that time no matter pending before his Commission involving the construction and operation of this line, he felt like he ought to have been called in on the matter, notwithstanding the fact that his Commission had no jurisdiction whatever. He further said, while on the witness stand, that the line would be built.

After the hearing the Department entered an order denying the application so far as it was concerned, but submitted the entire record to the War Production Board and to the Army and Navy Munitions Board. A copy of the order issued by the Department is attached.

The Army and Navy Munitions Board made an exhaustive and complete examination of the record and recommended that the line not be built, but, notwithstanding this recommendation, the line was built as Mr. Olds indicated in his evidence it would be, and one of the lines of the pool was eliminated.

A copy of the report of the Army and Navy Munitions Board is also attached.

The Grand River Dam was a dual-purpose project designed to operate at 735 feet for power, leaving 20 feet for flood control. In order to secure the amount of firm power from this dam which the supercooperative had agreed to sell the aluminum plant, it was necessary to raise the elevation of the water in the reservoir to 742.5 feet. The Federal Power Commission authorized this increase, notwithstanding the fact that it would destroy 40 to 50 percent of the flood-control capacity of the reservoir.

The lower Arkansas River Valley, a vast alluvial area devoted almost exclusively to agriculture and the production of food, was menaced by this increase in the elevation at the dam. The theory advanced for this increase was that the area did not have sufficient power for the aluminum plant and it was necessary to raise the water level in the dam to secure the power necessary for the operation of this plant.

After the line was built and the aluminum plant was in operation, the supercooperative's line went out and could not be used for 86 hours. Notwithstanding this outage, the power pool picked up the entire aluminum plant load immediately and carried it for approximately 36 hours without any aid from the Grand River Dam power. The remainder of the 86-hour period Grand River power was delivered to the aluminum plant through the pool's facilities.

This was an actual demonstration that the Federal Power Commission was wrong in asserting that the pool did not have the power for the aluminum plant and that that plant could not be operated without the construction of the line for the cooperative.

At a recent hearing held in Little Rock before the Federal Power Commission, about which more will later be said, it was developed that with the cooperation of the Federal Works Agency and the Federal Power Commission, Federal Works Agency was undertaking to spend more than $1,000,000 on this dam, install additional facilities for power and utilize the entire capacity of the dam for power, completely destroying all of its flood-control capacity. The excuse for doing this was that power was needed for defense purposes.

This action further menaces the entire Arkansas River Valley at a time when, if a flood should occur, it would not only be a local disaster but a national disaster, with food now assuming the importance that it has in the defense program. The Federal Power Commission, working with the Federal Works Agency, is responsible for this condition and in the judgment of this department there never has been any occasion for increasing the water level above 735 feet in this dam. To do so is certainly not in furtherance of the defense of this Nation, with food and agricultural products as critical as they are now.

Some 10 or 11 of the principal operating companies in the States hereinbefore mentioned formed what has been termed the "Southwest power pool," for the purpose of supplying power to the Arkansas Power & Light Co., which, in turn, has contracted to furnish this power to the aluminum plant. Much of this power had to move in interstate commerce. Therefore, the contract had to be filed with the Federal Power Commission.

Because of the imminence of the operation of the aluminum plant the Federal Power Commission temporarily approved the contract and, on September 1, 1942, of its own motion directed an investigation of the rates. A copy of the order directing the investigation is enclosed. On October 20, 1942, the cause was set for hearing in Little Rock.

At the time the Commission directed the investigation it sent out a form letter to the commissions of the several States in which the pool members operated. The Oklahoma commission and the Arkansas department, in response to this invitation for cooperation, asked that they be permitted to take part in any conferences or other matters pertaining to the investigation. The Federal Power Commission ignored the requests of the Oklahoma commission and the Arkansas department.

The hearing was opened in Little Rock and the respondents were required to go forward with their testimony first. After observing the progress of the hearing and what it apparently was leading to, the Arkansas department intervened in the cause and, in addition to its intervention, its counsel made a formal statement which was incorporated into the record. A copy of this statement was sent to you by Mr. Hill. The hearing was characterized, by some of the reporters who were present during its early stages, as being like unto the French inquisition.

The respondents put on their proof in the first 6 or 7 days of the hearing. A recess was taken until the 14th of January in order to enable counsel for the Commission to study the direct evidence and prepare themselves for cross-examination. The hearing resumed and cross-examination began on the 14th of January and continued until the 5th of February in daily sessions, with very few exceptions. Most of this time was taken up, with the exception of a few days, in cross-examination.

It has been estimated that this hearing cost the several companies involved an aggregate of $125,000, all of which must be borne by the companies or their rate payers.

Representatives of the commissions of Kansas, Missouri, and Oklahoma were present much of the time during the hearing. The commissioners of these States, together with the representatives of the Arkansas department, had formed an association for the purpose of dealing with situations that might arise out of the pool operations. At the instance of a representative of the Oklahoma commission, the commissions of these States requested the National Association of Railroad and Utilities Commissioners to intervene in support of the Arkansas department's position, set out in its intervention. The executive committee of the national association determined to file a brief amicus curiae before the Commission in support of the Arkansas department's position, that the Commission had no jurisdiction of the local rate. That brief has been prepared and is being printed. It will be filed in the next few days.

At the time the pool rates were filed with the Federal Power Commission the rate of the Arkansas Power & Light Co. to the aluminum plant was filed with this department. The engineering staff of the department made a hasty investigation to determine the reasonableness of the rate of the Arkansas Power & Light Co. to the aluminum plant, an intrastate rate, and recommended to the department that the rate be permitted to take effect by operation of law, notwithstanding the fact that it was too low to take care of operating expenses, amortization of special facilities constructed exclusively for the use of the service, and a reasonable return upon the property involved in the service.

The department does not know what field investigation the Federal Power Commission made before ordering the hearing. Had it shown any disposition to cooperate with the department or to have sought information which this department, and the commissions of other States, had concerning the facts, the conclusion would have been irresistible, as was later demonstrated by the testimony developed at the hearing, that the investigation would be futile. The information developed at the hearing could have been secured, in the judgment of this writer, in a week's time by sitting around a conference table.

Shortly after the conclusion of the hearing, the examiner conducting it set the time for filing briefs as of March 9. This time was later extended to April 9 and to May 9. The reason for these extensions has not been disclosed.

Counsel for the Federal Power Commission has suggested a conference between the pool members and that Commission for the purpose of trying to settle the matter in an informal way. Pool members have indicated their willingness to sit in on such a conference, but at this time it has not been called.

The Federal Power Commission, assuming to act under a letter from the President to it and a few of the war agencies interested in securing power for emergency purposes, has taken over the question of finally passing upon the reasonableness of all rates for war industries and war agencies in Arkansas. The department has taken the position that it has exclusive jurisdiction over rates to consumers in Arkansas, whether they be war industries or not.

The War Emergency Pipeline Company, with a 20-inch pipe line extending through the State, is one of these agencies. Engineers of the Federal Power Commission have been investigating the power supply and rates for energy to this line for the operation of pumping stations. These engineers made their investigation without calling upon the department or otherwise conferring with it or its staff, and undertook to dictate a rate between one of the utilities operating in Arkansas and the War Emergency Pipeline Co., which was not in keeping with the policies or practices of, or permitted by, this department. When the contract calling for this rate was filed with the department, as is required by law, it suspended the rate and set the matter for hearing, but directed the utility to supply the power, to be paid for at the rate that would later be fixed.

A copy of the suspension order was mailed to the Federal Power Commission and other parties interested. Upon the receipt of this order, the Federal Power Commission, for the first time, asked for a conference, which was readily granted. As a result of this conference a rate which would cost the pipe-line company some $3,500 a year less than that formerly approved by the Commission was agreed upon. A contract embodying the agreement has not at this time been filed with the department.

I hope you will pardon the length of this letter, but because of the information requested in your letter it was not possible to shorten this report unless ultimate facts, which involve opinions, had been submitted. It is not the purpose of the department nor of this writer to do other than state the facts.

Because of conferences the writer had some time ago with Senator REED, of Kansas, and Senator MCCLELLAN, of Arkansas, a copy of this report is being sent them, since in each of these conferences some of the questions discussed herein were discussed, and they each requested that I submit a statement to them.

Yours very truly,

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC UTILITIES,
P. A. LASLEY, Special Counsel.

BEFORE THE FEDERAL POWER COMMISSION, WASHINGTON, D. C.: IN THE MATTER OF ARKANSAS POWER & LIGHT CO. ET AL.; DOCKET NO. 5802

PETITION OF NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF RAILROAD AND UTILITIES COMMISSIONERS

The National Association of Railroad and Utilities Commissioners respectfully petitions your honorable Commission for leave to file the brief attached hereto as amicus curiae in the above-entitled proceeding and to participate in oral argument, if oral argument shall be made; and in support of said petition respectfully represents as follows:

1. Said association represents in its active membership the regulatory commissions of the several States of the United States, except two, one of which has no State regulatory commission. Such membership includes also the members of the regulatory commissions of the Territories, not yet admitted as States, and of the District of Columbia.

2. Most of said commissions exercise regulatory jurisdiction as to the services and rates of public utilities engaged in the sale of electric energy in their respective jurisdictions.

3. By reason of the jurisdiction of said State commissions, said association has an interest in the above-entitled proceeding.

Respectfully submitted.

JOHN E. BENTON,
FRANK B. WARREN,
Attorneys for said Association.

BEFORE THE FEDERAL POWER COMMISSION, WASHINGTON, D. C., IN THE MATTER OF ARKANSAS POWER & LIGHT CO. ET AL., DOCKET NO. 5802

BRIEF OF THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF RAILROAD AND UTILITIES COMMISSIONERS—PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

This brief is filed by the direction of the executive committee of the National Association of Railroad and Utilities Commissioners, hereinafter referred to as the Association, appearing as amicus curiae. That association, in its membership, is representative of the regulatory commissions and boards of the several States of the Union, except two, one of which has no regulatory commission. Most of these regulatory commissions and boards, hereinafter referred to as State commissions, exercise jurisdiction to regulate the rates and services of electric utilities, engaged in supplying electric service in intrastate commerce, and to consumers in interstate commerce, within their respective States.

By the constitution of said association, authority is vested in the president of the association, and also in its executive committee, to direct representation of the association in any matter pending before any Federal regulatory commission, or in the courts, in which the Association is deemed to have an interest. Said Association is deemed to have an interest in this case by reason of the facts hereinafter stated, and because, to enable said State commissions effectively to exercise the regulatory powers vested in them, it is necessary that the line of demarcation between the jurisdiction of said State commissions and of this commission shall be kept clear, as established by the Federal Constitution, or by Federal legislation enacted in conformity thereto.

This brief is accordingly filed, in the name of said association, in the general public interest, as distinguished from the interest of any particular commission, and for the purpose of aiding this commission to make such determination and disposition of the issues which may be before it as shall be in accord with the law, under which it acts, and as shall most contribute to the effective and well-coordinated regulation of electric utilities by this commission, and by the State commissions aforesaid, acting within the respective spheres to which they have been assigned by the Federal Constitution, and by the laws by which they are respectively governed.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

The facts of this case, so far as they are essential to an understanding of the matter discussed in this brief, are as follows:

On September 1, 1942, the Federal Power Commission instituted the above-entitled proceeding by an order which, so far as material to the discussion contained in this brief, was as follows:

"ORDER INSTITUTING INVESTIGATION

"It appearing to the Commission that:

"(a) On December 18, 1941, Arkansas Power & Light Co. and the Defense Plant Corporation entered into an agreement for the sale and purchase, respectively, of electric energy to be used at the aluminum plant constructed by the Defense Plant Corporation at Lake Catherine, Ark., as an emergency war measure;

"(b) On August 1, 1942, Arkansas Power & Light Co. filed copies of an agreement and supplement designated Arkansas Power & Light Co. Rate Schedule, Federal Power Commission No. 12 and Supplement No. 1 thereto, providing for the rates, charges, and other arrangements in connection with the pooling of power resources of Arkansas Power & Light Co., Kansas Gas & Electric Co., Louisiana Power & Light Co., Mississippi Power & Light Co., Nebraska Power Co., Oklahoma Gas & Electric Co., Public Service Co. of Oklahoma, Southwestern Gas & Electric Co., Southwestern Light & Power Co., Texas Power & Light Co., to enable Arkansas Power & Light Co. to supply electric energy to the Defense Plant Corporation under the above contract of December 18, 1941 (copy of which is attached to the rate schedule as exhibit A thereto):

"The Commission, upon its own motion, orders that:

"An investigation be, and it is hereby instituted, for the purpose of enabling the Commission:

"(1) To determine whether any rate, charge, or classification, demanded, observed, charged, or collected by (the companies named in paragraph (b) above are here separately named) for the transmission or sale of electric energy under Arkansas Power & Light Co. Rate Schedule, Federal Power Commission No. 12 and Supplement No. 1 thereto, subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, or whether any rule, regulation, practice, or contract affecting such rate, charge, or classification, is unjust, unreasonable, unduly discriminatory, or preferential; and

(2) If the commission shall find that any such rate, charge, classification, or any rule, regulation, practice, or contract affecting such rate, charge or classification, is unjust, unreasonable, unduly discriminatory, or preferential, to determine the just and reasonable rate, charge, classification, rule, regulation, practice or contract to be thereafter observed and in force, and to fix the same by order."

The Arkansas Power & Light Co. hereinafter called the Arkansas Co., is an electric utility operating in the State of Arkansas. It is engaged in the generation and in the transmission and sale of electric energy at wholesale in interstate commerce, and is thus subject, as to such transmission and sale, to the jurisdiction of this commission. It is also engaged, in the State of Arkansas, in the sale of electric energy to consumers, as to which it is subject to the jurisdiction of the Department of Public Utilities of the State of Arkansas, hereinafter referred to as the Department, or the Arkansas Department. The Southwestern Gas & Electric Co. and the Oklahoma Gas & Electric Co., respondents herein, also operate within the State of Arkansas, and as to their intrastate operations, and as to their sales to consumers in that State, are subject to the jurisdiction of the said Department. They likewise are engaged in the transmission and sale at wholesale of electric energy in interstate commerce, and are accordingly subject to the jurisdiction of this commission as to such transmission and sale. The other electric companies, named as respondents herein, are electric utilities operating outside the State of Arkansas. All of them are subject to the jurisdiction of this commission by reason of the ownership and operation of facilities used in the transmission or sale of electric energy at wholesale in interstate commerce, except the Texas Power & Light Co. That company does not engage in the transmission or sale of electric energy in interstate commerce aside from the service rendered by it under the pooling agreement referred to in the above-quoted order of investigation. The interconnection of the electric system of that company with the electric systems of other companies provided for in that contract has been found by this commission to be of an emergency nature within the meaning of section 202 (d) of the Federal Power Act, and does not have the effect of bringing that company under the jurisdiction of this commission.

The respondent electric companies, as a group, own and operate a preponderant part of the generating facilities of the States in which their plants are located. The contract between said companies, mentioned in the Commission's order of investigation, is a so-called pooling agreement which provides in part as follows:

"Whereas Defense Plant Corporation proposes to construct an aluminum reduction plant in southern Arkansas, which will comprise, among other facilities, electric generating facilities * * * and * * * desires to purchase power and energy for the operation of a portion of such proposed aluminum reduction plant as a temporary emergency supply * * * and,

Whereas Arkansas Co. desires to submit a proposal to Defense Plant Corporation to supply the amount of power and energy required by Defense Plant Corporation * * * and * * * (its) electric system * * * is now or can readily be interconnected with the systems of the other parties to this agreement;

Now, therefore, * * * the parties * * * agree as follows:

Arkansas Co. will proceed with negotiation with Defense Plant Corporation to the end that a contract (hereinafter called proposed industrial contract) be entered into, wherein Arkansas Co. will agree to purchase after construction of said aluminum reduction plant and during said interim period, at a rate of 4 mills per kilowatt hour for all energy taken, plus an amount equivalent to or more than $130,000 per month for 16 months certain, a temporary emergency supply of power and energy for use in the operation of Defense Plant Corporation's said aluminum reduction plant * * *."

Said pooling agreement further provides that "* * * as soon as the proposed industrial contract becomes a valid and binding agreement on both the parties thereto," each of the parties agreeing to construction facilities to enable the contract to be performed, will proceed with the construction, and use due diligence to complete the same at the earliest practicable date.

The pooling agreement further provides; "Each of the parties hereto, except Arkansas Co., will sell to Arkansas Co.," any energy which it can generate or purchase for resale which is required by Arkansas Co. to enable it to fulfill its obligations under its contract with Defense Plant Corporation.

Article IX of the agreement provides that payments to each of the parties thereto, in accordance therewith, "shall be made by Arkansas Co. from, and only from, the revenues received from Defense Plant Corporation." Elaborate provisions for determining the payments to be made to the several companies, based upon the contract and upon the energy supplied by them respectively, are set forth in the agreement. A statement of the same, however, is not essential for the purposes of this brief. Article XII of the agreement provides:

"This agreement is essentially a several and not a joint sale or service contract as between Arkansas Co. and each of the other parties respectively, and nothing herein shall be deemed to constitute any of the parties hereto partners with, or agents of any other party hereto * * * nor to confer on or create in any third party, not a party hereto, any rights as against any party hereto * * *."

In pursuance of the pooling agreement, a contract was made by the Arkansas Co. for a sale of electric energy to Defense Plant Corporation, which, after modification by a supplement thereto, was filed with the Department, as a rate schedule, under Arkansas law. After such investigation by said Department as was deemed essential, said schedule was permitted to become effective by operation of law in August 1942.

The aforesaid pooling agreement, covering sales at wholesale in interstate commerce to Arkansas Power & Light Co., by the other electric companies, parties thereto (with the contract between Arkansas Co. and Defense Plant Corporation attached as an exhibit), had theretofore been filed with this Commission as a rate schedule covering such sale and transmission of electric energy at wholesale in interstate commerce as was provided for therein. On September 1, 1942, this Commission permitted the same to take effect, by operation of law, designating the same as "Arkansas Power & Light Co. Rate Schedule F. P. C. No. 12 and Supplement No. 1 thereto." On the same date the Commission instituted this proceeding of investigation.

On October 20, 1942, the Commission assigned this proceeding for hearing to be held at Little Rock on November 2, 1942. The hearing, thus assigned, from time to time was postponed, and was begun on December 14, 1942.

Upon the opening of the hearing, appearances were made for the department and for the State commissions of Kansas, Missouri, and Oklahoma. Except for the Arkansas department, however, said commissions took no part in the hearing, either by the presentation of evidence, or by the examination of witnesses.

The hearing was prolonged, continuing, with adjournments, from December 14, 1942, to February 5, 1943.

While the Arkansas department at the opening of the hearing took the attitude of an observer, assuming that the order of investigation was designed to bring under investigation only the interstate wholesale rates of companies selling to Arkansas Co. under the pooling agreement, the course which the hearing took made the department apprehensive lest this Commission entertained the purpose to go beyond the determination of the reasonableness of interstate wholesale rates subject to its jurisdiction, and to investigate and pass judgment upon the reasonableness of the rate provided for in the contract between Arkansas Co. and Defense Plant Corporation, which rate, under applicable law, is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Arkansas department.

The Arkansas department, accordingly, intervened as a party in this proceeding, for the purpose of protesting any disregard of the rights and powers of the State of Arkansas, and for the further purpose of protesting against any action by this Commission to bring about a reduction of payments to the Arkansas Co. to a point which would result in throwing upon those citizens of Arkansas who are patrons of said company a portion of the cost of service supplied by that company to Defense Plant Corporation.

The occasion for the apprehension felt by the Arkansas department, which led to its intervention, may be briefly indicated by references to the record of the hearing.

At the opening of the hearing, the trial examiner stated the purpose of the hearing as follows:

"In general, we are here to conduct an investigation, an objective investigation for the purpose of the discovery of facts. It seemed necessary to the Commission to set the hearing at this time. It seemed desirable to do it. The Commission indulges the hope as I understand its purposes and desires, that all of us here may cooperate in the spirit of mutual helpfulness to develop that whole body of facts which will enable the Federal Power Commission to discharge its own duty, to examine into every phase of this rate contract that is before us in the public interest, and to reach such a determination as to policy and as to the disposition of the matter, as will upon study of the whole record appear to the Commission to be the wisest course and meet the ends of justice.

"If all the parties here will cooperate, Commission's counsel will cooperate and if very fortunately we could get along without any evasion or any too legalistic jockeying for advantage, without fighting too much over nonessential—we lawyers are a little prone to that sort of thing, I think all of us will admit—but if we get along without that in this investigation and let us develop all the facts that are relevant and pertinent that the Commission ought to know about and ought to have before it when it comes to discharge its duty of passing upon this contract, and perhaps of determining any matter of policy in connection with it, with which the Commission may feel itself charged, as a presiding officer, I desire to express the hope that that will be the spirit of the investigation."

This statement was open to the construction that the trial examiner understood the matter to be investigated to be the contract which constituted the rate schedule filed with the Arkansas department, naming the rate payable for service supplied thereunder to a consumer in Arkansas, which rate had been investigated and permitted to become effective by the Arkansas department.

Following this statement by the trial examiner, however, Mr. Lock, counsel for the respondent power companies, sought to elicit some more definite statement for the purpose of the hearing, but without success, beyond that which is indicated by the following colloquy:

"Mr. LOCK. We are ready to go forward, and to go forward in a cooperative attitude such as you have requested * * *. However, we would be very glad to have any information that it would be proper for the Commission to give us in accordance with its rules, if it wishes to do so, with respect to the facts and conditions and circumstances which in its opinion warranted the public hearing. We are perfectly willing to proceed. It would be helpful to have the information on that subject if it could be given us.

"CHIEF TRIAL EXAMINER. May I inquire of Commission counsel if he would desire to respond to that and make an opening statement.

"Mr. MCALISTER. Well, I never realized that there was any mystery about the purpose of the investigation or that there was anything to be disclosed. I dont have a single thing in my mind that I could say in response to the inquiry. The only thing I did want to say was that as far as I know, as far as I am concerned, the only desire that I have, the only information I have, is that the Commission would like to have the necessary facts back of these various arrangements, from a consideration of which the Commission can determine their fairness, propriety, and reasonableness.

"CHIEF TRIAL EXAMINER. The Commission's order of investigation and its order setting the case down for hearing, of course, speak for themselves * * *."

While these statements of representatives of this Commission were rather far from being explicit, the declaration of Commission's counsel was taken to indicate his understanding that the purpose of the investigation was to develop "the necessary facts back of these various arrangements" setting forth the payments the various pool members were to receive for their respective contribution toward supplying electric energy at wholesale to Arkansas Co. "from a consideration of which the Commission can determine their fairness, propriety, and reasonableness."

In the course of the hearing, however, much evidence was brought into the record by counsel for the Commission by interrogation which, in the estimate of the Arkansas department, related solely to the fairness, propriety, and reasonableness of the rate to Defense Plant Corporation, subject to the jurisdiction of said Department, and in effect under a rate schedule on file with it, as aforesaid. Counsel for said Department accordingly made a motion, the essential part of which was as follows:

"that all evidence, documentary and parol, bearing solely upon the reasonableness of said aluminum plant rate, be excluded and stricken from the record and all evidence, irrespective of its nature, be confined and limited solely to the unreasonableness of the rates and matters over which the Federal Power Commission has jurisdiction, to wit: The rates of the pool members for power transmitted and sold in interstate commerce to the Arkansas Power & Light Co."

This motion was denied, and upon the following day counsel for the Arkansas department again presented the motion in alternative form saying:

"In the motions yesterday to exclude the evidence and to limit evidence, which was overruled by the examiner, both of those motions were addressed to the theory that the Arkansas Power & Light Co. was itself serving the aluminum plant, and the motions presupposed that the sale by the power pool members to the Arkansas Power & Light Co. was a complete sale within itself. There has developed and is in the record in three or four places questions and answers implying that the Arkansas Power & Light Co. in delivering current to the aluminum plant may be an agent of the other pool members and that the other pool members from Texas, Oklahoma, and other States are delivering current themselves to the aluminum plant through the agency of their agent, the Arkansas Power & Light Co.

"On the theory that the contract in the pool agreement might be susceptible of such a construction, it is the theory then of the Department of Public Utilities of Arkansas that if the Arkansas Power & Light Co. is not making the delivery upon its own accord, but as an agent merely of the other companies, that jurisdiction to regulate the rate of the other companies' sale to the aluminum plant, even though it moved in interstate commerce, and since the aluminum plant is the consumer, that those rates are exclusively within the jurisdiction of the department of public utilities and not within the jurisdiction of the Federal Power Commission, and I would like to have my motion addressed to that theory of the contract.

"In other words, it is an alternative."

This motion was also denied.

In connection with the discussion of the evidence referred to by these motions and in connection with the rulings made thereon, and in the denial of said motions, no statement by the chief trial examiner, or by any representative of this Commission was at any time made which negatived the apprehension entertained by the Arkansas department that this Commission was about to assert a claim of regulatory jurisdiction under the Federal Power Act to pass judgment upon the reasonableness of the rate for electric energy supplied by Arkansas company to Defense Plant Corporation, which rate had been permitted to take effect by the Arkansas department in the exercise of its jurisdiction under the laws of Arkansas.

It was after a hearing of this character and upon a state of facts thus appearing from the record that this proceeding was brought to the attention of the executive committee of the association by the Arkansas department, and by other State commissions interested in the proceeding, with the result that the committee instructed that this brief be offered for filing.

Contentions discussed herein

While the situation brought under investigation by the Commission's order is a complex one, and while determination of the matters which the Commission undertook to investigate and determine may be difficult, the issues properly before the Commission for decision do not seem open to doubt.

The respondents are the Arkansas company and nine electric utilities with plants outside Arkansas. These nine companies generate and transmit, or join in the transmission, of electric energy to the Arkansas company, which in turn sells the same, together with electric energy generated in its own plants, to Defense Plant Corporation.

The compensation received by each of the respondents, selling to the Arkansas Co., is fixed by the pooling agreement, which was filed with this Commission as a rate schedule, and was permitted to become effective as has been stated. The rates thus fixed are plainly rates for the transmission or sale of electric energy in interstate commerce at wholesale, and are plainly subject to the jurisdiction of this Commission under the Federal Power Act.

This has been at all times recognized by the Arkansas department, and is expressly recognized on behalf of the association at this time.

1. It is the contention of the Arkansas department, in which this association joins, that the only rates brought under investigation by the Commission's order of September 1, 1942, and the only rates over which it has regulatory jurisdiction, are those interstate wholesale rates fixed by the rate schedule on file with this Commission as "Arkansas Power & Light Co. rate schedule F. P. C. No. 12 and supplement No. 1 thereto," for those electric utilities which sell or transmit electric energy to Arkansas Power & Light Co. at wholesale in interstate commerce.

2. The record at various places indicates that the contention may be made that the sale of electric energy to Defense Plant Corporation by Arkansas Co. is, in legal effect, a joint sale by all of the 10 electric utilities which are parties to the pooling agreement.

The association supports the position which was taken by the Arkansas department in the presentation of its alternative motion, that if such can be held to be the legal effect of the pooling agreement, such sale is not a sale at wholesale within the definition of that term as contained in section 201 (d) of the Federal Power Act, and that the rate therefor is accordingly a local rate, subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of the Arkansas department, and hence not within the scope of the investigation order of the Commission in this proceeding, nor within its regulatory jurisdiction.

3. Because it may possibly be argued that the Commission may exercise jurisdiction in this case under section 206 (b), this brief will anticipate such possible argument.

It is the contention of the association that the order of investigation, by which this proceeding was instituted, determines the scope of the investigation. That order specified the rates to be investigated as those rates which are subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission under Federal Power Commission. Under that order the Commission cannot properly undertake to exercise jurisdiction under section 206 (b).

It is furthermore the contention of the association that, in any case in which the Commission makes an investigation under said section 206 (b), the jurisdiction which the Commission may exercise is limited to the determination of "the cost of the production or transmission of electric energy," and does not exceed to the point of determining the reasonableness of the rate at which the same shall be sold, such determination being for the exclusive determination of the regulatory commission vested with jurisdiction thereover.

4. Because there have been suggestions, altogether outside the record in this proceeding, that the Commission, in making this investigation, is acting under a directive from the President of the United States, we shall anticipate any possible argument to that effect by a statement of the position of the Association with respect thereto.

ARGUMENT

The Commission's determination and order can not extend beyond the rates of those respondents which transmit or sell energy to Arkansas Power & Light Co. under the pooling agreement

Section 206 (a) of the Federal Power Act, under which this Commission exercises power to fix reasonable rates, provides that action of the Commission must be "after a hearing." The right to a hearing includes the right to a reasonable notice thereof. The Commission, by its order of September 1, 1942, gave such a notice in this case; and that notice establishes the limits of the Commission's regulatory action in this proceeding.

The Commission's order gave notice that the hearing was to be held for the purpose of determining:

"(1) * * * whether any rate, charge or classification, demanded, observed, charged, or collected by (the respondent companies severally named) for the transmission or sale of electric energy under Arkansas Power & Light Co. Rate Schedule FPC No. 12 and Supplement No. 1 thereto, subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission, or whether any rule, regulation, practice, or contract affecting such rate, charge or classification, is unjust, unreasonable, unduly discriminatory, or preferential; and

"(2) If the Commission shall find that any such rate * * * or contract affecting such rate, charge, or classification, is unjust, unreasonable, unduly discriminatory, or preferential, to determine the just and reasonable rate, * * or contract to be thereafter observed and in force, and to fix the same by order."

The phraseology of this order may have contributed to the apprehension which brought about the intervention of the Arkansas department, since it purports to bring under investigation not only the rates of companies under the pooling agreement, for transmission or sale of electric energy, "subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission," but also any rate or contract "affecting" any such rate, and further states the purpose of the Commission, if any such rate or "any contract affecting such rate" shall be found unjust or unreasonable "to determine the just and reasonable rate * * * or contract * * * to be thereafter observed and enforced, and to fix the same by order."

The fear might be entertained that this order, so phrased, was intended to have reference to the contract between Arkansas Co. and Defense Plant Corporation, and to announce the purpose of this Commission to set aside that contract, if found to be unreasonable, and to prescribe another in its place. The statement of the chief trial examiner, hereinbefore quoted, indicating that the Commission would "examine into every phase of this rate contract, and * * * reach such a determination as to policy, and so forth" may have been taken to indicate that such was the understanding of the chief trial examiner.

Upon consideration, however, it is clear that such was not the intent of the order. The reference in the order of investigation is to the pooling contract, and to that contract only.

Read in its entirety, the order declares the purpose of the Commission to investigate rates "subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission" for which the Commission has jurisdiction to substitute just and reasonable rates, if the rates investigated are found unjust and unreasonable. The rates which are thus subject to the Commission's jurisdiction are all determinable by reference to the pooling contract, filed as a rate schedule with this Commission. To the extent that such a contract is a rate schedule applicable to interstate wholesale electric service, it is subject to the jurisdiction of this Commission. Accordingly, the reference in the Commission's order to any contract "affecting such rate" plainly was designed to relate to the pooling contract, under which all rates which are "subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission" are determined.

This commission has no jurisdiction respecting the contract for service to Defense Plants Corporation, a consumer purchasing electric energy for use in Arkansas. Its power to regulate rates under section 206 (a), by the express terms of that section, extends only to rates "for any transmission or sale subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission." Such jurisdiction, by the provisions of Section 201 (b) is restricted to "the transmission of electric energy in interstate commerce and to the sale of electric energy at wholesale in interstate commerce."

By Section 201 (b), a sale at "wholesale" is defined as a sale of electric energy to any person "for resale." Unless a sale is shown to be a sale "for resale" it does not fall within the jurisdiction of this Commission, even though interstate in character, and regardless of the quantity of energy supplied under the sale.

In this case the electric companies, respondents herein, other than the Arkansas Co., are engaged in the transmission or sale of electric energy to Arkansas Co. at wholesale in interstate commerce. The rates of those companies for that service (except of the Texas Power & Light Co.) are unquestionably subject to the jurisdiction of this commission.

(The Texas Power & Light Co., not being engaged in transmission or sale at wholesale in interstate commerce, aside from its participation in service under the pooling contract, and that company having been granted an order under section 202 (d) establishing exemption from the Commission's jurisdiction by reason of anything done under that contract, its rates, even under the contract, we assume to be beyond the Commission's jurisdiction. Touching that matter, however, the Association makes no argument. What is said hereinafter in this brief with respect to rates of the respondents, is not intended to have reference to the rates of that company.)

With respect to this matter of interstate wholesale rates, the Arkansas department has at no time questioned the jurisdiction of this Commission. This was made clear at the hearing, both by counsel for the Department, and by Mr. Flanders, rate expert for the Department.

The prime purpose of the Federal Power Act was to bring interstate wholesale power rates under regulation to fill the gap in the regulation of electric utilities which had been disclosed by the decision of the United States Supreme Court in Public Utilities Commission v. Attleboro Steam and Electric Co., 273 U. S. 83. The Association supported the enactment of that act, asking only that it be so drawn as not to encroach upon the regulatory powers theretofore exercisable by the States.

As the act was passed by Congress, there is a clear line of demarcation as respects the rates and service of electric utilities between the jurisdiction of this Commission and the jurisdiction which is reserved to the States. Over the interstate sale at wholesale of electric energy, as hereinbefore defined, this Commission has absolute and unquestioned jurisdiction. On the other hand, sales to consumers, whether for domestic, commercial, industrial, or other use, are local in character, and subject only to regulation by the States, even though made across State lines.

That it was the definite purpose of Congress thus to circumscribe this Commission's jurisdiction was made very clear by the congressional committee reports, upon which the bill, which became the Federal Power Act, was presented to the Congress.

The Senate committee in its report upon the bill, said, in part:

"Subsection (a) * * * declares the policy of Congress to extend that regulation to those matters which cannot be regulated by the States and to assist the States in the exercise of their regulatory powers, but not to impair or diminish the powers of any State commission.

"Subsection (b) defines the scope of this part of the act and the jurisdiction of the Commission. * * * This subsection leaves to the States the authority to fix local rates even in cases where the energy is brought in from another State. In Pennsylvania Gas Co. v. Public Service Commission (252 U. S. 23), the Supreme Court held that such rates may be regulated by the States in the absense of Federal legislation. The present bill carefully refrains from asserting Federal jurisdiction over these rates. The rate-making powers of the Commission are confined to those wholesale transactions which the Supreme Court held in Public Utilities Commission v. Attleboro Steam & Electric Co. (273 U. S. 83), to be beyond the reach of the States." (Senate Report No. 621, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session.)

The House committee in its report upon S. 2796 said:

"The new parts (II and III) are designed to meet the situation which has been created by the recent rapid growth of electric utilities along interstate lines. * * * Under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Public Utilities Commission v. Attleboro Steam & E. Co. (273 U. S. 83), the rates charged in interstate wholesale transactions may not be regulated by the States. Part II gives the Federal Power Commission jurisdiction to regulate these rates. A 'wholesale' transaction is defined to mean the sale of electric energy for resale and the Commission is given no jurisdiction over local rates even where the electric energy moves in interstate commerce. * * *

"The bill takes no authority from State commissions and contains provisions authorizing the Federal Commission to aid the State commissions in their efforts to ascertain and fix reasonable charges. * * * Probably no bill in recent years has so recognized the responsibilities of the State regulatory commissions as does title II of this bill." (House of Representatives, Rept. No. 1318, 74th Cong., 1st sess.)

The sole interest of the association in filing this brief is to guard against any decision or order which shall encroach upon the jurisdiction of the States, which Congress so carefully undertook to preserve.

With respect to the reasonableness or unreasonableness of these interstate wholesale rates, which are subject to the jurisdiction of this Commission, the association has no disposition to make argument. We urge simply that it was those rates only which were placed under investigation by the Commission's order, and that it is only those rates which may be made the subject of any decision or order by the Commission in this proceeding.

The association urges that, in any opinion or order which may be rendered or entered herein, it be made clear that the Commission deals with these interstate wholesale rates only, and that such opinion or order is not designed to control the rate charged to Defense Plant Corporation by Arkansas Co., which rate is subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of the Arkansas Department.

The Commission cannot assert jurisdiction over the sale to Defense Plant Corporation upon the theory that it is a joint sale made through the agency of the Arkansas Co.

The record at various points may be construed to indicate that counsel for the Commission may make the contention that the sale of electric energy to Defense Plant Corporation was in fact a joint sale made on behalf of all the 10 companies which are parties to the pooling contract, through the agency of the Arkansas Co.

We do not believe that contention will be made. If it shall be made, however, the argument heretofore presented under the last preceding caption of this brief will be applicable.

In connection with the motion made by the Arkansas department to strike out all evidence relating solely to the rate covering the sale to Defense Plant Corporation, counsel for the Arkansas department made clear the contention of that department that, even if the sale to Defense Plant Corporation be held to be a joint sale, made on behalf of all of the parties to the pooling agreement, nevertheless such sale is beyond the jurisdiction of this Commission to regulate. The association supports that contention of the Arkansas department with entire confidence.

Undeniably all energy sold to Defense Plant Corporation was for use by it in the operation of its aluminum reduction plant at Lake Catherine. It was a sale of power for consumption and not for resale. Accordingly, it was subject to the jurisdiction of the Arkansas department, which jurisdiction the Congress intended should not be disturbed by the creation of this Commission, and by the jurisdiction granted to it.

In addition, we direct attention to article XIII of the pooling agreement, hereinbefore set out in the statement of facts, whereby any construction of the pooling agreement which would give to any other party than the Arkansas Co. any right to receive the service provided for from the several parties to the contract, is expressly negatived.

This Commission cannot adjudicate the reasonableness of the rate to Defense Plant Corporation in this proceeding under section 206 (b)

There is perhaps the possibility of argument that, even though this Commission has no jurisdiction to fix the Defense Plant Corporation rate, the Commission may nevertheless make a decision as to what that rate should be under Section 206 (b) of the Federal Power Act. That Section provides:

"(b) The Commission upon its own motion, or upon the request of any State Commission whenever it can do so without prejudice to the efficient and proper conduct of its affairs, may investigate and determine the cost of the production or transmission of electric energy by means of facilities under the jurisdiction of the Commission in cases where the Commission has no authority to establish a rate governing the sale of such energy."

We do not expect that Counsel for the Commission will undertake to argue that Section 206 (b) authorizes any action by the Commission in this proceeding. The Commission's order declares the purpose, and fixes the scope, of the Commission's investigation, and of its decision. As we have before pointed out, the only rates thus brought under investigation were the interstate wholesale rates which are "subject to the jurisdiction of the Commission."

Furthermore, Section 206 (b) does not give this Commission jurisdiction to determine and declare the just and reasonable rate for electric energy sold to Defense Plant Corporation or to any consumer. That section was enacted to enable this Commission to be of aid to State commissions in a cooperative manner, but not to usurp their functions.

To determine the just and reasonable rate for service supplied to consumers is the function of the State commission, exercising jurisdiction in the locality where the service is supplied. For the commission to undertake to determine and announce what that rate ought to be would be an invasion of the province of the local commission, which can have no other effect than to tend to hamper and embarrass that commission in the exercise of the jurisdiction to regulate, which has been by law vested in it.

If this Commission should assume to determine and declare what a consumer's rate ought to be, either the State commission, vested with jurisdiction must abdicate its authority and substitute the judgment of this Commission for its own judgment, or, if its conclusion as to what is reasonable differs from the opinion promulgated by this Commission, it must make its order subject to the handicap of an announced opinion by this Commission that the State commission opinion is wrong.

It is not the purpose of section 206 (b) to give this Commission any authority for a pronouncement of that character. The section was designed to open the way to helpful cooperation between this Commission and State commissions, to enable them to coordinate the exercise of their powers in the interest of ultimate consumers.

A State commission called upon to fix a rate for electric energy sold to a consumer within the State, but generated outside the State, may encounter difficulty in determining important factors affecting the rate to be fixed, viz, the cost of producing the energy and the cost of transmitting it from the point of production into the State by means of facilities not subject to the jurisdiction of the State commission. This difficulty arises from the fact that the State commission can exercise no power beyond the borders of the State.

To supplement State power, Congress enacted section 206 (b); but the authority given to this Commission by that section goes no further than to authorize the Commission "to investigate and determine the cost of the production or transmission of facilities under the jurisdiction of the Commission." Costs other than those of such production and transmission are for the determination of the State commission; and it is for the State commission to determine what margin of profit, above the aggregate of all costs, it is just and reasonable to permit the selling company to include in the selling price. The ultimate finding of a just and reasonable rate for the service supplied is the exclusive function of the State commission.

This association certainly has no disposition to do anything else than to encourage the use by this Commission of the authority granted to it in section 206 (b) whenever the action of this Commission under that section can be of aid to the local rate-making authority. Furthermore, the record in this case makes it plain that such is the attitude of the Arkansas department.

For the past 25 years this association has undertaken to promote the practice of cooperation between State and Federal commissions, both by securing the enactment of provisions of law authorizing such cooperation, and by encouraging the use of such provisions after their enactment. Said section 206 (b) is a provision of law which can be made of great value to the public if it shall be used in the manner designed by Congress.

In this connection, it may not be improper to observe that a larger degree of cooperation in this proceeding might have avoided the apprehension on the part of the Arkansas Department which led to its intervention as a party herein, and might perhaps even have obviated the occasion for any formal hearing.

All of the activities of the Federal and State commissions with reference to any rate directly or indirectly involved or affected by this proceeding look toward the establishment of a just and reasonable rate to the ultimate consumer, the Defense Plant Corporation. That rate had been agreed upon by the parties, and upon filing with the Arkansas Department had been permitted to take effect, without a rate hearing.

In order to perform its contract with Defense Plant Corporation, it was necessary for the Arkansas Co. to buy power generated outside Arkansas. The payments to be made to the companies supplying that power, fixed in the pooling agreement, were the principal factors underlying the rate to Defense Plant Corporation. Those rates, having been filed with this Commission, were permitted to take effect without hearing in the same manner as the Arkansas rate had been permitted to take effect in Arkansas. It is obvious that both commissions considered that Defense Plant Corporation should not be impeded in its arrangements to supply itself with power.

Inasmuch as these interstate wholesale rates, however, were such important factors in the making of the Defense Plant Corporation rate, it would seem plain that the Arkansas Department had as much interest as this Commission in being assured that those rates were not too high.

Here was a complicated situation involving exercise of the jurisdiction of both State and Federal Commissions. It was exactly the kind of case in which cooperation, such as the Federal law makes possible, would have been most desirable.

These observations are made without any intent to allocate blame for the absence of cooperation either to the Federal or to the State commissions, or to imply that there is blame which might be allocated. The absence of cooperation has doubtless been the result of oversight or misunderstanding and not indisposition to cooperate. These observations are made by this amicus curiae with the thought that they may possibly contribute toward the handling of analogous situations in the future in such manner that there may be a joinder of the efforts of the commissions in forwarding the common purpose of bringing about just and reasonable rates and service to all consumers.

When the commission felt that an investigation of these rates was perhaps desirable, if it had invited a conference with the Arkansas department concerning the situation, it does not seem open to doubt that the Arkansas department would have readily joined in such a conference, and would have cooperated in any investigation which might have seemed advisable after a consideration of the situation in the light of all the information in the possession of the two commissions, or which might have been assembled through an informal inquiry.

The result might have been a joint conclusion that there was no occasion for a formal hearing, or both commissions might have instituted investigations, each of the rates under its jurisdiction, and a joint hearing might have been held.

Instead of such a proceeding, however, this hearing was instituted by an order which might easily have been misunderstood as designed to bring under investigation by this Commission the reasonableness of the Defense Plant Corporation rate, already established under an Arkansas department tariff.

Upon the institution of this proceeding, it is true that the customary notice called for by the cooperative agreement was sent by this Commission to the commission of each State in which energy was to be generated or transmitted under the pooling agreement; and it is true that, under the Commission's standing rule, the commissioners from those States might have taken part as cooperators. Had they done so, it is to be believed that they might have had a helpful part in determining the course of the hearing and in developing the record by appropriate interrogation of witnesses, and they might now be in a position to consider with this Commission the decision to be made.

Apparently no State commission, except the Arkansas department, has considered that the matters immediately involved in this case were of any considerable interest to it, and the Arkansas department has seemingly considered that the proceeding looks toward a review of its action in permitting the defense-plant rate to become effective. In such a proceeding, obviously, it could not cooperate. It could only protest. Hence its intervention as a party herein.

While State and Federal commissions can perform their functions proceeding independently, we submit that their effectiveness can be greatly increased if they will work in cooperation in matters such as that which led to this proceeding. We are satisfied that the State commissions can profit greatly from the cooperation of this commission, and from the understanding of the policies and purposes of this Commission in its proceedings, which such cooperation might afford them. On the other hand, we are satisfied that this commission loses an opportunity to increase its effectiveness, and to increase, as well, the public understanding of the value of its work, when it permits a proceeding of this character to be instituted with no preliminary understanding, or adequate effort to insure an understanding, with State commissions affected.

It is, of course, plain that the Arkansas department has a very vital interest in the interstate wholesale rates paid by Arkansas Co. for the power purchased by it from companies in other States. It is beyond the jurisdiction of the Arkansas department to investigate or to fix those rates. If they are too high, and hereafter shall be established on a lower basis, it is the province and the duty of the Arkansas department to take that changed situation into account, and to reflect the same in an appropriate rate to Defense Plant Corporation. It is not necessary to assure this commission that it need not be concerned lest the Arkansas Commission neglect its duty. This commission will assume that.

There need, however, be no assumption about the matter. This record shows the attitude of the Arkansas department. It will welcome whatever aid this Commission may give to it toward the effective exercise of the powers of the Arkansas department. This is shown by the testimony of Mr. Flanders, the department's rate expert, when under interrogation by Mr. McAllister, from which we quote excerpts as follows:

"Question. Can you now, Mr. Flanders, under the existing Arkansas Power & Light Co. contract with Defense Plant Corporation, from a consideration of that contract alone, make any determination as to the reasonableness of the rate between Defense Plant Corporation and Arkansas Power & Light Co. without giving basic consideration to the intercompany agreement which is an agreement over which the Federal Power Commission has jurisdiction?

"Answer. I couldn't make what might be termed an exact cost study without knowing the cost that the Arkansas Power & Light Co. would incur through the intercompany agreement, and considering that as a purchase of energy by the Arkansas Power & Light Co.

"Question. A cost study is not an exact study, is it? It is the best you can do with what you have. Isn't that right?

"Answer. That is correct, and rates are never exactly determined on the basis of cost studies. They are used as an indication.

"Question. So that, in reality, according to your testimony here, there is every need for close cooperation between the Federal Power Commission and the department of public utilities of the State of Arkansas if the utilities in your State are to receive their proper proportion or proper share of the revenue derived from this contract, and the department of public utilities of the State of Arkansas operating by itself and considering a contract that is on file there can't independently control that situation on one contract now on file. Isn't that right? I mean, from the study you have made.

"Answer. Yes, sir; that is a more or less two-part question, and I will answer it that way. There is every reason in the world for cooperation, yes, sir; and it should have that. The last part is that we cannot make the determination to any degree of exactness without knowing the final decision or the decision of the Federal Power Commission in relation to those matters to which you refer, namely, the inter-company agreement. I think that maybe I have answered your question, although I am not sure.

"Question. I think that is right. You have a supply of power coming from a great number of sources for your load?

"Answer. Yes, sir.

"Question. No one of those States, considering the authority which you have, can adequately deal with that pool arrangement; is that right?

"Answer. That is correct; yes, sir" (transcript, pp. 3237–3238).

In this proceeding the Commission is not acting under the President's directive

It may possibly be argued that the Commission in this proceeding may act under the President's directive, of which announcement was made from the White House on October 27, 1942.

We do not choose to make argument on that point for three reasons:

First, the Commission by its order of investigation, made long before the issuance of the directive, confined the scope of the heading to rates within its jurisdiction; and no notice or intimation was at any time given that the scope of the hearing was subsequently enlarged, and,

Second, the President's directive does not impose upon the Commission any duty to determine the reasonableness of a rate which has been established in accordance with a State regulatory law. If the directive might be so construed as to impose upon the Commission such duty, it does not appear probable that the Commission would proceed to determine a rate thereunder without notice to the State commission of the State involved of its intent to make such determination, and without affording opportunity to such State commission to be heard respecting the matter to be determined.

The State, in any case falling within the directive, has an interest in any rate which may be brought about by Federal action, by reason of the likelihood that, if an inadequate rate is fixed, the burden of resulting loss therefrom will fall upon other rate payers within the State.

The position of the Arkansas department upon this matter was stated by Judge Lasley, counsel for the department, at the hearing on February 2, 1942, as follows:

"The Department will insist that none of the companies under its jurisdiction—Arkansas Power & Light Co., Southwestern Gas & Electric Co., and Oklahoma Gas & Electric Co.—should be required to serve any war industries at rates which merely cover the incremental cost of the service with nothing allowed for maintenance, depreciation, and return upon investment. To do so will, in the opinion of the department, penalize the rate payers of these companies who for years have paid for the carrying of any facilities made use of during the emergency. These rate payers are carrying their just proportion of the war burden and should not have inflicted upon them heavier or additional burdens of the war that are not borne by other citizens of this Nation."

The Commission will recognize the soundness of the view urged by the Arkansas department, and would not intend to foreclose the department from being heard, by failing to give notice that the Commission was proceeding to determine a rate under the directive.

The very direct interest which the people of Arkansas have in avoiding the imposition of unremunerative rates upon utilities serving that State is very strikingly shown by exhibit No. 134, presented by the Arkansas department in this proceeding. The exhibit is a copy of an order made by the Arkansas department dated November 27, 1942, requiring the Arkansas Co. to refund to its electric patrons in Arkansas the full amount of revenue received from such patrons in the year 1942 in excess of operating expenses and such amounts additional thereto as the department had considered to make just compensation for the service supplied by said company to said electric patrons. Under that order refunds actually made by the Arkansas Co. were estimated to aggregate $625,000 for the year 1942, the order having been sustained by the State court in Arkansas. If Arkansas Co. shall be compelled to serve Defense Plant Corporation at an unremunerative rate, the resulting loss would, in the ultimate result, be borne not by the company but by its patrons.

The Commission will, of course, construe the President's directive in the light of the decisions of the United States Supreme Court in Penn Dairies, Inc., et al. v. Milk Control Commission of Pennsylvania, decided on March 1, 1943, and in cases cited therein, the court having, in the Penn Dairies, Inc., case, upheld the price regulation of the Pennsylvania Milk Control Commission, as effective to prevent sales to the United States Department of Agriculture at less than the price fixed by the Pennsylvania Milk Control Commission, notwithstanding Federal statutes directing the War Department to advertise for bids, and to accept the lowest bidder.

The Commission, also, in construing the directive, will have in mind the provisions of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, enacted January 30, 1942, and the amendment thereto, enacted on October 2, 1942, as bearing upon the probability or improbability that the President can have intended to direct the Commission to make any changes in rates fixed under State law.

Third, this Association has no interest in any action taken by this Commission by virtue of a directive from the President, whereunder the Commission assumes to exercise powers aside from and beyond those granted in the Federal Power Act. With respect to any such action, the Association asks only that it be made clear that this Commission does not claim that its action is in the exercise of authority vested in it by Congress, but instead that it is taken under an asserted war power of the President.

Respectfully submitted.

JOHN E. BENTON,
FRANK B. WARREN,
Attorneys for said Association.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 23, 1943.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, from 1937 to 1941 it was my privilege to be Governor of my State of Vermont. During those 4 years it was frequently my duty, and usually my pleasure, to do business with persons who represented the Federal Government and whose work would bring them occasionally into my State. I wish to say to the Members of the Senate today that of the Federal officials who have impressed me as being conscientious, honest, hard-working, and sincere, one of the foremost of them all is Leland Olds, Chairman of the Federal Power Commission. He did have work to do in my State, as he had work to do in all New England, and as there was work for his Commission to do. I think he did it well in forcing down some of the outrageous write-ups in utility values which existed in Vermont and in other States. I know of one single instance where property valued at $50,000 for the purposes of assessment was written on the books of the utility company at a million and a quarter dollars; and that was not an isolated instance.

Mr. Olds came there or sent his men there, and I think they did remarkably good work, which has resulted in saving the people of northern New England millions of dollars every year.

I always found Mr. Olds to be courteous; I always found him to be considerate of the rights of the State, and, unlike some other Federal officials, he never tried to trample over the people whom he was supposed to serve.

I feel that I ought to say this to the Senate today because I can regard the speech of the Senator from New Hampshire only as an attack upon Chairman Olds. I have never known Mr. Olds to take an unfair advantage of any man. I believe him to be one of the most honest, courageous and hard-working public servants we have today. He has always been there fighting for the rights of those who pay his salary by their tax money.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I desire to add a word of praise for Chairman Olds. During the time I was Governor of North Dakota I repeatedly called upon the agency to help me. Partly because of the fine work they did, we reduced the flat rate for the public institutions in Bismarck, N. Dak., from 9 cents a kilowatt-hour to 1 cent. Time and time again I telegraphed for advice from them and they were always helpful. So far as I am concerned, I do not think that the distinguished junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] was warm enough in his praise. Chairman Olds and his commission did a remarkable job during those years.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I always find it difficult to disagree with my very dear and close friend, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], but I rise to oppose the amendment he has offered to the committee amendment which increases the appropriation for the National Resources Planning Board. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] covered very thoroughly my conception of the fundamental objections that many of us have to the continuation of this Board.

The creation of the National Resources Planning Board has never been approved by Congress. It was created as a part of the Executive Office of the President on September 8, 1939, by Executive decree. It has a complicated history.

The Federal Employment Stabilization Act of February 3, 1931, provided for the preparation by the Secretary of Commerce of a comprehensive public works program to combat the widespread unemployment which then existed. As a result, the Federal Employment Stabilization Board was created to carry out the act. This agency was abolished, and its successor, the Federal Employment Stabilization Office, was established on March 1, 1934. The primary purpose of this agency was to advise the President of trends in unemployment and to plan for a continuous 6-year public-works program.

Then the National Planning Board of the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works was created by the administrator on July 20, 1933. Then on July 30, 1934, the President created the National Resources Board as an independent agency to supersede the National Planning Board. The National Resources Board then became the National Resources Committee on June 7, 1935, and continued to operate under this name until it was merged with the Federal Employment Stabilization Office to form the National Resources Planning Board on July 1, 1939, by Executive order and not by the action of Congress. Then the National Resources Planning Board was created as a part of the Executive Office of the President on September 8, 1939.

I doubt if any other agency of the Government has had such a complicated history as the National Resources Planning Board has had. This complicated and circuitous procedure in establishing an agency of government demonstrates the great evil of permitting costly agencies of the Government to be established by Executive order without approval of Congress.

Up to this date the National Resources Planning Board and its predecessors have spent $9,068,617, and asks $1,400,000 for the next fiscal year.

At least 15 agencies of Government are now conducting post-war planning, and also 2 congressional committees. The agencies of the Government include the Treasury Department, the Federal Reserve Board, the Department of Agriculture, the Department of Labor, the National Housing Agency, the Federal Power Commission, the Federal Communications Commission, the Bureau of the Budget, the War Manpower Commission, the Federal Security Agency, the Department of Commerce, and the Board of Economic Warfare.

If the National Resources Planning Board is permitted to plan for our post-war period, we will have the same kind of a post-war program presented to Congress that has been previously given us by the Executive prior to the war. This will mean a plan based on the premise that the more we borrow and spend the greater our prosperity and the greater the purchasing power of the people will be.

Under this plan we succeeded in increasing nearly five times the public debt for nonmilitary expenditures in time of peace, and then we were faced with the most colossal war expenditures in all history. We built up a bureaucracy, the like of which the world has never known, and which has now become so gigantic and unwieldly as to present a very serious obstacle to the full utilization of the manpower and resources of this country in winning the war.

The trend of the policies of the National Resources Planning Board is on the theory that the Government should become a continuous borrower of the savings of the people and should use such funds to spend on various kinds of projects for the purpose of creating national income. This has been demonstrated time and time again by the reports made by the Board. Such a policy involves a continuous increase in the national debt, but the Board argues that a large public debt continuously increased is not dangerous, first, because it increases the national income; and, second, the interest is not a burden because it is collected from the people in the form of taxes and paid back to them in the form of interest. According to this line of reasoning national deficits of five, ten, twenty, or more billions of dollars a year are not a condition to excite alarm.

Mr. President, I shall not take the time of the Senate to cover the same ground the very able Senator from Ohio has covered, but I wish to make reference to a memorandum with respect to the National Resources Planning Board prepared by Mr. John T. Flynn, who is a very able economist and student of Government affairs. I desire to call attention to a few paragraphs of this memorandum prepared by Mr. Flynn when he says:

> There is abundant and, indeed, conclusive evidence that the National Resources Planning Board has adopted this theory—
> The theory is spending for spending's sake—
> which might be called the national debt theory of abundance, but which is called by its sponsors dual consumptive economy.
> In Germany before Hitler, and since Hitler, it is called planned consumption. It is sometimes referred to as that here.
> The theory of deficit financing by the Government was first invoked in 1933. It was, however, a different theory. The development of it in this country is extremely interesting and important.

I ask unanimous consent that the entire statement by Mr. Flynn be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The National Resources Planning Board and the Board of Economic Warfare are engaged in post-war planning activities. The National Resources Planning Board is limiting itself generally to planning for the United States. The Board of Economic Warfare is concerned more with the post-war economic international picture. The National Resources Planning Board has given some publicity to its plans. The Board of Economic Warfare has given very little.

Stated generally, both of these Boards are proceeding on the theory that with the end of the war this Government must embark upon a program of public spending in order to avert widespread unemployment and an economic crisis. And in accordance with this, numerous blueprints are being prepared for extensive projects involving the spending of many billions of dollars.

However, it is not the projects proposed which are of most importance but rather the philosophy underlying the plans. Up until recently public spending has been defended as a device to be utilized by the Government in periods of economic lethargy or crisis to restore balance. That is to say, it has been treated as an emergency device. The great importance of the activities of the National Resources Planning Board lies in this fact: That this Board is proceeding upon the theory that public spending of borrowed money must not be considered as an emergency device but as a permanent instrument of public policy.

Unless this fact is understood, the whole seriousness and significance of this movement will be lost upon the mind of Congress. I offer the following brief and simple statement of the economic theory upon which these Boards are operating:

"The present capitalist system or system of free enterprise as we know it is no longer capable of functioning effectively. The reason for this is as follows:

"The dynamic element in the capitalist system has been private investment. Since millions of people save billions of dollars yearly, these savings must be brought back into the stream of spending. This can be done only through investment. When private investment is either curtailed or halted, the capitalist system goes into a depression. Nothing, therefore, can revive the present system save a revival of investment.

"Private investment cannot be revived on a scale sufficient to absorb the savings of the people. Hence, recovery through private investment is hopeless.

"Private investment cannot be sufficiently revived for one reason, and that is because there are no longer open to the savers opportunities for investment. Therefore the savings must remain inert.

"Opportunities for investment are not open for three reasons: (1) Because the frontier has gone, with its great opportunity for territorial and resource expansion; (2) because population increase has slowed down to a snail's pace; (3) because technological development has matured. That is to say, there are no longer in sight any such great inventions as the railroad, the automobile, etc., which will change all the arrangements of our social life and call for huge money expenditures and investment.

"For these reasons, therefore, the present capitalist system is helpless to recover its energy. This is not a mere emergency condition, but a characteristic of the present system which will continue indefinitely.

"For this reason we must adopt a new type of economic organization. This new type is called the dual system. Under this system the Government will become a continuous borrower of the savings of the people and will use these funds to spend on various kinds of projects for the purpose of creating national income. What we must look forward to, therefore, is a long-range program of Government projects financed by borrowed funds.

"Such a policy involves a continuous increase in the national debt. But this is not a condition to be feared. Apprehensions about huge public debt are a form of old-fashioned superstition comparable to the aversion to interest in the Middle Ages. A large public debt, continuously increasing, is not dangerous, first, because it increases the national income; second, the interest is not a burden because it is collected back from the people in the form of taxes and paid back to them in the form of interest.

"For this reason national deficits of five, ten, twenty, or more billion dollars a year are not a condition to excite alarm."

Adopting these principles as the underlying policy of planning, it is easy to see why the planners offer with complete confidence programs for spending countless billions permanently. This helps us to understand much that has been said by very influential persons like Vice President WALLACE and others about the manner in which abundance is to be brought not only to America, but to the whole world when the war ends. Their plans, which seem a little disturbing to others, appear quite feasible and reasonable to them because they believe they have discovered the secret of abundance and of continuous prosperity through the manipulation of national debt as an instrument for creating national income.

EVIDENCE OF ADOPTION BY NATIONAL RESOURCES PLANNING BOARD OF THE DEBT THEORY

There is abundant and indeed conclusive evidence that the National Resources Planning Board has adopted this theory, which might be called the national-debt theory of abundance, but which is called by its sponsors the dual consumptive economy. In Germany, before Hitler, and since Hitler, it is called planned consumption. It is sometimes referred to as that here.

The theory of deficit financing by the Government was first invoked in 1933. It was, however, a different theory. The development of it in this country is extremely interesting and important:

1. The first phase came when Mr. Hoover, as Secretary of Commerce, posed the idea of a public-works reserve. That theory, which had been worked out by a commission appointed by the Government, was as follows: The Government should, in times of normal or boom production, abstain from public-works expenditures, but should prepare plans for needed public works and put these plans into execution on the appearance of a depression for the purpose of supplementing the income of private business. This theory, however, did not involve the borrowing of money by the Government. Its whole purpose was to produce a condition of balance by which the Government would not add to the boom tendencies during a period of expanding production but would save its expenditures for a period of shrinking production.

2. The second phase came in 1933 when the pump-priming theory was advanced. Then it was proposed to have the Government spend money to create national income and to do so with borrowed funds. The theory was that the Government would pour large quantities of new income into the pump of private business and set it working again. This, however, was limited wholly to the crisis and was a purely emergency device to be discontinued as quickly as possible when the private enterprise pump began to work. The President held this view and repeated it many times, and as late as 1929 Mr. Marriner Eccles, one of the leaders in that movement, declared emphatically that he favored Government deficit spending only in times of depression.

3. The third phase made its public appearance in 1938. Dr. Alvin H. Hansen, a widely known economist, littauer professor of economics at Harvard University, began to enunciate the principle set out at the beginning of this memorandum. This principle discarded the pump-priming theory. It discarded the theory that deficit spending was necessary only during depression. It adopted the theory that in the free-enterprise system depression is a chronic and not an occasional phenomenon. Dr. Hansen turned to the theory that the free-enterprise pump was hopelessly inadequate to create the necessary national income and there must be a second pump—a Government pump—which would supplement the stream of national income by borrowing in large volume and pouring the funds out into the stream of business through national public expenditures. This Dr. Hansen called the dual consumptive economy as distinguished from a dual productive economy. In other words, he did not propose to have the Government borrow money and take over industries to operate them either in competition with or to the exclusion of private industry. Private industry is to go on producing the goods and services required by the people. The Government "will assume responsibility to assure a sustained consumption" by providing all the additional income necessary.

Dr. Hansen is a professional economist and his discussions were largely inside the profession. In 1938 a little volume was issued called an Economic Program for American Democracy, by seven Harvard and Tufts economists. This small volume set out the principle of this new form of economy very much in the language used in this memorandum above, and this book began to be passed around among the persons and agencies in the Government most interested in this whole spending policy. Six of the seven economists who wrote this book—disciples of Dr. Hansen—were brought to Washington and put into key positions as economists of various bureaus, and as economic advisers of even such important agencies as the War Production Board. Dr. Hansen was made economic adviser of the Federal Reserve Board by Marriner Eccles, who had become impressed by this theories and by the little book of the Harvard and Tufts economists. In 1939, when the President requested the National Resources Planning Board to prepare plans and blueprints for the post-war world, Dr. Hansen became one of the advisers of the National Resources Planning Board. He became, indeed, the chief inspiration of the Board for the underlying principles or philosophy upon which it proceeded. He is not on the pay roll of the National Resources Planning Board, but of the Federal Reserve Board, his services thus being made available to the National Resources Planning Board.

The position of Dr. Hansen in Washington in reference to planning is described in the New Republic, December 29, 1941, by Mr. Richard Lee Strout, as follows:

"The economic and fiscal thinking of this distinguished professor of economics permeates the New Deal. But for one thing he would be the Felix Frankfurter of the administration's financial policy, the Corcoran-Cohen of its economic philosophy. What stands in the way is the fact that Dr. Hansen does not give a whoop about the New Deal, one way or another. What he cares about is his revolutionary vision of a brave new America after the war. An America in which factories work overtime on peace goods and there are jobs for all.

"Dr. Hansen takes the Federal Express out of Boston every Tuesday night. He stays in Washington 2 days and is back for his graduate seminars in Cambridge again on Friday morning. In the two days of his commuter's stop at the capital his telephone rings constantly. A stream of visitors comes to his door. His discussions go on through lunch and dinner, then after dinner. They are with top-rank men in the Government. He is one of the most influential men in Washington.

"Recently he flew on a semiofficial mission to England. And in Washington, the genial and stocky professor, Keynes' counterpart in America, swings into a 30-cent taxi at the Union Station every Wednesday morning and goes to the marble home of the Federal Reserve Board on Constitution Avenue.

"In Washington he is a close adviser of Marriner S. Eccles, of the Federal Reserve System, and an intimate of Vice President Wallace. He is on the United States-Canadian joint economic commission. He first came to Washington as a State Department adviser in connection with the reciprocal-trade agreements. Today, as he puts it, he dabbles in many things. He is a consultant of the National Resources Planning Board and is working on post-war urban development plans with a Reserve Board assistant. He is an adviser on Federal-State-local fiscal matters. But most of all he is concerned with the new America after the war."

About his thesis, the article continues:

"It is a post-war blueprint, being compiled today by Keynes in London and Hansen in Washington. Dr. Hansen has been trying to tell about it in his difficult books; and has got the academic world half convinced, and the New Deal 90 per cent sold."

When Harper's magazine printed an article by Dr. Hansen in April, 1942, outlining his Dual Economy and his debt thesis of prosperity, Harper's said of the article: "In view of his great prestige with the Government, it might be called a semi-official vision."

When the National Resources Planning Board was ready to sell its ideas to Congress and the public, it made a report to Congress and issued a series of pamphlets for public consumption. Referring to these pamphlets, the Board said:

"In reports transmitted to the Congress and the President the Board has set forth certain objectives of post-war planning. The Board believes that it will be helpful to put these objectives before the American people in a series of short statements. The realization of these objectives will require the support of public opinion everywhere and action by State and local authorities as well as the Federal Government; it seems appropriate, therefore, to put forth guiding ideas even before details and plans are worked out." (Post-War Agenda pamphlet issued by National Resources Planning Board, November 1942.)

The Board then lists the pamphlets issued "to this end". One of the earliest is entitled "After the War—Full Employment" published in January, 1942. This pamphlet was prepared for the Board by Dr. Alvin H. Hansen and is so labelled. This is one of the pamphlets officially described by the Board in November, 1942 as offering its "underlying objectives" and "guiding ideas".

In this pamphlet Dr. Hansen lays down the proposition outlined in his book, namely, the principle of the Dual Consumptive Economy, in which private business will produce the goods and the Government will assume responsibility to assure a sustained consumption (p. 3). He describes this on pages 3 and 4 of the pamphlet thus:

"We know from past experience that private enterprise has done this for limited periods only. It has not been able to insure continuous and sustained demand * * * Private industry and government together must act to maintain and increase output and income sufficiently to provide substantially full employment."

Throughout the pamphlet appear the well-known arguments that appear in Dr. Hansen's book Fiscal Policy and Business Cycles and the Harvard and Tufts book An Economic Program for American Democracy—namely, that (1) public debt is something very different from private debt because private debts must be paid and public debts need not; public debt is not a burden since it increases income; the taxes collected to meet interest charges are not lost as they are paid right back, largely to institutions that benefit the community as a whole; public debt should be used as an instrument of public policy to control the magnitude of the national income, while taxes are used to effect its distribution.

Dr. Hansen suggests a post-war national income budget as follows:

Consumption	$80,000,000,000
Net capital formation (including public works and housing)	10,000,000,000
Defense (including International Reconstruction Finance Corporation)	10,000,000,000

Since the Board has offered this pamphlet by Dr. Hansen, its most influential adviser, as containing a statement of underlying objectives, and guiding ideas, there is little room left to doubt that the theories of Dr. Hansen are those which lie at the bottom of all the Board's planning.

But this is not all. Throughout almost all the reports and pamphlets is the recognition of this theory as the underlying principle of all that is being done by the Board.

Mr. Rexford Tugwell said in 1940 that our spending program had failed to produce full recovery because we had not spent enough. We had spent only around $3,000,000,000 a year whereas the Government should spend $12,000,000,000. In its pamphlet The Future of Transportation issued in September 1942, the Board said:

"Inevitable readjustments following the present war will require far-reaching participation in productive investments designed to stimulate and maintain a high level of national income. Although billions of dollars have been spent in the past to provide emergency relief employment on transportation projects, results have been grossly inadequate in the light of what might have been attained."

Throughout all the pamphlets and reports is the idea that we have built up our national income during the war by vast public expenditures and that the same devices can produce the same results in peace. Thus, in the pamphlet, After Defense—What?, issued in January 1942, the Board says:

"The full employment and prosperity which is coming with the defense effort proves that we can have full employment system and balance the production-consumption budget at a high level if we are determined to do so."

Indeed, various members of the administration confirm this, for they continually assert that we are going to accomplish all the miracles of abundance when the war ends by "a bold use of the public credit." Mr. WALLACE and Mr. Milo Perkins, of the Board of Economic Warfare, have said this

It is necessary to report, however, the most important fact respecting these opinions, and that is that all this is suggested not as a mere emergency device to tide us over the post-war transition period but as a permanent instrument of public policy to create a high level of national income, and it therefore means a continuously rising public debt. We are assured by the President that the national debt will be $210,000,000,000 in June 1944. If the war should end at that time, we must look to at least 1 year of spending as great as during 1943-44. The peak of spending in the last war was reached in the year following the war. It is coming to be generally recognized that the national debt will be swelled by the war effort to not less than $300,000,000,000. It is at this point, with a debt of $300,000,000,000, that the Planning Board proposes to launch a vast program of public expenditures with borrowed funds, adding each year to the stupendous debt and doing this permanently.

The idea has been expressed by the Hansen group sponsoring this theory thus:

"The notion that Government spending can be resorted to only as a temporary emergency device must be abandoned. A program must be developed which recognizes the necessity for permanent public investment."

Again they say:

"We advocate a long-term program of Government investment financed through borrowing of savings which would otherwise go to waste."

Dr. Hansen admits a limit to public debt. He thinks that there must be some proportion between debt and national income but he does not believe that national income can be increased without increasing the debt, and he says in his book Fiscal Policy and Business Cycles that we cannot look forward ever again to the balanced budget for any considerable period.

How all this money is to be spent is not yet made very clear. The National Resources Planning Board has made a list of public works projects which are already available for what it calls its 6-year plan, thus going Germany two better on the 4-year plan and Russia one better on the 5-year plan. This is only a beginning, however. A careful reading of all the pamphlets and reports indicates that the Board supports another theory, namely, that public funds must be used to invest in private industries, purchasing the bonds or stock of railroads, utilities, or other industries in order to supply the credit which they believe is not forthcoming from private sources.

JOHN T. FLYNN.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I wish also to call attention to a document which has recently been issued by Mr. Harold G. Moulton, president of the Brookings Institution, which takes the same view of the policies of the National Resources Planning Board as that taken by Mr. Flynn. Mr. Moulton says in his report that there are two opposing philosophies with respect to public finance. He continues:

The first, which may be called the traditional view, is that a continuously unbalanced Budget and rapidly rising public debt imperil the financial stability of the Nation. The second, or new conception, is that a huge public debt is a national asset rather than a liability and that continuous deficit spending is essential to the economic prosperity of the Nation. According to this view, the conception of a balanced Budget belongs in the category of obsolete economic dogma, the fallacy of which has been clearly demonstrated in recent years.

SUPPORT NEW PHILOSOPHY

The traditional view, the report said, is held by the United States Treasury, by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, by the President, by numerous congressional leaders both in the House and in the Senate, and by many individuals occupying important positions in the administration.

The new conception is advocated by the National Resources Planning Board, by numerous individuals high in the councils of the Government, and by various groups not connected with the administration.

So, Mr. President, while we want post-war planning, in my judgment we do not want the same kind of post-war planning we have had from the National Resources Planning Board in the past 10 years, which has brought us to the brink of disaster by the continuous recommendations which have been made for deficit spending.

I hope very much that the Senate will reject the amendment proposed by the very able senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], and not increase the appropriation, and then I hope that the entire National Resources Planning Board will be abolished, that the Senate will concur in the action of the House of Representatives, which struck out from the appropriation bill all appropriations for this agency of the Government.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I have had the pleasure of serving on a joint committee which included members of the National Resources Planning Board. The joint committee was created for the purpose of studying labor conditions and the mine situation in the anthracite region of Pennsylvania. I do not believe the Senator from Ohio or the Senator from Virginia has ever done any work directly in conjunction with the members of the National Resources Planning Board. I found them very competent, very intelligent, and very constructive in their suggestions, and for that reason I shall vote to support the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee, which I hope will prevail. I am sure that if my colleague, the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], who served with me on the joint committee to which I have referred, were present, he would join in what I have said.

Mr. MCKELLAR obtained the floor.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. MCKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. HILL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Gerry	Overton
Andrews	Gillette	Pepper
Austin	Green	Radcliffe
Bailey	Guffey	Reed
Ball	Gurney	Revercomb
Bankhead	Hatch	Reynolds
Bilbo	Hawkes	Robertson
Bone	Hayden	Russell

Clark, Mo.	Maybank	Walsh
Danaher	Mead	Wheeler
Davis	Millikin	White
Eastland	Moore	Wiley
Ellender	Nye	Willis
Ferguson	O'Daniel	Wilson
George	O'Mahoney

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-three Senators having responded, a quorum is present.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate for only a few moments to discuss the paragraph of the bill dealing with the National Resources Planning Board. When that paragraph came before the House it was stricken out entirely. When the bill came to the Senate Committee on Appropriations an amendment was offered to restore the item of $534,000 for the Board for the coming fiscal year. That item was adopted in the subcommittee, but when it came before the full Appropriations Committee it was rejected by a tie vote, 10 to 10. After the rejection of that proposal a Senator suggested that $200,000 be appropriated for collaboration with the States. That was agreed to, and that provision is now in the bill.

Mr. President, on my own responsibility as a Senator, and, of course, without the committee approval, because I did not receive committee approval, and the committee was evenly divided on the question, while insertion of the item would require the approval of the majority of the committee, I have now made a motion to restore the item of $534,000. I wish first to say to my friend, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], with whom I have collaborated on the so-called economy committee for quite a while, and for whose views I have the highest respect, that I feel exceedingly interested in the reduction of Government expenditures. I feel very much the same on that subject as he does.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator from Tennessee has shown that repeatedly by his work, which has been magnificent.

Mr. MCKELLAR. I thank the Senator. But in this case one of the principal objections which was offered to the proposal to insert the item of $534,000 was that a bill was pending in the Senate which would establish another planning board to take the place of the National Resources Planning Board, which had been set up by Executive order, and that we ought to wait until action on that measure was taken.

Mr. President, if we are to wait until the Senate acts on legislation proposing to establish another planning board—and the proposed legislation may or may not be passed—I think we shall not be doing a very practical thing.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. MCKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. What was the prospective Senate body which was referred to in the argument just made by the Senator?

Mr. MCKELLAR. My recollection is that it was the Finance Committee.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I was wondering if the so-called George committee was referred to, which has been created to deal with post-war problems.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Perhaps it was. I believe it was the George committee rather than the Finance Committee. I probably was led into making that mistake because of the fact that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] is chairman of both committees.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That committee is in existence and is organized and has gone to work.

Mr. MCKELLAR. That may be true, but I am sure that, so far as the next year is concerned, the proposed legislation will not be passed in time for the contemplated committee to begin operations on the 1st of July, and I do not know what line it may take. It may conclude to follow along the lines now followed by the National Resources Planning Board.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should like to call the Senator's attention to a parallel in relative economic point of view. The George committee is undertaking its work on post-war planning with $50,000, and the National Resources Planning Board asks to have several million dollars.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Not several million dollars. I will tell the Senator exactly what amount is asked by the Board. I think the Budget estimate this year for the National Resources Planning Board was $1,400,000. Mr. President, we should be perfectly frank and fair about this matter. We should be economical in dealing with the situation. I wish to call the Senate's attention to what has been expended by the National Resources Planning Board. I think the Senate should have those figures.

Before doing so I wish to say that the Board was set up by law. It will be found on page 230 of the hearings on the independent offices appropriation bill for 1944 that the Board was set up under a law passed in the administration of President Hoover. In the spring of 1939 a point of order was made against this very kind of appropriation, an appropriation in that year for the National Resources Planning Board, and the Senate actually voted on that question. I do not know how the Vice President or Presiding Officer decided the question, but the question was submitted to the Senate, and the Senate held that the point of order was not well taken. The legislative authority for the Board is contained in the Federal Employment Stabilization Act of 1931, and is a joint resolution of June 7, 1939—Public Resolution 20, Seventy-sixth Congress.

A summary of the Board's legal history shows that that joint resolution approved and put into effect Reorganization Plan No. I, combining in the National Resources Planning Board the functions of the Employment Stabilization Office and those of the National Resources Committee.

So that there is legislative authority for the Planning Board. Under that legislative authority the following appropriations have been made for it: In 1934, $102,036; in 1935, $1,011,145; in 1936 and 1937, $1,823,258 for the 2 years; in 1938, $793,884.33; in 1939, $775,400; in 1940, $841,146; in 1941, $955,018; in 1942, $1,251,932; in 1943, $1,017,618.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. Does the Senator from Tennessee contend that the National Resources Planning Board was established by Congress?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes, indeed. It was established by the law of 1931, and the law of 1939 amending the previous law. That situation was brought out in the hearings.

Mr. BYRD. Established by that name? In 1931 the Federal Employment Stabilization Office was established.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true, and under that law a national planning board was established, and it operated until 1939, when, by joint resolution of June 7, 1939, several planning functions were combined. That joint resolution combined in the National Resources Planning Board the functions of the Employment Stabilization Office and those of the National Resources Committee.

Mr. BYRD. But the Congress has never established a National Resources Planning Board by that name.

Mr. McKELLAR. Probably not by that name. I cannot say.

Mr. BYRD. That is the way we establish an agency—by name, is it not?

Mr. McKELLAR. Ordinarily we do so, but Congress did not do it in this case. Congress established first the planning board of the Employment Stabilization Office, and then afterward the joint resolution combined that agency with the National Resources Committee, and gave it the sanction of law, and the Senate itself overruled a point of order raised on that question.

Mr. BYRD. I understand that, but the fact remains that the National Resources Planning Board, as such by that name, has never been authorized by Congress.

Mr. McKELLAR. The National Resources Planning Board by that name has not been established by Congress, but two acts of Congress established the two organizations which in 1939 took the name of the National Resources Planning Board.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator read a list of appropriations made commencing some years back.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. I tried to keep a reasonable count of them. They seemed to approximate more than $5,000,000.

Mr. McKELLER. I can tell the Senator the total in a moment.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, let me say that the total for the 9 years is $8,571,437.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senator.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to state what I am interested in. I listened to the remarks of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT]. I do not know what else there may be in the report in addition to the comments and the excerpts he read, but it seemed to be merely a lot of rhetoric. I should like to know what the Board has done with the $8,000,000 already appropriated which would justify a further appropriation in the expectation that the money will be so spent as to justify its expenditure.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the National Resources Board is a fact-finding commission. It has no authority except to find the facts and to suggest planning for future years.

Mr. TYDINGS. What planning has it suggested for future years, other than large appropriations, no taxes, and the American flag? [Laughter.]

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, I am not dealing in rhetoric or in language, but I am trying to deal with facts in submitting this matter.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. HILL. In reference to the very appropriate query of the Senator from Maryland, let me call the Senator's attention to the fact that the National Resources Planning Board has rendered and is rendering a very material service to many of our war agencies, as has been testified to in the hearings. In the hearings letters were presented from Donald Nelson and from the War Department. I think perhaps the Senator from Tennessee will refer to those letters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have a memorandum of them, and am going to refer to it.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am keeping an open mind on the proposition.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am glad the Senator is doing so; I want to convince him if I can.

Mr. TYDINGS. But up to the present time I have not heard any detailed information which in my judgment would warrant the continuance of the National Resources Planning Board. Assuming that the outline for the future is to be in line with the remarks we heard on the floor today, I should like to know how the objectives are to be accomplished, how they are to be paid; whether involving the building of bridges and roads and hospitals and what might be called postponed or delayed services, which it seems to me would be a worthy matter for our consideration, or whether it is proposed merely to run off at a tangent and promise everyone good wages and full employment, without any program to show how that is to be achieved. I should also like to know how it is to be paid for.

It seems to me there is room for a program in that field; but up to the present time I have not heard anyone detail it, and certainly no one has offered any method by which it can be financed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the actual building of roads, waterway improvements, highway improvements, and any other public improvements, of course, is not in the hands of the National Resources Planning Board. What the Board does is to furnish the information and make recommendations.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask the Senator to permit me to continue.

Mr. TYDINGS. I shall listen to the Senator, of course.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will do so, I shall be greatly obliged to him.

Mr. TYDINGS. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. What the National Resources Planning Board does is to furnish information to make recommendations, and to furnish plans and aids in helping the administrators of the Government properly to conduct such matters after the war is over, and even at the present time.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me there?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Up to the present time, what plan has the Board offered for the post-war period that is tangible and real and detailed?

Mr. McKELLAR. Let me say to the Senator that I have not read the last report. The report is very voluminous. I have been ill and recently have been exceedingly busy in connection with the matter of appropriations; and it has been impossible for me to read the report. So I cannot give the Senator the information, but I refer him to the report.

In the meantime I desire to give the Senator an illustration of the work of the Board. My distinguished friend the Senator from Louisiana, whom I love very dearly, asked a question awhile ago of the Senator from Ohio as to what the National Resources Planning Board had ever done for the War Department. I desire to read to the Senate a letter which will answer the question of the Senator from Maryland at the same time:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
HEADQUARTERS, SERVICES OF SUPPLY,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF TRANSPORTATION,
Washington, D. C., February 22, 1943.

MR. FREDERIC A. DELANO,
Chairman, National Resources Planning Board, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. DELANO: In view of the wartime shortages of transportation equipment, and particularly of rubber, the Transportation Corps of the War Department continues to be very seriously concerned over the problems of maintaining essential truck transportation service and war worker transportation, especially by private automobile and bus. It is my desire to express the appreciation I feel for the help which the National Resources Planning Board has been able to give the Highway Division during the past year in pointing out the nature of these difficult problems with which we were to be faced as the war progressed, and in helping me and my staff to formulate the ways and means by which the War Department could mitigate the seriousness of these problems.

Mr. President, I digress long enough in the reading of the letter to state that we all know that one of the most trying and one of the most difficult problems we have in our country today is that in connection with the transportation of our citizens and of war materials and of civilian supply materials.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Does the Senator think that the National Resources Board's report on transportation by automobile and bus has produced the present situation or has done anything to alleviate it?

Mr. McKELLAR. I think it has done a great deal to alleviate it, but I do not think it has had a particle to do with producing it. I think that situation has been brought about by the immense congregation of citizens in various parts of our country for war service and by the immense concentration of materials, both war materials and materials needed for the civilian population; and I think the work of the National Resources Planning Board has been greatly remunerative, as the author of the letter, the Army officer in charge of transportation, has to say.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. It seems to me that if the only thing to which the National Resources Planning Board can point is the maintaining of essential truck transportation service and war worker transportation by private automobile and bus, certainly that condemns it finally as any successful planning agency that can formulate plans.

Mr. McKELLAR. That might be so if there were only one thing to which it could point; but I have just started. The Senator took about an hour and a half to point out some difficulties in connection with the Board. I am just starting to show what the Board has done; and the letter I was reading is the first letter I have read. I shall give the Senator the facts about it.

Mr. TYDINGS. Before the Senator reads the letter, will he yield to me?

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask the Senator to excuse me for a moment, because the Senator from Ohio has asked me a very straightforward question, and I want to answer it.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not want the Senator to leave the letter.

Mr. McKELLAR. I had not intended to do so.

Mr. TYDINGS. Because what he has read thus far from the letter does not tell me anything that the National Resources Planning Board has actually done.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not understand language if the language does not indicate what has been done; I may not understand language. For instance, I shall read the letter again to the Senator:

It is my desire to express the appreciation I feel for the help which the National Resources Planning Board has been able to give the Highway Division during the past year in pointing out the nature of these difficult problems with which we were to be faced as the war progressed, and in helping me and my staff in formulating the ways and means by which the War Department could mitigate the seriousness of these problems.

Mr. President, I may not understand language; I may be so dense as to be unable to understand language; but the language I have just read has a very definite meaning to my mind.

I continue to read the letter:

It is probably fair to state that your analysis of the rubber situation and its effect on transportation, and your recommendations as to the action which should be taken, represented the most forward-looking thought on the subject which we are able to discover anywhere in Washington.

I may not understand language; but that statement makes a very direct impression on my mind.

Furthermore, I feel that with respect to transportation, the suggestions which you gave us as early as last winter were largely corroborated by the report of the Baruch committee.

If that is not aid, it is planning. The men who use that planning say that it has been very helpful in the war effort. Does that make no impression? If it does not, I am incapable of understanding language.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. The impression it makes on me is that it is simply a letter of general recommendation, couched in the most general terms, such as we sometimes address to appointive power to get a person a job, or to a pardoning board to secure the release of some one from the penitentiary.

Mr. McKELLAR. If it has as little effect as that, I do not think it is worth anything.

Mr. OVERTON. There is nothing specific about it. It is stated that the Board has aided in the rubber program. What it has done, I do not know. The writer of the letter does not undertake to say what was done.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. Let me answer one question at a time.

Mr. OVERTON. The question which I asked the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], to which question the Senator from Tennessee alluded, was asked with the purpose of determining something specific which the National Resources Planning Board had done for the War Department or for the Congress in enabling it to enact legislation. I wished to determine whether any of the members of the Board had appeared before a committee, or what the Board had done for any department or agency of the Government.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let me ask the Senator from Louisiana a question. Does he understand that the National Resources Planning Board is a planning board, or a work agency, to accomplish something specific? If he understands it to be a work agency of the Government, he may be correct. However, as I understand, the National Resources Planning Board does not do work on roads. It does not supervise highways. It does not build levees in the Senator's State or in my State. It does not build improvements on the Santee and Peedee Rivers in South Carolina. It does not build bridges in the State of Virginia. It does not build great Federal works, such as reclamation works, in the States of the West. It does planning, so that other organizations may do the work.

Mr. OVERTON. If I may answer the Senator's question, the Board is not a planning board. It is a receiving board. That is all it has done.

Mr. McKELLAR. I differ entirely with the Senator on that point. I think it has done very fine work. As I shall show, the work has been accepted by a number of departments. For example, the Board has the strongest support from the W. P. B., the War Manpower Commission, the State Department, the War Department, the O. P. A., the Interior Department, and agencies dealing with strategic services and public works.

The Board deals with public works. It not only undertakes to inform the people of the Nation with regard to public works, but it cooperates with the States, counties, and cities, including the cities and counties of Maryland and Louisiana. Boards in those States are in favor of cooperating with the National Resources Planning Board. If my dear friend from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] will consult the proper authorities in the State of Maryland he will find that the State authorities welcome the collaboration of the National Resources Planning Board. The same statement applies to Louisiana, Virginia, and my own State. I have received letters from officials of a great many States showing that the States are vitally interested in this matter. We have 3,000 counties. The cities and counties are vitally interested in the matter, and have received great help.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. Up to the present time it seems to me that my good friend from Tennessee is supporting his argument with a letter of recommendation rather than with concrete, specific evidence.

Mr. McKELLAR. I can understand how a Senator who is opposed to the National Resources Planning Board under any conditions or circumstances can look upon these letters as recommendations.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am not opposed to it.

Mr. McKELLAR. The fact is that these letters represent the views of departments and agencies of government. I think they should be given proper consideration. I do not think we should close our minds to them.

Mr. TYDINGS. What I had assumed the Board would do, and what I assumed, after listening to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], it was thinking of doing, was primarily to envision the conditions which will exist after the close of the war.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no. The Senator is misinformed.

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator will bear with me. I had assumed that the function of the National Resources Planning Board was to develop a program which would give, in broad outline at least, a suggestion of what we might do to meet that situation. I listened to the Senator from Ohio reading excerpts from the report. It promised every man a job at good wages when the war is over. It promised him a degree of contentment and said that the Bill of Rights had been outmoded and that the time had come to reestablish it on economic grounds.

After all those words were read I failed to find what the plan was to implement the program and achieve the great new world which we are entering.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I regret that the Senator's mind is so closed to the argument on this side that he will not listen to what is being said. He quotes the Senator from Ohio as saying that the National Resources Planning Board promised certain things to the people. I sat here listening during most of the time the Senator from Ohio was speaking, and I do not recall that he quoted any language which promised such things. If the Board is promising Tom, Dick, and Harry all over the country to do certain things for them, that is one thing. I do not believe that to be true.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is the way I understood it.

Mr. McKELLAR. That was the Senator's interpretation of what the Senator from Ohio said.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. The language on page 5 of the bill is:

Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used except for correlation and coordination of planning with State governments and with political subdivisions of such States.

My own State of South Dakota and quite a number of other States have abolished planning boards. Will the Senator explain how the National Resources Planning Board can be of any benefit to us?

Mr. McKELLAR. The counties and cities have a right to deal with the National Resources Planning Board, even though the State government does not want this service.

Mr. President, I am glad to have these interruptions, but I wish to finish reading the letter from the War Department. There are one or two other letters which I wish to read:

Although we have progressed a long way toward recognizing the essential nature of motor-vehicle transportation in the war effort, you know, as well as I do, that the problems involved in maintaining even the most essential truck and bus operations and in getting people to and from their work in private passenger cars will call for all the ingenuity which we transportation men can summon. I hope, therefore, that we can continue to count on your cooperation.

The letter is signed by Col. Frederick C. Horning, of the War Transportation Division.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I usually say what I wish to say and then quit. It is not my fault that I have occupied the floor for so long. It has been because of interruptions. I yield again to my good friend and neighbor from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is always very generous in yielding.

I was confused in finding my way through this labyrinth of words. I hold in my hand a pamphlet of the National Resources Planning Board entitled "After the War, Full Employment." There are some things in it which are more or less concrete. I wish to read from it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to know whether it bears the name of the National Resources Planning Board.

Mr. TYDINGS. On the cover appear the words "National Resources Planning Board. After the War—Full Employment."

If the Senator will bear with me for a moment——

Mr. McKELLAR. I have borne with the Senator not only once but many times, and I will bear with him again.

Mr. TYDINGS. I wish to show the Senator how his statement that they do analyze is substantiated by the facts, but what they do further after they analyze is a little hazy. Allow me to read to the Senate from this report. It deals with the public debt.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to have a copy of the report?

Mr. TYDINGS. This will be interesting to Senators, because it will relieve us of a very heavy load of trouble, worry, and responsibility. I am sorry that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] is not in his seat at the moment, because he would not need to worry about a new tax bill. It would not be necessary after he heard what I am about to read.

The public debt is something very different from the private debt of an individual.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, from what page is the Senator now reading?

Mr. TYDINGS. I am reading from near the bottom of page 7. The Senator has before him the lease-lend report. He does not have a copy of the document from which I am reading.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have asked for it a number of times. If the Secretary of the Senate is about, I wonder if he will procure for me a copy of the report from which the Senator from Maryland is reading.

Mr. TYDINGS. I will give the report to the Senator, but I should like first to have the Senator's attention while I read two paragraphs.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well.

Mr. TYDINGS. The part which I am about to read deals with the public debt. It states as follows:

The public debt is something very different from the private debt of an individual.

Of course, no one will question that.

An individual will always improve his asset position if he is able to pay off a part of his debt. But a nation may make itself poor by repayment of public debt.

Mr. President, we ought to call the conferees back and discharge them and have no tax bill at all, because what I have just read points the way to riches.

Let me continue.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I wish to say right there that I do not agree with the statement at all. [Laughter.] I do not know what the Senator was reading from, and I should like to verify it. If any officer of the Senate or the Presiding Officer will direct someone to get a copy of what the Senator was reading, I should appreciate it.

Mr. TYDINGS. It is a pamphlet entitled "National Resources Planning Board."

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, I know what is printed on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will be provided with a copy of the document.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Presiding Officer.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is in the same position I occupy. Frankly, we do not read all these reports. I have read a few of them. I wish to read this to the Senator, beginning with where I left off.

That is true because such repayment tends to cause deflation, depression, and unemployment. It is a good thing to pay off a part of the public debt if you want to check an excessive boom. It would be ruinous to pay off the public debt in post-defense period when unemployment was spreading.

A public debt internally held has none of the essential earmarks of the private debt of an individual. A public debt is an instrument of public policy. It is a means to control the magnitude of the national income and, in conjunction with the tax structure, to affect income distribution.

Mr. President, let us boil that down. I do not see a job in this for anybody, although the title is——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Maryland where he got the document from which he has read?

Mr. TYDINGS. It came from the Library of Congress, Government publications reading room. It is entitled, "After the War—Full Employment. Post-War Planning. January 1942. National Resources Planning Board." The membership of the Board is set forth. There is also a statement concerning the pamphlet.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Librarian tells me he does not have a copy of it. I wonder where it came from.

Mr. BYRD. The copy came to me as chairman of the committee of which the distinguished Senator from Tennessee is a valuable member.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator did not show it to me. I am sorry. He usually shows me important documents which come before the committee.

Mr. BYRD. It was in the possession of the committee and I turned it over to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I will be brief, because I do not want to transgress on the time of the Senator any further.

It is high time that such nonsense as that putting this Government overwhelmingly and almost irreparably in debt is a good thing for the Nation be ended once and for all. That debt is no better if the people do not intend to pay it off, than is any other debt which is not to be paid off. If it is to be paid off after the conclusion of the war the interest on it alone, will consume an amount equal to the total amount of taxes which this Government levied on its people from 1930 to 1940. At the rate of 2 percent the interest will consume $6,000,000,000 a year. That is more money than the Government raised on an average annually from 1930 to 1940. The interest on this debt must be paid, or it will not be worth 5 cents. To do that will require a revenue equivalent to all we raised from 1930 to 1940 on a yearly basis. In addition to that, we shall have to provide for all the consequences of the World War. This continual reiteration of the fallacy, of the sophistry, that a national debt is a blessing to the people, is an outrage foisted on their common sense, and an abuse of all the teachings of every sound and worth-while economist from Maine to California, and the teaching of every high school and college in America.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator has done what the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] did today. He has taken some kind of a document and referred to certain isolated items in it with which he does not agree. I am quite sure, from a hasty glance at it, that the most of it is entirely a proper comment to be made upon the situation as we find it at this time.

I am sure that the Senate will agree with me on that during the time I have been here no Member of the Senate has tried in a more practical, and in a more straightforward, way to reduce the expenses of Government than have I.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. Quite a number of Senators have done as well, perhaps some have done better, but I do not believe any Member has more consistently and courageously tried to reduce all expenditures of Government than have I.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I sit on the Committee on Appropriations with the Senator from Tennessee. He is chairman of many of the subcommittees of the committee, and I am glad to testify that no member of that committee is more judicious in his appraisal of estimates, and more desirous of saving money and not wasting it, than is the Senator who now has the floor. I am glad to pay him this deserved tribute.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR I will yield to the Senator in a moment. I thank the Senator from Maryland. I am trying to make an argument on the amendment which I have offered, and due to interruptions I am afraid my train of thought has not registered as it should.

Speaking of expenditures, I will give the Senate an illustration which all will understand. Last year I introduced two bills. One was to cut off the C. C. C., and the other was to repeal the provision or directive—whichever it was, I have forgotten now—creating the N. Y. A. I also considered cutting out the W. P. A., which I thought had served a good purpose, but had outlived its usefulness. All these matters came before the Committee on Appropriations, of which I am a member. I soon found that all three of the proposals could not be carried. I found that we could repeal the provision for the C. C. C. I pointed out on the floor of the Senate the reasons for so doing, and we repealed it at a saving to the Government of not quite a million dollars. I found that we would lose them all if we undertook to put them all through, and, therefore, I accepted a compromise on the N. Y. A., reducing the appropriation from $151,000,000 to $46,000,000, if I am correct in my recollection of the figures. That was done. Incidentally, I may say that the administration has transferred what was left of the N. Y. A. to the War Manpower Commission. It is my intention to vote against any appropriation for the N. Y. A. at the present session of Congress so as to carry out the purpose we then had in mind.

It was simply impossible last year, in the situation prevailing in the Senate, for us to repeal outright the W. P. A., but we did reduce the appropriation for it by about one-half, and it was entirely discontinued after the 1st of July by Presidential order. In that way we have gotten rid of the W. P. A., which had outlived its usefulness, the C. C. C., which had outlived its usefulness, and we have gotten rid of two-thirds of the N. Y. A., which has outlived its usefulness.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. I should like to say as chairman of the Joint Committee on the Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures I have served with the Senator from Tennessee, and there is no Member of the Senate who has rendered more valuable service for economy than he has. He occupied the position of acting chairman of the Appropriations Committee, and has done an astounding work. I have spent hours with him, and I have been simply amazed at times at his grasp of public affairs and the smallest details of appropriations. I desire to pay my tribute to him as having done as much as has any other Member of the Senate to reduce unnecessary expenditures. I am only regretful that I cannot agree with him in this instance.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senator, and I am sorry I cannot agree with him about the matter in controversy. Regarding that matter, let me say that the House struck the provision out entirely, and that almost immediately brought about an effort to establish another planning commission to do the same work that this Commission has done and is doing. I wish to say that if that is done, it makes no difference how carefully it may be done, the work has got to be administered by substantially the same people. We know that that will be done, but at a greater cost than $534,000.

Last year the appropriation was approximately $1,100,000. The amendment I have offered would cut it in half. In my judgment, it would be good sense and good economy to retain the present commission to do this collective work, which it is doing well and to the satisfaction of almost all the State organizations that have to join in doing it. As I recall, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] a little while ago made a speech in which he stated that he was Governor of Vermont when a part of this work was going on, and that it was exceedingly helpful and beneficial. I was glad to hear him say that, and I have no doubt that other Senators who were at that time governors of their States—I do not now remember the exact number—will say the same thing. I make that assertion because many State officials are now advising me that it will be very troublesome and hurtful to their States, to their communities throughout the country, unless this organization is retained.

I am not in favor of high salaries for this Commission; I am not in favor of the large organization they have; but it is proposed to cut it in two by this amendment. The subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee, I think almost unanimously, agreed to the amendment, and then in the full committee it subsequently was rejected by only a tie vote.

Senators, I never was more convinced in my life that it would be an economy measure to continue this Commission with an appropriation of $534,000 a year; it would be the greatest kind of economy; it would be very unwise and uneconomical to do away with it and set up some other board or commission to take its place. The present Commission has had experience; it has brought together an enormous amount of facts on which various counties and cities and States have acted with success and satisfaction. It has been represented to us by many Government agencies that they could hardly get along without it. I think it would be very unwise for the Senate to strike it down in an angry moment. If I may so express it. I do not mean anything offensive by the remark, for we all have moments when we want to hit something, to knock something out, and teach a lesson, but it is not always economy to do it. I am sure upon reflection it will be found that it would not be economical or to the best interests of the country to break this Commission entirely and set up another one in its place.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. HILL. In reference to the pamphlet to which the Senator from Maryland referred and from which he read, I want to call attention to the fact that the pamphlet does not constitute a report or a recommendation of the National Resources Planning Board. On the back of the flyleaf this statement appears:

> This statement on full employment was prepared for the Board by Dr. Alvin H. Hansen, Littauer professor of economics, Harvard University, and special economic adviser to the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.
> Prior to final printing, a pre-print edition was circulated to members of the Federal Reserve banks and to a group of businessmen, economists, and labor leaders for criticism and suggestions. Dr. Hansen has made numerous revisions in the text as the result of the many helpful comments which were received.

As the Senator says, it is possible to pick up what purports to be a profound treatise on an economic question and select one sentence or perhaps one paragraph which taken by itself may sound ludicrous; but this man evidently—I do not have the honor to be a Harvard graduate—must be a very distinguished economist. He is professor of economics at Harvard; he holds a particular professorship there, and is also special economic adviser to the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System. Before the pamphlet was ever printed it says on its face it was submitted to the different Federal Reserve banks, to leading businessmen, economists, and labor leaders, and their views and suggestions in large measure were incorporated in the pamphlet.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, as I said a little while ago, I have never read the pamphlet, indeed I never heard of it, it is something new to me. It is marked "Library of Congress Government Publications," but I am unable to find another copy of it. I have no doubt it is authentic, but I, myself, do not agree with the particular paragraph to which a while ago my distinguished friend from Maryland referred and read, causing laughter among Senators, which was proper. I do not suppose any of us could write a treatise on any subject of such magnitude and have all his fellows agree with him. It would be remarkable if they should. We would state something with which they did not agree. As kindly and as gentle a man as I am, I have not been able to get all Senators to agree with me, much as I do desire to have them agree, because I really think it is good sense, it is good economy, it is good legislation, it is good judgment, to continue this Board in part, as is suggested in the amendment reported first by the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, rather than to destroy the whole thing, and then have it set up under another name and have the same administration appoint the officers for it. That probably will be what will happen. I yield now to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Who proposes such a thing? No one in the Senate that I know of is proposing it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; a committee has been appointed, of which I think the able Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] has been made chairman, to formulate something of a planning nature for the period after the war.

Mr. BYRD. That has already been done.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; I do not think they have ever had hearings.

Mr. BYRD. But the committee has already been appointed.

Mr. McKELLAR. The committee has been appointed, but there have been no hearings up to date, as I understand, and of course, as Senators, we all know that it would be utterly impossible to make a report and pass a bill for such a purpose through the Senate, even more difficult to pass it through the House, between now and the first of July.

I yield now to the Senator from Georgia, as I ask him just what the name of the committee is to which we have been referring.

Mr. GEORGE. I merely wish to say to my distinguished friend from Tennessee that the committee which has been appointed is a Senate committee; it is not a joint congressional committee, merely a Senate committee. That committee will of course do all the work it possibly can with respect to all the economic planning that falls within its jurisdiction.

The difficulty about the National Resources Planning Board is that it is not a congressional board at all; it is purely executive. Congress has no real control over it; there is no regional representation on it, and if it had been created by act of Congress I should be here moving to amend the act so that there might be regional representation.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will allow me to suggest it, the Board was created by congregational act in 1931.

Mr. GEORGE. I think the Senator is altogether wrong.

Mr. McKELLAR. It was during Mr. Hoover's administration, as was testified before our committee. A point of order was overruled in the Senate against an appropriation for it, on the ground that the legislation did provide for it, and that legislation was amended by the act of 1939.

Mr. GEORGE. That may be so, in a way, certain functions which have been taken over by the Board may have had their origin in legislative acts, but the National Resources Planning Board is purely an executive agency, and Congress has no control of it, and no direction over it. It is not even regional, and to my mind it is indefensible to think of a planning board which is not at least regional, reflecting the interests of every area in the United States.

I wish to say about the Planning Board that it has made an effort, and I think a very praiseworthy effort, to overcome this situation; it has cooperated with the States, and with the State planning boards. I have no doubt it has furnished a great deal of assistance to the planning boards of the several States. I was, therefore, hopeful that the acting chairman of the committee might accept the action of the committee and provide an appropriation of $200,000, which, as I understand, would be limited to the cooperation of the Planning Board with the State agencies, so as to permit that function to continue.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say to the Senator and to the Senate that that could not be done, for the reason that the $200,000 which was requested would not be sufficient for cooperation with the various States. There are 48 States, and one District, and, in addition to that, there are a little more than 3,000 counties, and I cannot tell how many cities would use it. Besides that, there must be some provision made for the salaries of the officers. It would not be proper to establish a commission and require them to work for nothing, and spend the whole $200,000 with State officials. That would not be the kind of legislation this body should pass, or which any other legislative body should pass.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will permit me to conclude, I shall be glad to yield to him.

In the next place, I have tried to take care of the situation mentioned in the amendment I have offered, through a proviso that $300,000 of the money shall be expended in collaboration with the States.

I now yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. I was about to make the statement that if the appropriations were confined to such sums as the Board spent in collaboration with the State planning boards, it seems to me that when they had exhausted the $200,000, they could very well say, as any other Federal agency should say, "That is all the money we have to devote to that purpose."

I have been very closely associated with, and I have very greatly admired, for instance, the head of the planning board in my State, Hon. Henry G. McIntosh, a delightful, charming gentleman of exceptionally high character and purpose. I know he and his board have been doing a good job for the State, and that they have depended for assistance, perhaps financial assistance, and suggestion, upon the National Resources Planning Board. But when it comes to the National Resources Planning Board serving the country as a Federal agency, it has no congressional responsibility, except that it gets its money from the Congress, and the Congress has no control over it. It is in the unfortunate situation of existing under an Executive order, and the only chance we have to deal with it is through an appropriation bill. We cannot successfully offer amendments here; we cannot call for regional representation here; we cannot call for specific reports to the Congress here, because we are hampered by the fact that the whole thing is rooted in an Executive order, and general legislation on an appropriation bill is not in order, and it would be necessary to have a two-thirds vote in order to overcome that obstacle. It seems to me Congress should consider that condition, and concede, if you please, whatever virtue there is in the National Resources Planning Board. It simply should be organized on another basis.

It seems to me also that we should give some consideration to the fact that the House entirely eliminated the appropriation for the Board, and if $200,000 merely for the purpose of enabling it to continue operation with the States were appropriated, we should be satisfied with that.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. I am bothered by one question which the Senator from Tennessee may be able to answer. If we were to eliminate the entire committee amendment dealing with the National Resources Planning Board, would not the President have the power, at least under the second War Powers Act, to set up another board under a new name to perform exactly the same functions?

Mr. McKELLAR. Undoubtedly he would have such power.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I believe that technically the Senator from Tennessee is correct, but actually we put an amendment in an appropriation bill a few days ago providing that the President should not use his emergency fund for any purpose for which Congress had appropriated, or for which the Budget had estimated and for which Congress had failed to appropriate. Therefore, if provision for this Board shall be eliminated from the pending bill, and the amendment to which I have referred is kept in the other bill, it is questionable whether the President legally could set up such a board.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the President, by congressional legislation, is prohibited from setting up the Board, then such action might take precedence over the power the President now has. The question which the Senator from Connecticut asked me was: Would the President now have the right to set up such a board? I answered in the affirmative and I am sure I am correct in my answer.

Mr. DANAHER. I also am sure the Senator is correct. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. DANAHER. Having in mind the answer which has already been made by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] as a partial corrollary to what the Senator from Tennessee says; if we keep this board alive with any appropriation at all, then the President, under the War Powers Act, may assign to it whatever functions he chooses and expand or contract it as by Executive order he decrees; is that not so?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; not if the amendment is agreed to, because of the language on page 6 of the bill:

> The appropriation herein made for the National Resources Planning Board shall constitute the total amount to be available for obligation by such agency during the fiscal year 1944 and shall not be supplemented by funds from any source.

That is exactly what I wanted to call attention to. The Committee on Appropriations has not run wild about this matter. I cannot say that it ran wild when it voted 10 to 10 on a question. I cannot do so, and would not think of making such a suggestion. But we anticipated exactly the question which the Senator from Connecticut raises, and we provided against it by saying—as we ought to say in all cases—that the transfer of money from a separate fund to another activity, which, to my mind, is improper procedure, shall not be allowed. The Senator from Connecticut is exactly correct in his contention, but we have provided against such a thing by the very amendment proposed.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. As I understand, the restriction on the War Powers Act which was put in the recent bill by the Senate Appropriations Committee provides that the President may not use the funds at his disposal for the purpose of making money available to agencies for which the Congress has failed to make an appropriation. That restriction would apply in connection with this very appropriation. So, therefore, if we withhold the $200,000, in my humble judgment, the only way the President could get around that restriction would be to pare down or dissolve this Board, and set up another one with a new name. Perhaps he would do it that way. But if we fail to make the appropriation, if we turn it down, we shall have provided that the President shall not use the funds at his disposal to revitalize the Board.

Mr. McKELLAR. I simply wish to say to the Senator from Maryland and to other Senators, that the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations went into this matter as carefully as it ever went into any matter that came before it. It went into the question in the minutest detail. We endeavored to report a saving of more than half a million dollars in this one item of $1,110,000, which was the amount originally asked for. In the judgment of the members of the subcommittee, and in my judgment, it is infinitely better and more economical to give this reasonable amount to the National Resources Planning Board, and especially when $300,000 of it is to be used for the purpose of collaboration with State authorities, than to run the risk of having set up another agency, with its manifold costs and expenditures. We know that Congress has already given the Executive the power to do that very thing, and we cannot complain if he does it, after we have given him the authority to do it. I am quite confident that the plan which the committee has worked out to save over one-half million dollars in this item is the best plan.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from Tennessee, but I wish to ask one more question on this point: If the President had the power to set up such an organization by Executive order in the first place he certainly has the power to set up a similar organization tomorrow.

Mr. McKELLAR. Absolutely.

Mr. DANAHER. He can call it, if you choose, the Committee to Supersede the George Committee on Post-War Planning. He can call it anything he pleases to call it, and under the War Powers Act he can assign to it any functions he may desire.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me one moment?

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall yield to the Senator in a moment. I think the Senator from Connecticut is entirely correct. I now yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. TAFT. I question the basis of the Senator's statement. I do not believe the President had any right to assign to the National Resources Planning Board the power to do the things it has done. Not only that, but under the Overman Act he has no right to create a new function which has not been created by Congress. He cannot authorize a body to perform a function not authorized by Congress, nor can he transfer to some other body a function authorized by Congress to be performed by a particular body. So I should say that no authority existed, except as Congress, through appropriating money in the last 3 years, has by implication recognized the right of this Board to go on with its work. The only way this Board would have any authority to continue its work would be by Congress appropriating money for it.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut, because he wishes to continue along the line of a question he asked, but later I wish to add a little bit to what the Senator has said.

Mr. DANAHER. What I was about to say bears on the contribution made by the Senator from Ohio, because I am filled with consternation if his statement is accurate. I am wondering, for instance, what is the status of such an organization as the Board of Economic Warfare? Certainly Congress never created that Board. Not even the Treasury in its depleted state can appreciate the fact that the R. F. C. has drawn on it for the B. E. W. and its operations. There are additional instances which will occur to the nimble mind of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator could name not only a dozen but probably a score, or several score, of other organizations which have been set up under an act of Congress either shortly before or shortly after the war. Most of us were here then and many of us voted for legislation providing for such action. I do not remember whether the Senator from Ohio voted for it or not.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall yield in a moment. The fact remains, however, that we passed a law giving the Executive that authority, and he has used that authority, and up to date he is still using that authority.

I now yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, it is a perfectly extraordinary doctrine, to my mind, that the President of the United States, without legislative authority, can set up a new bureau to do anything he chooses to have it do. There is no such doctrine in constitutional law or statutory law. Take the Board of Economic Warfare. The President can issue export and import licenses. He is authorized to delegate that power to some assistant, and he has delegated it to the Board of Economic Warfare. But if there is no legislation authorizing post-war economic plans to be made, the President cannot authorize any board to do such planning which is not authorized by Congress, or to spend any Government money for that purpose.

Mr. McKELLAR. The trouble with the Senator from Ohio is that he is discussing post-war operations of the National Resources Planning Board. Its work is not confined to post-war operations. It is doing its work now, and all its operations are proceeding during the war, and we do not know how long the war will continue. We are certain it will continue more than another year.

I think the Senator from Ohio voted for the War Powers Act. Under the War Powers Act which we passed almost unanimously about the time the war broke out, we gave the Executive the power to set up all kinds of organizations, and he has set them up. He has carried out the will of Congress.

I think the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] is absolutely right in his contention that if we should eliminate the provision for the National Resources Planning Board, as the House did, the next day the President could set up an organization to take its place and appoint on it whomever he pleased. He could appoint everyone who is now a member of the National Resources Planning Board, and call it by a new name, and such action would go through without the slightest difficulty and probably without comment.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. If that be true, the restriction we wrote on the Executive's powers in the extraneous fields which we were discussing the other day in the Committee on Appropriations does not amount to a thing.

Mr. McKELLAR. It has not yet become law, and probably will not become law until the 1st of July.

Mr. TYDINGS. But the point is that in that amendment we provided that in cases in which Congress denies an appropriation of money to keep alive an executive function, the Executive shall not use the funds in his hands to revitalize or continue the function. In my opinion, the mere change of labels would not defeat the provision we wrote into the bill. I care not what in the world it may be called; it would still be a planning function.

The point here is whether or not, if we take away the appropriation, the Board will continue to function. If the bill, when passed, incorporates the committee's thought about the appropriation—that is, if the legislative bodies deny the appropriation for the organization—the organization is just as dead as Hector's goat. [Laughter.]

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Tennessee for yielding to me. Also I want the RECORD to show that nothing is to be construed as expressing opposition by me to the committee amendment. I simply wish to have it made clear that I do not share the confusion of those who say the President cannot do something, when we all know he is doing it. I merely want that to be perfectly apparent.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. In connection with the authority which is alleged to exist—and I think that claim is the most extraordinary legal claim I have heard advanced in the Senate since I have been Member of it—it is said that it is based on the First War Powers Act. That act is express in saying that the President is authorized to make such redistribution of functions among the other executive agencies as he shall deem necessary. It says nothing about creating any new duties. It says the money shall be expended only for the purpose for which it was appropriated, under the direction of such other agencies as may be directed by the President to perform and execute the functions authorized to be performed.

Under that authority the President has no power to do anything he pleases. Unless the Congress has authorized the work and has conferred upon some department of the Government the power to perform it, the President can not legally exercise such power. It seems to me a fair inference that unless the President has been authorized to spend money in order to have some agency do the things the Board is doing, there is no authority for the Board to do the things it is doing today.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Congress has passed that law. The law is interpreted as giving the President that power. In probably between 50 and 100 acts, at least, passed since that time, Congress has ratified the President's conception of his powers under that act, by appropriating money with which to carry out what the President has done.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator is referring to what?

Mr. McKELLAR. To the War Powers Act.

Mr. TAFT. I do not think the President has ever interpreted the War Powers Act as giving him any power not expressly conferred by some other act, insofar as the redistribution of functions is concerned.

Mr. McKELLAR. How did he happen to appoint the Board of Economic Warfare?

Mr. TAFT. The Board of Economic Warfare is exercising powers as his agent, in connection with the powers we conferred to control exports and imports into the United States.

Mr. McKELLAR. To my mind, the distinction the Senator has made is without legal justification.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall yield in a moment. I do not know how long the Senator from Maryland will be here. He kept me from reading a portion of the celebrated boomerang from which he read awhile ago. With the language he read, I do not agree, as I said then, any more than he does. But what he read is not all the language. On page 2 I happened to run across a brief statement with which I do agree. It is as follows:

Everywhere one hears it said—

Says the pamphlet by Mr. Hansen—that, when this war is over, all countries, including our own, will be impoverished.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, what difference would that make if the national debt does not make any difference?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I yielded to the Senator so that he might read the language he wished to read; and I should like him to permit me to read more of the language now, so that other Members of the Senate may hear it.

Mr. TYDINGS. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall read the language again:

Everywhere one hears it said that, when this war is over, all countries, including our own, will be impoverished. This view is, however, not sustained by past experience.

These people have been investigating.

No country need be impoverished if its productive resources (both capital and human) are intact. The productive resources of this country will be on a considerably higher plane when the war is over than ever before. A larger proportion of our population will be trained to perform skilled and semiskilled jobs.

We all know that to be true.

We shall have enormous productive capacities in all the machine industries.

We all know that to be true.

And in special consumers' durable industries, where plant and equipment may have become deficient by reason of the war, we shall be able very quickly, with our large basic machine-producing industries, to expand to meet the peacetime requirements.

We all know that to be true, if the program is properly handled.

We shall have, when the war is over, the technical equipment, the trained and efficient labor, and the natural resources required to produce a substantially higher real income for civilian needs than any ever achieved before in our history.

That is a subject on which it is possible to have a difference of opinion; but I have in mind that that statement is true.

I read further from the pamphlet:

Whether or not we shall, in fact, achieve that level of income will depend upon our intelligence and capacity for cooperative action.

We have to make up our minds as a Nation that we will not permit a post-war depression to overwhelm us.

That is good sense; it is as good sense as the isolated item the Senator from Maryland read awhile ago is bad sense. So we cannot pick out a few words in a program of this sort and judge the whole thing by it.

I read further from the pamphlet:

We do not have to take economic defeat after the military victory is won.

We all agree to that; we all agree that that can be done if the program is properly managed.

We can, if we will, maintain business prosperity. We can sustain a continuing demand for goods. We can keep industry going at high levels. We can maintain substantially full employment. We can achieve a society in which everyone capable of and willing to work can find an opportunity to earn a living, to make his contribution, to play his part as a citizen of a progressive, democratic country.

An important gain will, we may hope, be won from the defense program in the struggle to achieve and to maintain full employment.

Mr. President, none of that is communistic. It is not even socialistic. It is common, practical business sense, and I endorse every word I have read.

I have not read more than two or three pages of the pamphlet; there may be other items just as strong as the one I have just now read. Obviously, the item the Senator from Maryland read cannot be taken as indicating the nature of the entire pamphlet. I hope the Senate will not be misled into voting to reject this appropriation simply because of a misstatement of opinion which was indulged in at some time.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator has proved my point by what he has read.

Mr. McKELLAR. If I proved the point of the Senator from Maryland by what I just read, I am the worst ignoramus I ever heard of. [Laughter.]

In my younger days I have looked into the mirror to see what sort of looking man I was. I have not done so very much recently because I am getting along in years, and I am too old to look into the mirror. However, if that language sustains the first proposition announced by the Senator, then I am wholly ignorant of what language means.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not believe that the privilege of committing senatorial hara-kiri has ever been extended promiscuously. At any rate, I should not want to put the Senator in that position. However, he proves my original statement that there is nothing but New Year's resolutions in what he has read, without anything to show how they are to be attained. That is a Fourth of July oration which I have been delivering for the past 25 years, and which the Senator has been delivering.

Mr. McKELLAR. So the Senator has delivered this as an oration heretofore?

Mr. TYDINGS. Certainly. It is propaganda. It is a speech. There is no plan in it. It is a program of large appropriations, no taxes, and the American flag.

Mr. McKELLAR. I did not see the Senator's name on this pamphlet. I did not know that this was the speech which he has been delivering for the past 25 years. I am astonished to learn that. However, it has good sense in it, notwithstanding the particular provision which he has read.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to invite the Senator's attention to page 5, line 24, of the bill, where the word "correlation" occurs. The language is:

Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used except for correlation and coordination of planning with State governments and with political subdivisions of such States.

Two questions suggest themselves to me in that connection. In the first place, what is the difference between correlation and coordination? We hear a great deal about coordination these days. Usually it means that if I coordinate you, you do what I say. I do not know what the difference is between correlation and coordination. I do not know why it is necessary to have a provision of this kind when it comes to planning, because we may plan for a State government to have $1,000,000,000 of Federal funds spent in the State, but if nothing is done about it, it still remains planning.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is the reason why I obtained unanimous consent of the Senate, about 4 hours ago, to strike out that part, and offered an amendment to strike it out.

Mr. LODGE. Was that amendment agreed to?

Mr. McKELLAR. It has not yet been agreed to. The Senator can vote to strike it out and insert other language. If by accident I have left the word "correlation" in it, I shall be very happy to strike it out, at the Senator's request.

Mr. President, this document intrigues me. Every time I am interrupted I cast my eye on the celebrated document entitled "After the War, Full Employment." The Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] says that he has been making this speech for many years. I wish to read again from page 4:

When the war is over the Government cannot just disband the Army, close down munitions factories, stop building ships, and remove all economic controls. We want an orderly program of demobilization and reconstruction.

Does any one doubt that?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. Just a moment. Every one of us endorses with all his heart the language of the distinguished Senator from Maryland when he penned those lines. I endorse it entirely, and I think everyone else endorses it.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think the Board ought to be called The Board of Political Textbooks of a Certain Strain rather than the National Resources Planning Board.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is now talking about the Board. I am talking about the speech which the Senator has been making for years before the people of Maryland and elsewhere.

Mr. TYDINGS. It has also been made in Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. And in Tennessee. Listen to this:

We want an orderly program of demobilization and reconstruction. The Government cannot escape responsibility.

We all know that to be true. We could not escape it if we were to try. I doubt if anyone would try very hard to escape this responsibility.

To fulfill its responsibility it needs the hearty cooperation—

Of what? Listen to this. I am speaking to men who are interested in business. We are all interested in business.

To fulfill its responsibility it—needs the hearty cooperation of business, labor, farmers, and the professions in the great task of developing a vigorous, expanding, and prosperous society.

The Government—

Can anyone object to that?

Mr. LODGE rose.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator from Massachusetts object to it?

Mr. LODGE. I do not object to it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am sure that the Senator from Massachusetts will uphold the Senator from Maryland in his speech on that subject.

To fulfill its responsibility it needs the hearty cooperation of business, labor, farmers, and the professions in the great task of developing a vigorous, expanding, and prosperous society.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. Those are worthy sentiments. If all we needed to solve our problems were sentiments as well expressed as these, all our problems would have been solved long ago. Unfortunately, some of us believe that there is a great deal more expression of worthy sentiments than there is of ability to carry them into effect.

I ask the Senator from Tennessee to go back to the amendment relating to correlation and coordination. I have found his proposed amendment, which, except for the fact that the $300,000 provision is in it, retains the same language. It says:

Provided further, that of this appropriation not less than $300,000 shall be used for correlation and coordination of planning with State governments and with political subdivisions of such States.

I believe the definitions of those words ought to be made clear, because frankly, they do not convey a clear meaning to me.

Mr. McKELLAR. Perhaps the Senator is correct; but I do not believe that Congress ever undertakes, in legislation, to make clear or define the terms it uses. I do not recall ever having seen that kind of legislation.

Let me say that in order to meet the objection of the Senator from Massachusetts I shall strike out the words "correlation and." I will perfect my amendment by striking out the words "correlation and" so as to read "coordination of planning" and so forth.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator says that in Congress it is not customary to make one's meaning clear. I appreciate his having made that contribution.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Supplementing what the Senator has just finished reading, let me say that usually in such addresses we add "And in order to eliminate war, nations must live peaceably together."

That ought to go in somewhere.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am sorry it is not there. However, that is outside the functions of the Appropriations Committee, and we cannot very well put it in.

Mr. TYDINGS. I mean it should be in what the Senator was reading from the pamphlet.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know that the Senator is very proud of the speech which he has been making for such a long time; but I am not willing to have it enacted into law.

Mr. TYDINGS. War can be eliminated only by nations living peaceably together. I think the Board should have discovered that fact. It is an outrage that the Board permits war to continue without commenting on it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know that the Senator feels outraged at the Board, and I regret it. I tbink he is mistaken.

Mr. President, I believe that the amendment which I have offered ought to be adopted and taken to conference, and that it should be discussed in conference.

That is about all I wish to say at this time. I hope we may have a vote as soon as possible.

I am reminded of something said by one of the greatest Senators ever to sit in this body. Away back yonder, many years ago, when I was a youngster here, Hon. James A. Reed, the distinguished Senator from Missouri, one of the brainiest men I ever knew, and one of the grandest characters I ever knew, one of the most eloquent men, and one of the greatest debaters I ever knew, occupied the seat I am now occupying, while I occupied the seat now occupied by the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

Senator Reed once made a speech lasting 3 hours. When he had concluded, he turned to me and said, "McKELLAR, everything has been said on this subject that can be said. Circulate among the boys, and let us have a vote now." [Laughter.] I am somewhat in that attitude, I know, but I am sure the Senate will acquit me of having used too much time because I have been interrupted so often. I apologize to the Senate for taking so much time. I should like to have a vote upon the amendment as soon as possible.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], as modified, to the committee amendment, beginning on page 4, line 23.

Mr. McKELLAR, Mr. McNARY, and Mr. TAFT asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McNARY obtained the floor.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. McNARY. I do not yield for that purpose.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Chair state the parliamentary situation?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I do not yield for that purpose. I wish to occupy the floor for only 45 seconds.

During the discussion of the pending amendment reference has been made to the state of mind of the members of the National Resources Planning Board. Today I received a letter from the distinguished chairman of the Board, Mr. Delano, who sets forth his views and historical references to a pamphlet which has been read here. I ask unanimous consent, in all fairness, that the letter be read by the clerk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

NATIONAL RESOURCES PLANNING BOARD,
Washington, D. C., May 26, 1943.

Hon. CHARLES L. McNARY,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR McNARY: Two or three days ago I had occasion to read a speech made by Senator TAFT in which he made some pretty devastating statements in regard to the report of the National Resources Planning Board. I wrote him on May 20 pointing out that the statements he made were inaccurate and that he was doubtless misled by a recent little booklet published by Dr. H. G. Moulton entitled "The New Philosophy of Public Debt."

Since then I have read Dr. Moulton's book with care and compared it with various statements in our report. It is true that as a Board we have studied various economic theories held by various students in Sweden, Great Britain, Germany, and in our own country. We have published a number of pamphlets prepared by Dr. Alvin H. Hansen, who has explored these questions quite fully, but we have been very careful not to commit ourselves to any extreme statements. What we are interested in is to try to explain the views of men who have studied the problem. It seems to me that Dr. Moulton has been unfair to us in blaming us for opinions expressed, for example, by Dr. Hansen sometimes in pamphlets addressed to us and sometimes in articles which he has written for distribution.

Mr. Beardsley Ruml, one of the Board's consultants, recently said in New York, "Dr. Moulton's reference to the Board is an uninformed misstatement of the Board's recommendations."

It is the policy of the Board, and in that the Board merely accepts the policy which this country has adhered to from the beginning, that there are conditions in which public expenditures must exceed the revenues, and deficit financing must be resorted to. The present war provides one of those conditions, and no one would deny the appropriateness of deficit financing at this time. This is far from saying that continuous deficit financing is either necessary or proper, for the Board neither advocates nor believes in such a policy. Quite the contrary, there are times when the revenues of government should exceed expenditures—sometimes by wide margins. It is possible that shortly after the end of this war conditions will develop wherein the tendency to inflation will have to be controlled by collections in excess of expenditures and sharp reduction in debt.

One of the statements quoted by Dr. Moulton in itself states this position. It is as follows: "* * * Whether taxes should equal, fall short of, or exceed expenditures must be decided according to economic conditions" (p. 17 National Resources Development—1942 Report NRPB).

You may be interested to know that I served for upwards of a year as president of the Stable Money Association. I was asked to serve by such men as Senator Root and Mr. Dwight Morrow, and they each contributed considerable funds to the investigation. Altogether, I think there was $70,000 contributed for the conduct of the investigation by men who were not convinced of the solution of the problem but who believed that it was one worth studying. One of the things we did was to invite Dr. Schacht of Berlin to come to New York and address the association. We held a meeting at which he was the principal speaker, and there were, as I recall, 125 to 150 prominent men present. This, you may truly say, is ancient history, but it is perhaps worthy of consideration.

Speaking for myself (and I think also for my colleagues), I do not believe in continuing an uncontrolled deficit spending, and I do not think that deficit spending is the cure-all. Sometimes I believe it to be absolutely essential, but I do not for a moment believe that we are ever justified in spending money wastefully or unwisely. As you very well know, banks are very proud of boasting about their gross deposits, although they must also realize that deposits are debts or liabilities. However, that does not mean that a bank can spend its deposits recklessly. The success of a bank depends upon its reputation for intelligent use of its funds and its reputation over a period of years will depend upon the wisdom of its investments; and this, it seems to me is equally true of the Federal Government.

I feel that Dr. Moulton's book is false in detail and deliberately misleading in purpose.

Sincerely yours,

FREDERIC A. DELANO,
Chairman.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, since Mr. Delano has referred to my statement as an excuse for the letter which has just been read, I think that I should point out that, in the first place, I received a similar letter from him which I put in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, and which was almost word for word the same as the letter which has been read. In the second place, inasmuch as he has made an attack upon Dr. Moulton, I think something should be said about Dr. Moulton.

Dr. Moulton is a leading economist of the Brookings Institution, which is probably the soundest and most reliable research economic organization in the United States today. Dr. Moulton's statements are not misleading. He has stated absolutely the exact facts. He has quoted from the Board itself. Incidentally, the suggestion by Mr. Delano that he is not responsible for Mr. Hansen's theories is wholly met by statements in the report. After all, the plans which the Board has in mind for having the Government guarantee and underwrite certain rights, which I estimate will cost about $50,000,000,000 a year, are supported and explained in the report.

The previous publications of the Board include "After Defense—What?" That is the one from which I read. Another is, "After the War—Full Employment." That is the Hansen document which was referred to by the Senator from Tennessee, dealing with post-war planning, and so forth. It also provides background for this proposal. In other words, the Board published Mr. Hansen's document and adopted it. They cannot say they are not responsible for propagandizing Mr. Hansen's views. Furthermore, their own report goes just exactly as far. The quotation from the pamphlet, which is clearly theirs, and written by no one else, is as follows:

When we organize for maximum production on the basis of full employment, without being stopped by the costs we have discovered, as have other nations, that increased production pays the real costs involved. Doing the job pays the bill.

In other words, it does not make any difference how much you spend, because doing the job pays the bill. The Government debt amounts to nothing.

Mr. Delano is an estimable gentleman. I can only conclude that he simply has not read the reports written by subordinates. He does not understand the necessary implication of the things which are set forth in those reports.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I desire to have printed in the Record at this point as a part of my remarks a release by the National Resources Planning Board. It pays a compliment to the statement made by Dr. Moulton.

In addition to the release, I ask permission to have inserted a very short statement from a publication entitled "National Resources Development Report for 1943." The statement referred to is on page 13 and is under the title "Plans for Finances and Fiscal Policies."

Third, I will ask to have printed in the RECORD at this point a very brief statement from a publication entitled "Post-War Planning" and published by Steel, which is a magazine current throughout the country. The statement I have in mind is found on page 6.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCFARLAND in the chair). Without objection, the excerpts will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Beardsley Ruml, treasurer of R. H. Macy & Co. and adviser of the National Resources Planning Board, in the course of remarks on Business Organizations Look Ahead, made today before the American Association of Planning Officials, stated, "Dr. Harold G. Moulton, president of the Brookings Institution, writes in his book, New Philosophy of Public Debt, that the National Resources Planning Board advocates a new conception that continuous deficit spending is essential to the economic prosperity of the Nation.

"Dr. Moulton's reference to the Board is an uninformed misstatement of the Board's recommendations on fiscal policies. These are clearly set forth on page 13 of part 1 of its recent report for 1943, in part, as follows:

"'It is our national policy (as it has been since the beginning of our history) to accept as a suitable role of government, positive effort to foster and encourage the free activities of private individuals and agencies in advancing their well-being through productive enterprise.

"'Accordingly the fiscal and monetary policies of the Federal Government should be conceived and administered to complement and supplement these activities of private enterprise in the maintenance of adequate effective demand.'"

[From National Resources Development Report for 1943]

B. Plans for finance and fiscal policies. It is our national policy (as it has been since the beginning of our history) to accept as a suitable role of government positive effort to foster and encourage the free activities of private individuals and agencies in advancing their well-being through productive enterprise.

Accordingly, the fiscal and monetary policies of the Federal Government should be conceived and administered to complement and supplement these activities of private enterprise in the maintenance of adequate effective demand.

[From Steel]

The National Resources Planning Board may be mentioned first, for the reason that it is a part of the White House staff. It dates back before the Roosevelt administration, its original ancestor having been President Hoover's Social Trend Committee. Since then its name and status have been changed a number of times. In 1939 it was set up as now organized, the former Employment Stabilization Office being merged with it.

As now constituted, it is a long-range planning body that makes studies and reports directly to President Roosevelt. It has three divisions, one responsible for economic studies and reporting on trends of income, employment, and business activity; another responsible for physical resources such as land, water, energy, and special studies in the field of transportation and industrial problems; the third is responsible for public works plans and programs. The term "energy" as used above, covers coal, waterpower, and electric current.

The Board has issued more than 100 reports which deal not only with post-war planning but which are used currently in studies intended to stimulate war production. The Board also is studying actively the post-war utilization of the new war plants, also the future of the aviation industry. It is studying health and education plans. The board is planning soon to launch studies on various other significant subjects, such as peacetime products, technological improvements in products, and post-war distribution of civilian goods.

The studies of the National Resources Planning Board definitely are not—as so many have feared—aimed at regimenting the American economy. Originally, its aim was to find the causes of sore spots in our economy. Then, in November of 1940, when we had started on all-out conversion to war production, the Board was instructed to look into post-war problems. As will be shown later, it has covered a lot of ground in establishing a proposed framework for the post-war economy.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I rise to seek information as the result of the letter which was submitted by the able minority leader and just read by the clerk. As I recall, there was a man by the name of Ruml mentioned in that letter, and I am wondering who he is, if the Senator will tell me, and what part he played in connection with this report. I am honestly seeking information. As I recall, the name "Ruml" appears in the letter and I am wondering who he is.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I always admire the facetiousness of the distinguished Senator from Illinois. The letter was sent to me today by Mr. Delano. It does refer to Mr. Ruml, who is famous for the Ruml plan.

Treating the matter seriously, I ask that the clerk read the paragraph referring to what Mr. Ruml says.

Mr. LUCAS. May I inquire whether or not Mr. Ruml is a member of the board at the present time, or has any connection with it?

Mr. McNARY. I do not know about the history of the transaction. I only know that his name is used in the letter.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. Can the Senator from Alabama tell me?

Mr. HILL. Yes, I will say that Dr. Beardsley Ruml, whose name we have heard so much and whose name has attained so much prominence in this country in recent months, is one of the chief advisers of the National Resources Planning Board. The fact is there are two chief advisers but the No. 1 of the two is Dr. Beardsley Ruml, the author of the Ruml tax plan. I may say about the advisers to the Board that, according to the testimony, Dr. Ruml sits in with the Board at its different meetings. He is an adviser to the extent that he is even paid a certain per diem and an amount for his services, and, according to the testimony before the committee, of all the advisers Dr. Ruml evidently rendered more advice last year than any other adviser, because he received the largest sum of money.

Mr. LUCAS. Is he the same Dr. Ruml whose tax plan in modified form a group of Democrats joined with Republicans in attempting to work out a few days ago?

Mr. HILL. Exactly.

Mr. LUCAS. Now, I understand that the same Ruml is chief adviser to the Board?

Mr. HILL The Senator is exactly right; and just as certain Democrats joined with a number of Republicans to put through the Ruml tax plan, certain of us Democrats are hoping that certain Republicans will join with us to carry out Dr. Ruml's views, which views, of course, strongly recommend the continuance of the National Resources Planning Board and its work.

Mr. LUCAS. Am I correct in my understanding that one time Dr. Ruml was an actual member of the Board?

Mr. HILL. No, he was never an actual member of the Board. What happened was that one member of the Board, Mr. Yantis, as I recall his name, left the Board, and at that time they brought Dr. Ruml in, not as a member of the Board but as chief adviser of the Board, and he has been chief adviser for some years, and is still chief adviser.

Mr. LUCAS. That is very illuminating to me. May I ask one other question?

Mr. HILL. Certainly.

Mr. LUCAS. Who is the other member who is adviser to the Board? I should like to know who he is.

Mr. HILL. I will give the name to the Senator in a moment.

Mr. TAFT. His name is Henry S. Dennison.

Mr. LUCAS. May I ask what his background is? I know something about Mr. Ruml, but I am very anxious to know about Mr. Dennison, to learn whether he is a long-haired professor or a businessman.

Mr. HILL. I cannot tell the Senator as to that. The record shows that Mr. Henry S. Dennison is from the great State of Massachusetts.

Mr. LUCAS. Perhaps the Senator from Massachusetts can tell me something about Mr. Dennison.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Dennison is a distinguished manufacturer and citizen of Massachusetts.

Mr. LUCAS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. That he has had much to do with the formulation of this report, I very much question.

Mr. LUCAS. I am very happy to know that there are two businessmen connected with this Board, Mr. Ruml and Mr. Dennison, because the general impression throughout the country is that there is a group of socialistic, communistic professors on the Board who are attempting to reshape the world through this particular Board, and it is very encouraging, and I am very happy to learn, that two men who are the chief advisers to the Board are big businessmen who have plenty of money on tap.

Mr. HILL. I will say to the Senator that he will find further that the evidence before the committee showed that not only does the Board have these two big businessmen, Dr. Ruml and Mr. Dennison, as its chief advisers, but that at its meetings the Board calls in businessmen of all kinds, big businessmen and businessmen who are perhaps not so big, to confer with the Board, to counsel with the Board, and to advise the Board. The Board has drawn very heavily upon the wisdom, the experience, and the advice of the business leadership of this country.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. In view of what the Senator has just stated, I should think that our troubles are pretty well behind us. It is certainly reassuring to me to know that with Mr. Ruml and Mr. Dennison and Mr. Delano and the others, the difficulties are to be brushed aside and the passageway is to be illuminated and down at the end are health, wealth, and prosperity for all of us. What a picture!

Mr. HILL. I wish I could share the Senator's ludicrous optimism, but that does not happen to be the way of this world. It might be the way of the world of Alice in Wonderland but not the way of the world in which we live today. There never was a time, I will say, when the services of this Board were needed so badly as they are at this particular juncture. Many problems will arise from the war situation. When the war closes some 18,000,000 people will be out of jobs. They will need employment and work will have to be found for them. Eight million of them will come out of the armed forces, 10,000,000 of them will come out of war industries.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President——

Mr. HILL. I wish to say one other thing, and then I shall yield to the Senator from Washington.

Forty percent of the capital invested in the war industries is capital invested by the Government; 40 percent of our war industries, the plants, the facilities, the physical properties are owned by the Government of the United States. One of the greatest problems we shall have to face when the war is over will be the problem of making wise disposition of this property so as not to interfere with or harm our American private enterprise system. Many cities and communities in this country will be sorely disrupted. As we all know, because of the war program many of them have had a mushroom growth during the war, due to the installation of manufacturing plants or military camps or some other war activity within the confines of the communities. Such communities will need plans, help, and guidance. We shall confront the problem of the release of economic control. We shall have to know something about the employment situation, about income, about the standards of living, about the many factors which will have to be considered and weighed in determining how rapidly we can release economic controls.

Mr. President, I have before me a number of excerpts from letters which have come from State planning commissions, from county planning boards, and from municipal and city planning boards. It had been my intention to read from some of these excerpts in order that the Senate might know what work this National Board has done, and that it might know how the different planning boards in our States, counties, and cities are looking toward the National Resources Planning Board for help, service, and guidance in the postwar problems.

The distinguished acting chairman of the committee, the Senator from Tennessee, the author of the amendment, is very anxious to have a vote on the amendment, and we are anxious to finish the consideration of the bill this afternoon. We have been considering the bill now for nearly 5 hours, and I shall not take the time of the Senate to read the excerpts, but I say to my colleagues that a majority of the States, through some kind of a planning board, some sort of State representation, have spoken on the question of the continuance of the National Resources Planning Board, and they all have expressed themselves as being in favor of its continuance. Many of these statements are most laudatory; they praise in the highest terms the help they have received from the Board and state the needs with which they are confronted, which make it so essential that the Board be continued in operation.

The Senator from Tennessee earlier in the day quoted from different Government agencies in Washington, those mainly responsible for the carrying on of the war effort, testifying to the splendid work and the valuable services the Planning Board has rendered those agencies.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the excerpts from these State, city, and county planning boards as to the work of the National Resources Planning Board, and the need for the continuance of the Board and its work.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the excerpts were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Telegram from Gov. C. A. Bottolfsen, of Idaho, February 24, 1943:

"The Idaho Legislature has reestablished State planning board with appropriation to study war emergency problems to be met in shift from wartime to peacetime. During past years cooperation and assistance given by National Resources Board to Idaho has been of great value and in carrying forward new program we would appreciate your cooperation and technical assistance."

Letter from Gov. Chase A. Clark, of Idaho, September 21, 1942, requesting National Resources Planning Board assistance for planning project:

"I am writing you about ways and means of advancing the efforts of the communities in northern Idaho, particularly in the Coeur d'Alene-Sandpoint-Spokane triangle area, to meet the problem of providing additional housing, transportation, health protection, schools, and other accommodations made necessary on account of the heavy inmigration of war industry workers and military personnel in that area. Also the need to prepare now for the war impacts yet to come and the post-war adjustments to follow.

"You are, I know, well aware of the serious situation prevailing in that region and of the lack of coordinated effort among the local, State, and Federal agencies in meeting it. I believe the problem is regional in character, consequently I should greatly appreciate it if you, as chairman of the Pacific Northwest Planning Commission, would consider providing through the National Resources Planning Board the advisory and coordinating direction so greatly needed now in making a quick appraisal of the problems involved and in outlining a program of action. * * *"

Resolution of Southeastern Regional Planning Commission (two members each from North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, and Tennessee, appointed by Governors), February 22, 1943:

Expressing "The appreciation of this commission for the splendid cooperation it has received from the National Resources Planning Board, without which we could never have made our comprehensive studies and gathered the valuable data which will be shown in the Commission's forthcoming report. We, therefore, urge upon our representatives in Congress the continuation of the National Resources Planning Board as an agency of Government, and that it receive a congressional appropriation adequate for its reasonable use."

Excerpt from letter from L. F. Eppich, president, the Denver (Colo.) Planning Commission, February 9, 1943:

"The National Resources Planning Board has been of great assistance to Denver through its stimulus of a coordinated planning operation here. Last August it organized a meeting of various planning groups in the Denver region, including Federal, State, and local organizations. As a result of this meeting there was created what is known as the Denver Metropolitan Planning Project to which the Planning Board through its regional office here in Denver assigned a number of consulting experts. These men have worked closely with all agencies in the preparation of important analytical investigations. In addition, the Planning Board is assisting the city of Denver by providing the much needed services of a public works program analyst in the preparation of a fiscal plan correlated with a public works plan.

"We are highly satisfied with the progress that is being made and feel impelled to express the appreciation of the Denver Planning Commission for the splendid work which the Planning Board is doing. This opinion is shared by Mayor Stapleton and the city council who are equally interested in these post-war plans."

Action of the Corpus Christi Planning Commission as reported in the Corpus Christi Caller, February 13, 1943:

"* * * The (Corpus Christi Planning) commission also went on record favoring a continuation of the work of the National Resources Planning Board. A subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee earlier in the week had omitted funds for the National Resources Planning Board for the next fiscal year.

"The board is the only Government agency which is planning for the post-war period and Corpus Christi is one of the six cities in the Nation which is receiving assistance from the board, it was pointed out by members of the planning commission."

Excerpt from letter from M. W. Torkelson, director of regional planning, Wisconsin State Planning Board, February 25, 1943:

"I feel strongly that the National Resources Planning Board is an absolute necessity for the proper functioning of the State planning organizations. Our State Planning Board organization here in Wisconsin is a good one. It has a good staff and an adequate appropriation for normal working. With regard to doing the work that is necessary to be done in connection with the matters in the State, we are entirely independent of the National Resources Planning Board, that is, we do not expect them to furnish us with personnel nor with financial help. We are, however, dependent on them entirely for information regarding what is being done in other States and receive great help from them in the way of advice and assistance. Some day, some time, it is going to be realized that planning organizations—local, State and national—are absolutely essential for the proper functioning of government, not to lay down a course for the legislative body but to assemble and correlate, for the use of the legislative body, the factual information that is necessary for them to act with a full and complete knowledge of the facts."

Excerpts from letter from the director of the Northwest Regional Council, Portland, Oreg., Feb. 23, 1943:

"Never was there a time in the history of our country, or our region, when sound planning was more needed, when the people as a whole were more concerned with the future. The central library in Portland reports that the demand for books and pamphlets dealing with post-war planning is second only to those concerned with international relations. My contacts with education at all levels reflects a growing interest in planning, an ever-increasing appreciation of the work of the National Resources Planning Board in the Pacific Northwest. The war is creating problems which will demand heroic action—action which should be guided by facts rather than by guess. An organization which can view these problems broadly on both a regional and national basis is an urgent necessity. With 8 years of experience, with an over-all viewpoint, with an organization of enthusiastic citizen leaders built around its regional counsellors, the National Resources Planning Board can do an immensely valuable job, can serve as the leader in the coordination of the work of these democratically organized regional units.

"Rather than the abolition of the National Resources Planning Board, conditions call for the expansion of its services so that it can put some of the best minds in the country to work on post-war problems; to determine now the course of action most likely to promote regional and national well-being; to implement a sound action program; to create an informed public opinion through a well-planned educational program; to interest citizens taking an active part in solving local and regional problems; to encourage cooperative action for meeting the situations which are bound to arise."

Excerpts from a letter from director of Michigan State Planning Commission, February 25, 1943:

"A motion was passed at the last meeting of the State Planning Commission requesting the services of the National Resources Planning Board on the important phases of Michigan State programming.

"It is apparent at this time that the State legislature may set aside twenty to fifty million dollars for post-war allocation. Governor Kelly has recently requested that the authorization act of the State Planning Commission be amended to cover further post-war planning procedure. The Planning Commission has requested an increase to $67,000 annually in order to conduct this state program.

"The Planning Commission further moved to extend its sincere thanks to the National Resources Planning Board for the highly valued assistance it has given to the State through the staff and consultation during the past 2 years.

"It is not the desire of the State Planning Commission to realize an improper proportion of services from the National Resources Planning Board relative to other States in the region; however, it will conscientiously apply for and appreciate all possible service which may be rendered by the National Resources Planning Board in this effort to prepare for peace."

Telegram from Michigan State Planning Commission, February 19, 1943:

"Michigan State Planning Commission at February 11 meeting requested continued services of the National Resources Planning Board and expressed gratitude for the extensive and valuable staff and consultant services rendered during the past years. Stop. Services especially desirable on State post-war program under way. Stop. Assistance in this behalf welcome."

Excerpt from letter from William A. Bowes, commissioner of public works of city of Portland, Oreg., February 11, 1943:

"It is my opinion that every effort should be made to retain the services of the National Resources Planning Board. This organization has done a great deal for the State of Oregon in mapping plans and organizing a program for the development of our resources. In the post-war world, this information will be invaluable. If we are not going back to a leaf-raking program, then let's plan the work to be done so that it will be a lasting benefit to the State, counties, and communities where relief work will be needed. Without adequate planning, such as the National Resources Planning Board is doing, there is little left but a hodge-podge program, developed on the spur of a moment under the pressure of much-needed relief for those who are hungry."

Excerpts from letter from chairman, Washington State Planning Council, February 23, 1943:

"It has been our experience that the National Resources Planning Board has been one of the groups in Washington that has been most successful in decentralizing their activities and in causing their work of research to reach out into the various areas.

"The State of Washington, specifically, has gained greatly by the enlightened activities of the Board. Without your assistance we could not have set up the Puget Sound Planning Commission, which has been so successful in aiding in the work of organizing housing and living facilities for war industry in the Puget Sound area.

"The splendid financial study which has just been completed for our Governor would not have been initiated and could not have been carried on except for the expert leadership and assistance given by your Mr. Otto Croy.

"Your work in the public works programming has been most useful to us. The State of Washington has accumulated an excellent financial surplus, and it hopes, in post-war, to be able to make an important contribution through public works expenditures through the assistance, in part, that you have given us."

Excerpt from Montana State Water Conservation Board November 9, 1942, to Consultant Otto Croy of the National Resources Planning Board, region IX field office:

"Since you had a very substantial part in preparing Montana's 6-year program, you will perhaps be gratified to know that the program was very well received and formed the basis for a good many of their deliberations. Governor Ford is very well pleased with the program and has referred to it on many occasions. It is only in justice to you that you should be advised of this fact, and I am glad to pass the news on to you."

Excerpt from letter from the engineer-director, Arkansas State Planning Board, Little Rock, Ark., February 25, 1943:

"The consultants who have served this Board from time to time have undoubtedly helped greatly in making the work of this board the success it has had and the prestige it is now enjoying throughout the State.

"We are greatly concerned with the disposition of Congress toward financial support for continuing the work of your agency. We have written all of our Senators and Congressmen and have had several replies indicating that they are interesting themselves in behalf of the National Resources Planning Board appropriation. We shall continue to give them every assurance that the State departments are receiving valuable help because of our collaboration."

Letter from Gov. Robert S. Kerr, of Oklahoma, February 3, 1943:

"I certainly appreciate your splendid courtesy and help. It is my firm purpose to practice the most friendly cooperation, and I will be more than glad for this to be my policy with reference to your position, since I am aware of the great help you and your department can be to our State."

Excerpts from letter from Director El Roy Nelson, Colorado Planning Commission, February 13, 1943:

"We are indebted to a great extent for this research work to the National Resources Planning Board, which has been willing to lend us the aid of engineers and research men, particularly from the University of Denver and the University of Colorado. These men have been chosen by us, but have been and are being paid by the National Resources Planning Board.

"Our opinion is that the National Resources Planning Board is, by odds, the best agency to carry on planning. We can work well with them in developing the resources of this State. Our objection is largely to the other 156 agencies, which go on their way and develop their plans.

"Because of this we would hope that the National Resources Planning Board could continue its research work and assist us in research of economic development of this State."

Excerpt from letter from the Utah Commission on Industrial Development, February 10, 1943.

"The National Resources Planning Board is one Federal agency that has been a real help to Utah and to our Commission on Industrial Development. It has helped you and us in furthering, the establishment of the new iron and steel plant at Provo, the Kalunite plant at Salt Lake, and in developing our water and mineral resources. The Board is now furnishing the valuable services of a group of technicians who are working with us in preparing plans and programs to meet the problems arising from the huge war-time expansion in Utah, Weber, Davis, Salt Lake, and Tooele Counties. With their aid we are working out a sound and useful plan for the post-war development of our State. We feel that because of this technical service, Utah will be one of the first States to have ready, specific programs and projects for the post-war period."

Excerpts from letter from L. H. Andrews, Plan Engineer, City Planning Commission, Shreveport, La., August 11, 1942.

"Some time ago, you were kind enough to send Mr. L. P. Cockrill to Shreveport to assist us in our planning program. Mr. Cockrill was invaluable in the service that he rendered at that time.

"We are at the cross roads on several of our planning programs, and feel the need of experienced help."

Excerpt from Chairman of Commission on City Plan, Baltimore, Md., October 2, 1942.

"It is our purpose to deal with this problem ourselves. We know our city, but we may need to call on Washington for expert advice, in certain fields and we may need to do certain types of research which will require staff work and we wonder how much assistance we can hope for from Washington."

Resolution of Washington State Planning Council, Olympia, March 1, 1943:

"The council, having carefully examined the 6-year public-improvement program submitted to it, prepared in substantial part as a result of the assignment to the State planning council of Mr. Otto Croy, program consultant from the National Resources Planning Board, acknowledges itself greatly indebted to the National Resources Planning Board for the admirable analysis of the State's past, present, and future in the field of public works programming and believes the work to be so valuable that it should be carried down through the counties and cities.

"Therefore, in expressing its gratitude to the National Resources Planning Board for the excellent assistance and leadership thus given it respectfully asks consideration of further assistance in the enlarged program for cities and counties for which at the present time we have no trained staff available."

Excerpt from letter from Oakland (Calif.) City Planning Commission, February 24, 1943:

"Before us is one of the largest problems, that is, post-war activity. The time for planning for this post-war activity is now, and not when the problems are face to face with us. The National Resources Planning Board was undertaking such a job. Many of the State and local planning commissions are also undertaking the same type of work. The National Resources Board has done much to stimulate interest at the local level for the solving of the post-war problems which will inevitably arise.

"The Oakland Planning Commission respectfully petitions that you do everything possible to assist in having this function of the Federal Government continued. This request is made because of the value of the work already completed and the recognized need for a continuation of this type of activity, particularly to the local planning units."

Excerpts from letter from Gov. Dwight Griswold, of Nebraska, August 6, 1942:

"This is to express, on behalf of myself and the State zoning agency, our appreciation for the cooperation and services of the National Resources Planning Board in assisting us in our State zoning activities.

"We hope that the services of the National Resources Planning Board will continue to be available for this State program, which is of considerable value to facilitate and protect our war industries."

Letter from Detroit City Plan Commission and the Michigan State Planning Commission, January 4, 1942:

"The importance and magnitude of the post-war problems of the Detroit-Southeastern Michigan industrial region call for an immediate appraisal of its post-war prospects. In recognition of the interest in this objective expressed throughout the region and as a result of a conference held in Detroit between representatives of the National Resources Planning Board, the Michigan State Planning Commission, and the Detroit City Plan Commission, we propose that the following steps be taken:

"1. That the Detroit-Southeastern Michigan Post-War Joint Committee be established.

"2. That the committee consist of an executive committee and advisory council as hereinafter outlined.

"3. That the National Resources Planning Board jointly, with the Michigan State Planning Commission and the Detroit City Plan Commission, take the initiative in the task of making this appraisal and that each of these agencies contribute its utmost to the undertaking.

"4. We propose that an executive committee be set up comprised of one representative each from the National Resources Planning Board, the Michigan State Planning Commission, and the Detroit City Plan Commission, to which may be added a fourth member who would represent the region outside the city of Detroit. This executive committee would be responsible for the conduct of the undertaking, including the selection and direction of the staff.

"5. In addition to the executive committee, we propose that an advisory council be formed which would be representative of the various governmental and private interests in the region. The advisory council will provide technical advice on matters of policy and procedure and will serve as a two-way channel between the enterprise and the region. It will be expected to assume responsibility for securing such additional material support as may be required.

"6. The State Planning Commission and the Detroit City Plan Commission will each contribute such staff services and facilities as are at their disposal. In addition, they will secure the assistance of other local and State departments and agencies. They will further present to their respective appropriating bodies a request for such additional financial aid as would be justified as a contribution by each of them.

"We respectfully request, therefore, that the National Resources Planning Board enlist the aid of all appropriate Federal agencies and make available to the joint undertaking such of its own personnel and other resources as may be required to carry the job to a successful conclusion."

Excerpt from letter from R. C. Martin of Bureau of Public Administration of the University of Alabama, November 16, 1942, concerning Southeastern Regional Plan:

"I want to say that I think you have done one of the most significant things I have seen in the South in a long, long time. It is highly important that the problems you raise be considered, and considered now before they have become serious, as they undoubtedly will in the near post-war period."

Letter from engineer and executive secretary of the City Plan Commission of Spokane, Wash., February 25, 1943:

"I wish to express, on behalf of the Spokane City Plan Commission, our appreciation for assistance we have received from the National Resources Planning Board through the bulletins and statistics compiled by the Board for the benefit of local planning commissions such as ours. The city of Spokane has availed itself of the services of the National Resources Planning Board in the preparation of an advance program and budgeting of capital improvements, and has received considerable benefit from the services of the Washington State Planning Council in its connections with the National Board.

"We propose to submit in the near future an application to your Board for assistance in coordinating our urban planning studies. This application will be made on the basis of the city contributing a portion of the expense of obtaining the services of a National Resources Planning Board technician."

Excerpts from letter from chairman of the Northern Lakes States Regional Planning Commission, Madison, Wis., February 26, 1943:

"After our meeting in Chicago last Wednesday, I think that it is necessary that I should call your attention at this time to the need for greater assistance from the National Resources Planning Board in connection with the work of the Northern Lakes States Regional Committee than has been provided in the past. * * * We in Wisconsin are better situated as regards staff than either one of the other two States and yet it becomes increasingly evident that we, too, require the assistance of the National Resources Planning Board in the carrying out of this program. The reason for that is the great and increasing demand on our services in other fields, and while I am talking about them, we shall be very glad to get any assistance in this particular, also."

"The services of your office, especially those rendered through Mr. Cross, have been helpful, and we will expect to call on you to a much greater degree than heretofore. For this reason the pending shift of your office from Indianapolis to Chicago is especially fortunate from our standpoint."

Joint letter from the Governors of Nebraska, Wyoming, and Colorado, April 29, 1941:

"Request is hereby made by the Governors of the States of Nebraska, Wyoming, and Colorado for assignment of the staff now engaged in the Pecos River investigation to undertake a compilation and appraisal of the factual information now available concerning the water resources of the North Platte River and its tributaries in the three States, and an inventory of the basic information needed as a basis for a complete study of the water resources of said river and use for irrigation or other beneficial purposes.

"It is understood that this preliminary study shall not include any independent field investigations by the National Resources Planning Board, that it shall not interfere with the progress of pending litigation, and that it shall be made without cost to the States.

"When completed the findings of the investigators, which may become very important in possible assignments of the existing and impending controversies, shall be submitted, through the appropriate officers of the National Resources Planning Board, to the Governors of the three States."

Letter from Governor Ralph L. Carr of Colorado, May 17, 1941:

"As Governor of Colorado, may I extend to you and the National Resources Planning Board my thanks for your agreement to make a compilation and appraisal of the factual information now available concerning the water resources of the North Platte River and its tributaries.

"From our happy experience on the Rio Grande, I know that this information will enable the States of Wyoming, Nebraska, and Colorado to settle their differences, to allocate the river flow and to do an intelligent job while they're at it. We are very grateful."

Excerpts from letter from chairman of the Illinois State Planning Commission, February 27, 1943:

"At the meeting of the Illinois State Planning Commission yesterday, the members voted unanimously to accept the very gracious tender of the National Resources Planning Board of such assistance as may be available in the promotion of certain planning work in southern Illinois.

"May I repeat in behalf of the Commission a word of appreciation of the interest and the offer of assistance of your field office and the Washington staff."

Excerpts from the director of the Virginia State Planning Board, Richmond, March 7, 1942, concerning Hampton Roads defense area:

"I wish to take this opportunity to express the warm appreciation of the Virginia State Planning Board for the exceedingly valuable assistance in this critical matter which has been provided through the region 2 office."

Excerpts from letter from Brig. Gen. Rollin L. Tilton, Commanding Headquarters, Chesapeake Bay section, Fort Monroe, Va., March 25, 1942:

"This will acknowledge and thank you for the copy of the Hampton Roads Regional Water Supply Study.

"The information contained in this study is of inestimable value and reflects within itself the diligent investigation for which you and your office are highly recommended."

Excerpt from letter from Mrs. Wardlow Steele, secretary, Tennessee State Planning Commission, February 20, 1943:

"At the present time we are engaged in planning work that will be of great importance to our people in the post-war period. Much of this work deals with planning for industrial growth, and the National Resources Planning Board is able to give the State technical help in this planning that cannot be obtained elsewhere. The aid we have received has already been exceedingly helpful, and the working relationships with this agency are so good that we urge that its fine work be continued. Now, more than ever before, we need intelligent planning not only on a State level but for the Nation as well."

Excerpt from letter from Chairman P. D. Houston confirms above, Tennessee State Planning Commission, February 2, 1943:

"* * * I feel the planning commissions, both State and Federal, will be of more value during the coming years to our entire population than they have for many years past as when this war is over we will in a measure be in a new world.

"The research that is being carried on by the National Resources Planning Board will provide information that will enable our leaders of business to know what resource is available without their having to make independent research or inquiry, and the work of the Planning Board will facilitate the progress which I feel sure our people will make when we are permitted to go again in a normal way."

Excerpt from letter from J. J. Harrison, chairman, Arkansas State Planning Board, February 17, 1943:

"As one of the directors of the American Society of Planning Officials I attended meetings of the board of directors and the national conference held by this society and, therefore, am acquainted with the progress of planning work throughout the Nation. There is no doubt that the National Resources Planning Board has and is now making a very fine contribution to the Nation in its encouragement of State and local planning, and is also contributing materially to the State and local boards in their efforts to do their own planning within their own region."

Excerpt from letter from Don McBride, director, divisions of planning and water resources, Oklahoma Planning and Resources Board, February 12, 1943:

"Especially at this time is the function of that agency important. If ever we needed a guiding hand in the coordination of our planning, it is now, and certainly we must plan. It is vital to our post-war existence and I am confident that we will find ourselves like a ship without a rudder if we abandon planning at the Federal level of the Government."

Resolution of Washington State Planning Council, March 1, 1943:

"The council, having carefully examined the 6-year public improvement program submitted to it, prepared in substantial part as a result of the assignment to the State planning council of Mr. Otto Croy, program consultant from the National Resources Planning Board, acknowledges itself greatly indebted to the National Resources Planning Board for the admirable analysis of the State's past, present, and future in the field of public-works programming and believes the work to be so valuable that it should be carried down through the counties and cities.

"Therefore, in expressing its gratitude to the National Resources Planning Board for the excellent assistance and leadership thus given, it respectfully asks consideration of further assistance in the enlarged program for cities and counties for which at the present time we have no trained staff available."

Letter from Acting Director Larrabee of Tennessee State Planning Commission, Nashville, Tenn., November 2, 1942:

"We are currently conducting an industrial survey of Tennessee. In view of the fact that we hope the study will lead to a plan for a post-war industrial development of the State, it has occurred to us that your organization could be of great help to us in this work.

"If you have an economist whom you could assign to us for a period of several weeks we would appreciate it. It seems to me to be ridiculous to attempt a project of the magnitude of this one without the assistance of the National Resources Planning Board. A great deal of work has already been done by you and we hope to avoid the waste of repetition. At a time like the present this waste is inexcusable."

Excerpt from letter from T. V. Kalijarvi, executive director, New Hampshire State Planning and Development Commission, January 6, 1943:

"The Governor has assigned the planning and development commission the very pleasant task of studying the possibility of a conservation department in our State set-up. In the course of that study it becomes necessary to determine if any other States have such a department in existence. I have already written to the Council of State Governments and received some literature on the matter, particularly a report by Clifford J. Hynning and a report from Arkansas. However, I wonder if there are any studies available in any of the other States of which you know or any studies which your organization has made which would be helpful.

Call on them

"Still another question in my mind is the availability of consultants on this particular type of study and if they are available who they might be. Any advice which you can send me on this matter will be very much appreciated."

Excerpt from letter from Dudley Harmon, executive vice president, New England council, September 12, 1943, to Chairman Cutter, region I, National Resources Planning Board:

"Your latest publication, Another Tale of Two Cities, provides the most substantial evidence yet made available in support of the policy of industrial diversification within the community which this council has advocated since its earliest days. For this reason, we are requesting 125 copies to be sent to our directors, selected chambers of commerce, and others interested in the economic health and welfare of our New England communities."

Excerpt from letter from L. F. Hubbard, planning assistant, New Hampshire State Planning and Development Commission, February 8, 1943:

"* * * This material (of N. R. P. B.) is of the greatest value in the coordination of policies and techniques of our respective offices. Very frequently methods of approaching a new study or of portraying information are suggested, which materially contribute to our knowledge and efficiency."

Excerpt from letter from Ernest J. Bohn, director, Regional Association of Cleveland, February 9, 1943:

"* * * We are concerned with the preparation of comprehensive plans for this region, and therefore your reports are of inestimable value. (Our library is open to the public, and therefore we should receive these reports without cost.)"

Excerpt from letter from F. A. Pitkin, executive director, Pennsylvania State Planning Board, February 8, 1943:

"* * * The material which we receive from the National Resources Planning Board field offices is very valuable to us in connection with our State planning work."

Excerpt from letter from Mayor Harry P. Cain, city of Tacoma, Wash., November 25, 1942:

"I just want you to know that in my considered opinion your contributions have been fundamentally important to Tacoma's future. Should we fail to take advantage of the work of your agents the fault will lie directly with us."

Excerpts from letter from Puget Sound Regional Planning Commission, Seattle, Wash., February 23, 1943:

"The Puget Sound Regional Planning Commission, representing this—a critical defense area, an area in which war production must continue at a maximum for many months—respectfully requests that planning consultant services of your Board be continued to be given this commission for the year 1943–44.

"The local people, therefore, ask for your consultant services to help effectuate programs of development for war and long-range conditions. By local people we mean local business and industrial leaders, local public service groups, and local governmental agencies.

"We, therefore, ask for continued leadership in the form of consultants assigned to this area. If these consultants are furnished they can also, as they have done during the past year, give assistance in solving some of the still existing bottlenecks in this defense area. Your Board must keep aware of the fact that the Puget Sound region will become increasingly more important as the military activities are stepped up to win the war in the Pacific Ocean, with the Puget Sound ports and industries becoming of greater importance."

Excerpts from letter from city manager of Borger, Tex., February 28, 1943:

"The attitude taken toward the National Resources Planning Board recently by some of the Members of Congress is quite disturbing. Not that we are capable of criticizing Members of Congress on their attitude toward issues that come up for their consideration from time to time when we don't have all the facts. That would not be fair to them, but we all remember the old saying: 'For the lack of a nail the shoe was lost, for the lack of a shoe the horse was lost, etc.'

"Some of us who were directly involved in the difficulties that prevailed remember too well what happened to us from 1929 through 1936, when the country lost all that millions of Americans had to offer society—their labor—for the reason the country was without adequate plans and we were not in position to work them."

Excerpts from letter from Charles Diebold, Jr., president of the Buffalo City Planning Association (N. Y.), February 3, 1943:

"At the invitation of this group the National Resources Planning Board has provided full-time services of a planning technician and from time to time the expert consulting services of various members of its technical staff. The work of the planning technician, who acts as technical adviser to our council, has included the preparation of preliminary estimates of post-war employment goals for each major industry in the area. These goals are being used by the post-war planning committee of the Buffalo Chamber of Commerce in stimulating and coordinating the post-war planning of leading industrial firms. Work has already gone forward in the field of labor, housing, urban redevelopment, public works, and public finance, either by groups already organized to do this work or by special committees appointed by the council.

"Appreciating the help we have already received from the National Resources Planning Board in this, one of the greatest industrial centers of the United States, and of the help we will continue to receive and which is being extended to other similar areas, I sincerely hope you will help the Board obtain an adequate appropriation to carry on for the next fiscal year."

Excerpts from letter from Gov. John E. Miles, of New Mexico, and Governor Stevenson, of Texas, October 31, 1942:

"The States of Texas and New Mexico desire to negotiate a compact respecting the use, storage, and distribution of the waters of the Pecos River, and the rights of the States thereto, said Pecos River being an interstate stream.

"It is the view of both of us that someone should be appointed to represent the United States who has some connection with the National Resources Planning Board, as that Board has caused to be made the Pecos River joint investigation which will be used as the basis for an effort to arrive at an agreement."

Resolution of Los Angeles County, Calif., Board of Supervisors, March 2, 1943.

The board met in regular session March 2, 1943. Present: Supervisors Gordon L. McDonough (chairman), presiding, William A. Smith, John Anson Ford, Oscar Hauge, and Roger W. Jessup, and J. F. Moroney, clerk, by Alice Burks, deputy clerk.

"In re National Resources Planning Board: Resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to restore budget for next fiscal year.

"On motion of Supervisor Ford, unanimously carried, it is ordered that the following resolution be, and the same is hereby, adopted, to wit:

"Whereas President Roosevelt in a letter to Congress dated January 14, 1942, stated: 'The National Resources Planning Board, as the planning arm of my Executive office, is charged with the preparation of long-range plans for the development of our national resources and stabilization of employment. At my direction, it is correlating plans and programs under consideration in many Federal, State, and private organizations for post-war full employment, security, and building America; and

"Whereas this board feels that said Planning Board in functioning as above outlined is doing a very necessary piece of work and that the various reports issued by said Planning Board in recent months have been very helpful to the regional planning commission of the county of Los Angeles: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the board of supervisors of the county of Los Angeles hereby memorializes the Congress of the United States to restore the Budget of the National Resources Planning Board for the next fiscal year."

The foregoing resolution was adopted by the board of supervisors of the county of Los Angeles, State of California, on March 2, 1943, and is entered in the minutes of said board.

J. F. MORONEY,
County Clerk of the County of Los Angeles, State of California, and Ex Officio Clerk of the Board of Supervisors of Said County.

ALICE BURKS, Deputy.

Excerpt from letter from Puerto Rico Regional Planning Commission, September 16, 1943:

"I take this opportunity to express my sincere thanks for all the help that the National Resources Planning Board has already extended to the Puerto Rico Planning Board. The regional office in San Juan, under the able direction of Mr. Bartlett, has been giving splendid cooperation since the drafting of our planning law and all throughout the initial stages of the organization of this Board. I am also grateful for the introduction to planning that I received in the States in your central office, and for all the courtesies that you and your associates extended to me."

Excerpt from letter from the Director of Public Works of Santa Barbara County, Calif., W. C. Penfield, March 4, 1943:

"In this particular county, we are perhaps more in a position to appreciate the benefits of your work than many communities of like economy and population. Our greatest planning effort is that of creating a multiple purpose water program which will serve every area of this county. We have found that some Federal help will be necessary to carry it out. The National Resources Planning Board has done a fine job in coordinating the activities of several Federal agencies to prevent duplication, waste of funds, disagreement between bureaus, etc. In fact, the effects of your work here are only beginning and we are anticipating a remarkable dividend from work already performed as well as that which we expect to follow."

Excerpt from letter from Frank F. Stearns, executive secretary, the City Planning Board, Miami, Fla., March 5, 1943:

Urging "restoration of sufficient appropriation to properly provide for the functioning of the National Resources Planning Board, city, State, and national planning should be closely coordinated for comprehensive results. It would appear that post-war plans should be in the making, right now so that communities and the Nation as a whole could be in a position to convert to peacetime projects with the least possible loss of time and money.

"We therefore urge that every possible effort be made to provide for the best planning of localities on a national scale."

Excerpt from letter from Raymond V. Long, director, Virginia State Planning Board, March 18, 1943:

"The Virginia State Planning Board is concerned seriously with the possibility of securing consultant assistance from the National Resources Planning Board in our post-war planning. Already representatives of the National Resources Planning Board have met with the Virginia State Planning Board as invited guests and we have on various occasions visited their offices asking advice on our post-war planning program. These conferences have been very helpful and we have assurance that greatly increased consultation services will be available if invited."

Excerpt from letter from Henry Cook, engineer, Tarrant County, Fort Worth, Tex., March 4, 1943:

"The Tarrant County plan was completed recently and printing of 100 copies will be finished within 2 or 3 weeks. The National Resources Planning Survey representatives acted as consultants to our office in the preparation of this plan, and we are grateful for the splendid contribution they have made and for cooperative spirit that existed while we were engaged in this work."

Excerpt from letter from Gerald V. Balthaser, executive director, the Housing Authority of King County, Seattle, Wash., March 16, 1943:

"* * * Our Authority feels that the National Resources Planning Board, through its Washington Office and local staff, has been of immense help to us all in this area—assisting in planning of site locations, furnishing in advance vital data for planning public facilities, assisting in the coordination of various agency activities responsible for approvals, and to us, expediting our projects in general."

Resolution No. 2727 adopted by San Francisco City Planning Commission, March 11, 1943:

"Whereas it has been called to the attention of the city planning commission that the entire proposed appropriation of $1,400,000 for the National Resources Planning Board for the fiscal year of 1943–44 was eliminated from the independent offices bill by the House of Representatives on February 17, 1943; and

"Whereas through this deletion or elimination the Nation will lose the services of an organization which has had 10 years of successful experience in preparing comprehensive plans for the development of our national resources and the stabilization of employment; and

"Whereas California will be vitally affected most directly by the loss of the field offices for this region, located in Berkeley; and

"Whereas this branch has aided both private enterprise and governmental agencies through its analysis of population, employment, economic and industrial development, war-time changes, and prospective post-war conditions in California and neighboring States: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the City Planning Commission of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, respectfully requests that the Senate Appropriations Committee restore the sum necessary for the continuation of the National Resources Planning Board before sending the bill to the Senate.

"I hereby certify that the foregoing resolution was approved by the city planning commission at its special meeting March 11, 1943."

Mr. HILL. I now yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. BONE. I was about to ask the Senator from Alabama whether Mr. George F. Yantis, of my State, is now a member of the Board.

Mr. HILL. He was at one time on the Board.

Mr. BONE. I think he still is.

Mr. TAFT. He is still a member of the Board.

Mr. HILL. He is a member of the Board. It was Dr. Mitchell who resigned, but Mr. Yantis is still on the Board.

Mr. BONE. I should like to say to my colleagues in the Senate that if the most irrepressible critic of this Board and its activities, and its alleged or assumed views, were to assert that Mr. George F. Yantis was an irresponsible radical, it would probably create a riot in the State of Washington. Mr. Yantis is a very able, brilliant, and outstanding member of the bar, and is regarded as a very high class man. He is level-headed, with an understanding mind, and I think is realistic in his approach to problems. I have a great personal admiration for Mr. Yantis. I do not always see eye to eye with him, but it certainly is amusing to hear anyone suggest that a man such as Mr. Yantis would be an irresponsible disturber or radical because he is anything but irresponsible.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield to me?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. All I know about his views comes from what I read in the testimony before the House committee, where Mr. Yantis said that even leaf raking creates wealth. Any man who holds such a view certainly is open to the charge made against the Board that they have adopted a new financial philosophy.

Mr. BONE. I have heard some of the Senator's brethren on the other side of the aisle assert that a mere proposal of public ownership of power was bolshevistic and calculated to overthrow the Government. I am not quite prepared to accept such an asinine statement as a realistic statement of fact. I do not know anything about what Mr. Yantis may have said concerning something that is probably historical, and may have referred back to the old organization of relief that was set up in the earlier days. I would not share that view; I think nothing is worth while unless it is productive of some real wealth; but this I do want to say, that if men were hungry I would get them jobs somehow, even though for the moment, and if by virtue of the frightful economic pressure on them it was necessary to give them the work in order that their families might eat. I shall not be mean enough in my own soul to deny a man access to some sort of a job, temporary though it might be, if it feeds hungry kids, though I certainly would agree with my able friend from Ohio in wanting them to get away from that sort of operation as speedily as possible, though economic necessity knows no law. It is possible Mr. Yantis may have referred to something in the past, and that his reference was historical rather than an expression of his present-day contemplation.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I do not at all intend to say that we should not have had leaf raking, but I refer to the philosophy which runs through the whole report, that the spending of Government money alone creates wealth and produces prosperity, entirely apart from the other purposes to which it may be devoted. That is all I intended to imply, not that we may not have to have leaf raking, but as a relief, not as a financial measure.

Mr. BONE. When one contemplates the astronomical expenditures in this present war, he finds himself drifting from any moorings which educationally are provided for him. If anyone in this hour can contemplate the rising debt without wondering where it is going to lead, he is an unusual human being. There is no reason to these debts as they accumulate, and I do not know that any board ever set up by the Government could provide in this hour a sensible, sound answer to what we must face in the way of a problem if the debt reaches such a sum as 4 or 5 or 6 hundred billion dollars.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield to me?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I had not intended to say anything in connection with the proposal now before the Senate because of the lateness of the hour, but if the Senator from Alabama will yield I should like to add one thought for the RECORD.

It seems to me that in view of the cataclysmic character of the problems with which it is obvious this Nation will be confronted at the conclusion of the war, the surest way by which to destroy the private enterprise system would be to enter that period with no plans to meet the problem of the transition of our wartime industry and the demobilization of our armed forces and their adjustment to peacetime conditions.

Likewise, it seems to me that it would be a great mistake for the Congress to deny the Executive funds requested for planning for this purpose. The granting of such funds, let me say, does not imply that the Congress will accept any of the programs when they are formulated; but to deny the Executive such a request is for Congress to assume a responsibility which it seems to me it cannot well afford to assume.

I am happy that the Senate has created a committee to study post-war problems, but it seems to me that should not mean the exclusion of either the House of Representatives or the executive branch of the Government. I venture the prediction that when the end of the war comes—and God grant it may come soon, with victory—we shall be grateful for each and every step, each and every plan that has been made, for the problems confronting the Nation will test the combined intelligence, judgment, character, and stamina of the men who may then be in positions of responsibility and power in this Republic.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Wisconsin, and I wish to say that I am glad the Senator from Ohio raised the question of leaf raking, because I do not hesitate to say here this afternoon that if we make no plans, if we refuse to appropriate the money so that plans and studies may be made to meet the post-war situation, and to meet the transition from war economy back to civilian-goods economy, we will find that we will again be at a leaf-raking stage.

We will again be confronted with such a situation that in order to keep men's souls and bodies together, to keep them and their loved ones from going hungry we will have to let them rake leaves and pay them for the raking of leaves.

It is perhaps impossible for any Member of the Senate to realize what may be the effect if Congress refuses to continue this Board in existence or refuses to allow it adequate funds. Cities, counties, States, subdivisions of the local governments, have been looking to the Federal Government for leadership in the matter of plans and studies. They are looking now, according to all the testimony we have received, for leadership from the Federal Government. This afternoon some Senators, at least are thinking of destroying that leadership, and of saying to the States and the cities and the counties, that, so far as the Federal Government is concerned, we will destroy that leadership, we will deny them any guidance or service or help or leadership in the matter of studies for the post-war period.

Mr. President, I can think of no better illustration of being penny-wise and pound-foolish than to deny the Board this comparatively small amount, approximately $500,000. When we think of the millions of dollars which we have expended due to the compulsion and the needs of the depression, of the billions of dollars we are expending today on the war effort, the $500,000 in question is a mere bagatelle, which will be spent solely so that we may be prepared and ready, so that we may not have to spend other millions, and hundreds of millions, and perhaps billions of dollars because we had not been made ready and had not been prepared.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I wish to suggest to my friend the Senator from Alabama that there is no more grim implication in this leaf-raking program, with all the lost motion and lost efforts wrapped up in it, than there was in the fact that it was made necessary by the break-down of the so-called economic system then dominated by the most conservative forces in American life.

Mr. HILL. The forces which today constitute the main opposition to this Board and its work are the very forces which broke down and stood in default in the days of depression. They had nothing to offer, and now they do not want the Government to prepare in the event they have nothing more to offer and the Government shall have to step into the breach.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. HILL. I yield.

Mr. BONE. Historically, there never has been presented to the American people a picture of more complete domination of the processes of industry and politics in this country by business, big private business, than the domination of the congressional processes of thinking and the political activities in our States by private business enterprises in the roaring twenties. I do not think any man who is intellectually honest will take issue with that statement. Now, if with that supreme and complete control of our political and economic life we faced that break-down, it does not lie readily in the mouth of an exponent of that viewpoint, expressed by big business in the twenties, now to be too critical of leaf raking because big business domination brought about the necessity for leaf raking.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] is very anxious to have a vote on his amendment, and I shall conclude simply by expressing the fervent hope that his amendment will meet with the Senate's approval.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I can assure the Senator from Tennessee that I shall not take much time, but I wish to say a word—and I shall not occupy more than 3 or 4 minutes—with respect to my own sentiments, for whatever they may be worth.

We have a National Resources Planning Board now in existence. The Board has a personnel already established and experienced. Perhaps in the first instance, and I think we all agree to that, it would have been better to have set the Board up as a legislative agency. If there were a proposal before the Senate this afternoon to substitute a legislative agency for this executive agency I would vote for it. But, as the distinguished Senator from Tennessee pointed out in his able discussion, whether we will have any statutory planning board for the Nation is problematical. We may or we may not have it. If we do have one it may be some time hence before it is established, and the time between this day, or when this appropriation might be available for that body, and when the agency subsequently to be created under that hypothesis might go into operation, may be a considerable period.

All of us have fears and at the same time hopes with respect to the conclusion of this war. We are afraid it is going to be a long war. We may have much time for planning. That is more probable than a realization of the hope we cherish in our hearts that it will be a short war, and that we may not have much time for planning. At least our leaders have been talking in terms of the possibility of concluding the war in 1943 or 1944, but I think Mr. Churchill's most pessimistic estimate was possibly the year thereafter.

So, Mr. President, I say we have a National Resources Planning Board. It has been in existence for several years. I think the consensus is that it has done creditable work. It is certainly working in the right direction at least. If its personnel should be improved, that is a matter which Congress perhaps by its debate may indicate to the President. If there is not adequate regional representation on the Board perhaps the policy of the Board will be influenced by what has been said in this debate and in other discussions before the Appropriations Committee.

But the point of it is, Mr. President, that the important thing is to obtain the best results we can in the direction of competent planning, and to obtain them as soon as possible. There is but one real danger to the institutions of America, and that is the kind of dictatorship that will come out of economic chaos. The only danger that such would-be dictators as John L. Lewis and Gerald K. Smith and many others constitute to American institutions is to be able to rise to power upon the heartaches, upon the economic chaos, and upon the suffering of the masses of the American people.

When our soldiers and sailors come back from war they are not going to expect jobs 6 months thereafter. They are going to expect jobs within a few days after they return home. In my own little State of Florida, with 1,800,000 population, there are from 300,000 to 400,000 war workers. They too are going to expect jobs when the war comes to an end. We cannot plan too much. I doubt if we can plan too much in trying to prepare against the day before which all of us stand in awe, the day after the war, when we shall have perhaps as great a fight as we are now having to save the true and typical American way of life.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I agree with what the Senator from Florida has to say. My criticism of this Board is not that it cannot do a good job of planning, not that it should not do a good job of planning, and not that a good job of planning is not needed, but up to now from reading its reports it has struck me that it is dealing with the abstract rather than the concrete; with philosophy rather than with facts. My disappointment comes from the fact that it has evolved no real program. If this Board were to sit down and make a survey of the country, and find out or suggest plans whereby the returning soldiers and those who are now working in the war plants, and so on, could be integrated under some plan, that would be one thing; but up to now, as I have read the reports—and I have not read them all—it seems to me that the Board has simply dealt with abstract philosophies.

If it had dealt with what the Senator is addressing himself to, my disposition would be to approve its continuance. But in the absence of that I hate to tell them to go on in so abstract a fashion.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me for a moment at that point, let me say that the Senate is familiar with the fact that in the last session of Congress there was pending a bill providing for the making of blueprints, the very thing the Senator is talking about. Hearings were held on the bill. The bill was on the calendar but was not allowed to be considered. However, if there is any criticism of the National Resources Planning Board for not having detailed information, for not having a program worked out, it is not its fault; because we attempted to prescribe just such blueprinting arrangements.

Incidentally, let me say that the bill had the support of practically every mayor in the United States, but still we could not pass it.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I cannot quite accept the Senator's premise, as I see it, as being in line with the facts of the matter. Regardless of whether that bill was passed, the National Resources Planning Board has not been shown as devoting its attention to the blueprinting of the details to which the Senator has referred. As I understand the situation, the Board could have done so if it had wanted to.

What we are doing is wading through ream after ream of rhetoric. Rhetoric is all right to a certain degree, but I want to be more practical about the post-war period. I want to see something I can understand and can get my hands on, something which deals with the matter in a forthright way.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, of course the Senator knows that one or two philosophers can sit down and write reams of rhetoric, as the Senator says, but it takes money to enable engineers to make plans and to design bridges and housing facilities and factories. The mere fact that we turned our backs upon what the Board tried to do makes it necessary for someone who knows about the matter to point out that the Board was trying to do the very thing the Senator from Maryland wants it to do.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Florida will permit me to say a further word, I should like to point out that the Board has had $8,000,000 appropriated for its activities. So far as I know, there is nothing other than the intangible as a result of the expenditure of the $8,000,000. I feel that a committee of the Senate or of the House, or a joint committee of the Senate and the House, if given $5,000, could assemble some engineers and could take testimony and could evolve something tangible relative to the needs in the post-war period. But as we have already spent $8,000,000, and have little to show for it, other than rhetoric, I am disillusioned as to the will or wish or aim of the Board to do what I originally thought it had been instructed to achieve.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator will permit me to cite two instances which came to my personal attention and knowledge not long ago. If I may be permitted to mention the fact, inasmuch as our able colleague was the toastmaster on the occasion, I was invited to make a talk on the subject of post-war planning, before the Baltimore Real Estate Board—a very fine organization. I called the National Resources Planning Board and asked if it had any material it could place in my hands. To my great satisfaction—whether the audience felt that way I cannot say—I found that the National Resources Planning Board had already worked out a plan and scheme for the Baltimore-Washington area, and had accumulated a great deal of data with respect to what should be done about housing facilities, for example, around the great Martin Aircraft plant, and about the buildings and terminal facilities and about preserving the dock facilities there for future operations, and about how the economy of the whole Baltimore-Washington area was tied together, and the necessity for regional planning, and all that sort of thing.

Mr. Elliott came to me and talked to me at great length about what the Board had been doing in working out the principles of regional planning.

As another illustration, let me say that I happened to meet Mr. Chauncey Hamlin, a very distinguished gentleman of the opposite political party from that to which I belong. I met him at Buffalo, N. Y. I found out that he is the chairman of the planning board having to do with all the Niagara Falls area, the area involving Buffalo and other cities in that section of the country, and the area around the Great Lakes and Niagara Falls region. What I learned led me to believe, in fact, he stated as much to me, that they had taken typical cases around the country and had tried to work out a pattern from the areas they had chosen, in an effort to work out recommendations which could be made effective.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. What the Senator stated to be a fact is at variance with the observation of the Senator from Utah that—inferentially, at least—the Board was not dealing with blueprints and details.

However, from the testimony and the evidence presented to Congress, I have the feeling that the Board is dealing with the question in an abstract way.

In reference to the Baltimore-Washington situation, let me say that it is only natural that the Board would have some information about it, because Mr. Delano, who is a member of the particular institution we are discussing, has for a number of years taken a very leading and constructive and fine part in developing the Greater National Capital and the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, and, I believe, also has been on the Art Commission. Things of that sort are in his ken, and he knows them well. But they are only small grains of sand on the beach of unemployment.

My criticism of the Board is that after the expenditure of $8,000,000, there is nothing that Congress can find which has anything realistic or concrete or definite in its as to a plan.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, in respect to the suggestion my able friend has made, let me say that the information about Baltimore, of whose planning board and art commission Mr. Delano was not a member, was, it seemed to me, quite as adequate as was the information the Board has relative to Washington. As a matter of fact, I think I received the impression somewhere that the Board had chosen at least five strategic areas—I do not know whether the Senator will recall this—and that one is the Niagara Falls area, that another, as I recall, is the Washington-Baltimore area, that another is in the West, and that another is farther south. I received the impression that the Board tried to make out of those areas a certain pattern which might be of interest in connection with the stabilization of the economy of the country.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator may be correctly advised about that; I do not speak with full knowledge of the fact. However, I do say that in Baltimore and in the State of Maryland, planning boards were set up a good while ago.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator's State has a good State planning board.

Mr. TYDINGS. And we have one in Baltimore City. I have an idea that what the Senator said in reference to Baltimore City more or less related to the plan which the local authorities prepared and sent to Mr. Delano, rather than to any plans which the National Resources Planning Board prepared and sent to Baltimore.

The reason why I say that is because I think we both know that up to the present time the Board has not been actively engaged in explorations in communities, except perhaps on a very limited scale. The experts coming in from the outside are not familiar with the local problems. They would have to consult with local people.

Therefore, I believe we have not gotten for the $8,000,000 which has been expended, the kind of results to which we are entitled.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, in conclusion, let me say that the able Senator will perhaps be interested to know that each of the agencies complimented the others on what had been done—a situation which indicated to me a fine spirit of cooperation existing between the agencies.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. I am very glad to support the statement the Senator from Florida made with regard to activities in Maryland. I have had many conferences with Colonel Delano, not merely on matters of philosophy but with regard to specific problems concerned with Maryland. On numerous occasions I have taken to meet him the chairman of our State's roads commission, members of other Maryland commissions, and many other prominent citizens. In each instance we have gone over many specific problems at considerable length. I certainly formed the impression that not only do Colonel Delano and his associates have a large fund of specific information, but that such information was not merely information handed to them by some State board, but was information which had been obtained by them as the result of his board's conducting independent studies in cooperation with State authorities. The conferences which I have had with Colonel Delano and his associates—and they cover quite a number of years, beginning even before I became a Member of the Senate—justify me in believing that the board has been doing very constructive work along specific lines.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course, the Board has not been in existence during all the period of time to which my colleague refers. In the second place, Mr. Delano was on a commission which was developing a parkway and road system to link Baltimore with Washington. That program is 10 or 15 years old, and has been revised and modified. I am not saying that Mr. Delano has not great knowledge of many of the conditions between Washington and Baltimore, and in both cities. What I am saying—and no one has disputed it with any evidence—is that after $8,000,000 has been spent, no plan has been evolved to show where we are to employ people when the war is over. The only thing we have is a treatise on the welfare of mankind.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, does not the Senator remember the good work which the National Resources Planning Board did in reporting on the unemployment situation in the anthracite coal region and the future marketing of anthracite coal? I have sent for a copy of the report, and will give it to the Senator in a few moments.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Mr. President, in 1933 I was in charge of public works in this area, including a large number of States. I do not recall what Colonel Delano's title was at that time, but certainly he was in charge of planning operations, working under or in close cooperation with the P. W. A. It was a part of my duty and pleasure to be in contact with him almost daily. Though this particular Board was not in operation at that time, certainly Colonel Delano was devoting his time to studies regarding planning. I know that, because of the fact that during that period I discussed many concrete planning propositions with him.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I wish to conclude. I thank the able Senators very much.

All that is involved in the amendment offered by the able Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] is something over $300,000. While that is a great deal of money for an individual, when we are talking about planning the economy of a nation with a population of 130,000,000 people, and prospective unemployment of ten or fifteen million people, the amount of money is a relative bagatelle. In view of the fact that this is the only commission we now have and that there is no immediate proposal before the Senate to substitute another one, it certainly seems to me that the risk of doing nothing is greater than the detriment to the country of expending the $300,000 and continuing the experienced organization which the country already has.

I hope the amendment will prevail.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the modified amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] to the committee amendment commencing on page 4, line 23.

Mr. McKELLAR. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Gerry	Overton
Austin	Gillette	Pepper
Bailey	Green	Radcliffe
Ball	Guffey	Reed
Bankhead	Gurney	Revercomb
Bilbo	Hatch	Robertson
Bone	Hawkes	Russell
Bridges	Hayden	Smith
Buck	Hill	Stewart
Burton	Holman	Taft
Bushfield	Johnson, Colo.	Thomas, Okla.
Butler	La Follette	Thomas, Utah
Byrd	Langer	Tobey
Capper	Lodge	Truman
Caraway	McCarran	Tunnell
Chandler	McClellan	Tydings
Chavez	McFarland	Vandenberg

Clark, Mo.	McNary	Wagner
Danaher	Maloney	Wallgren
Davis	Mead	Wheeler
Eastland	Millikin	White
Ellender	Moore	Wiley
Ferguson	Nye	Willis
George	O'Daniel	Wilson

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I know that the Senate is anxious to vote on this question. I shall not consume more than 5 minutes. I know that the subject has been covered, but I think there ought to be presented in this discussion a greater picture of what is needed in the future than has been developed, to my way of thinking, up to the present time.

Some eight or nine million soldiers will be coming home and hunting jobs. There are 20,000,000 men working in the war plants of this Nation, which will be closed down overnight with the cessation of hostilities. That will make a potential army of from eighteen to twenty-eight million men.

There will be $60,000,000,000 worth of war materials accumulated by the Government, which must be sold in competition with private business, which will then have the difficult task of reviving on a peacetime economy. The national debt will probably be from two hundred and fifty to three hundred billion dollars; and in spite of the talk-down statements about the national debt, that is $7,500 for every family in America, rich and poor, high and low. The annual interest on that debt alone will take as much money as the yearly revenues of the Government during the period from 1930 to 1940. Furthermore, there will be about $75,000,000,000 worth of war contracts outstanding after the war is over, which must be renegotiated and settled before private business can go ahead.

In addition, by the time the war is over the banks of the country will have invested 70 percent of their total resources in Government bonds. The American Bankers' Association estimates that by June 30, 1944, the banks of the country will hold about $100,000,000,000 of Government securities, and that the resources of the banks then will be about $160,000,000,000. The capital assets of the banks are only $8,000,00,000; and a decline of only eight points would wipe out all the capital structure of all the banks in America unless plans are evolved to deal with this situation.

These are some of the highlights in the post-war picture; and when we pick up these great volumes of sheer rhetoric, without the semblance of a plan, without even assembling the facts with which the Board must deal, other than to treat them in terms of generalities, I realize that somewhere along the line there is a theorist who is dictating the policies of this Board, without any concrete plan to meet the impact of the situations which are sure to be on the Nation's doorstep shortly after the last shot is fired.

Therefore I say it is folly, after we have spent $8,000,000 on this Board, and it has not produced a single plan worthy of the name except pamphlets in the abstract, to go on appropriating more money. What we ought to do is to eliminate this Board, and by congressional action set up one equipped with money enough to obtain the proper staff to deal with each of these tremendous problems separately, and integrate it into a national policy, for two purposes:

First, to reestablish private business in this country as we know it ought to be reestablished, with the minimum amount of Government ownership and the minimum amount of regulation.

We ought to do it because there are only two places a man can get a job—either in private industry or in government. Government has not a thing in the world with which to pay his wages unless it first takes it out of the work of those employed on the farms or in private concerns. We are fooling with dynamite; we are piddling with one of the greatest problems that will come before us in the post-war period, as if it were nothing but a spring zephyr. We cannot treat it in that way and solve it. To do so would be only to waste money and get nowhere.

What we want is a practical, visible, realistic solution of this problem. For that reason I shall vote against this appropriation in the hope that we can eliminate this Board and in due time set up something worthy of the name which will tackle these problems head-on and give us the solution which will perpetuate our American way of life, our private enterprise, our system of private initiative, our constitutional form of government, with justice and opportunity, created not from the top, but from the sweat and toil of all of us in private enterprise, the only place where real wealth can be accumulated for the benefit of all our citizens.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] as modified, to the committee amendment beginning on page 4, line 23.

The yeas and nays having been ordered, the clerk will call the roll.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment be stated because I have not been able to be present during the early part of the debate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 5, line 18, in the committee amendment after the word "laws" it is proposed to strike out "$200,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$534,422"; and on the same page, line 22, after the word "Board" it is proposed to strike out "Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used except for correlation and coordination of planning with State governments and with political subdivisions of such States," and insert in lieu thereof "Provided further, That of this appropriation, not less than $300,000 shall be used for coordination of planning with State governments and with political subdivisions of such States."

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, as I understand the reading of the amendment, it would provide that no less than $300,000 shall be spent. Did the Senator from Tennessee mean that no more than $300,000 shall be spent?

Mr. McKELLAR. It means that no less than that amount shall be spent. I believe that $300,000 should be spent in cooperation with the States.

Mr. WHITE. The amendment means that no less than the amount stated shall be spent. In other words, that amount must be spent.

Mr. McKELLAR. That amount must be spent.

Mr. WHITE. At least $300,000?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]. If he were present he would vote "yea." If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the Senator from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] are detained on important public business.

The Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK], and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. SCRUGHAM], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] are detained on official business.

The Senators from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS and Mr. BROOKS], who are paired on this question, are absent attending a meeting of the Illinois Congressional Delegation, together with State officials of Illinois and representatives of Government departments, in connection with the flood problem in Illinois. I am advised that if present and voting, the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] would vote "yea," and the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS] would vote "nay."

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE] is paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. I am advised that if present and voting the Senator from West Virginia would vote

"yea," and the Senator from Massachusetts would vote "nay."

The Senator from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK] is paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD]. I am advised that if present and voting the Senator from Utah would vote "yea," and the Senator from Minnesota would vote "nay."

Mr. McNARY. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] is necessarily absent. I am advised that if present he would vote "nay."

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] is absent because of illness. I am informed that if present he would vote "nay."

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. THOMAS] is absent because of the death of his wife.

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 43, as follows:

YEAS—31

Aiken	Guffey	Reed

So Mr. McKELLAR's amendment as modified to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the committee amendment as previously amended.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I ask for a yea and nay vote on the committee amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TAFT. I merely wish to say that every argument made against the Board heretofore is just as good against the amendment now pending. It is not that anyone wishes to prevent planning; I think we should undertake planning, and in my opinion the George committee will undertake planning. The way to begin any thorough planning, any planning not based on a wholly false foundation, is to begin over again, and the only way he can begin again is by abolishing the Board.

Five hundred and thirty-four thousand dollars is just a drop in the bucket. The question is not the amount of money, it is not whether we want to go ahead with planning, but whether we want to be led in that planning to a complete collapse in the United States, whether we are going on with that false premise, with a program which, in my opinion, will cost a huge amount every year if we ever start on it, to the complete destruction of this Republic. We must decide whether we want to get back to reasonable, constitutional planning.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, as I recall, with one exception the entire membership of the Committee on Appropriations agreed to this provision. There may have been two against it, but after a vote, like that taken here a while ago, this proposal was voted in, and I hope the $200,000 to provide for cooperation with the States will be agreed to.

Mr. TUNNELL. Mr. President, others may do as they like, of course, but from my own standpoint I am not willing to take the responsibility of voting against intelligent planning for after-the-war America, either because of any hatred of the administration, or from any question of relationship which some of the Board might have to some of the administration. In my opinion there will come a time when people will inquire as to the motives of those who see fit to vote against planning for such tremendous matters as will face the American people, not alone in the immediate future, but for some time to come.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I wish to take only about 2 minutes. In the committee I worked with those who sought to preserve the National Resources Planning Board. I offered an amendment, which was adopted by the subcommittee, to grant $534,000 for that purpose. In the full committee there was a tie vote, and the amendment was lost. It is my opinion that the best thing to do, in view of the circumstances, in view of the strong prejudice existing against the National Resources Planning Board, is to wipe the slate clean and drop out the amendment reported by the committee.

In view of the circumstances, in view of the vote taken this afternoon, in view of the feeling that the board has boondoggled along through the years, spending a lot of money and getting nowhere, I can see no advantage in continuing the present set-up. I am not trying to pass upon the justice or injustice of the feeling held; I am trying to deal realistically with a hard established fact. My opinion is that we had better wipe the slate clean and begin again, and the $200,000 left to the Board for a limited 2 years would amount to nothing. I think the proper and wise thing to do is to reject the amendment.

Mr. NYE rose.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I see that the Senator from North Dakota has risen, and I hope he will say what he has in his mind. He has called my attention to a statement I just made which I wish to correct. I stated that I thought there was only one vote in the committee against the amendment. The Senator calls my attention to the fact that there was a roll call on the amendment, and that it was agreed to by 11 to 9. I have examined the roll call, and I find the Senator from North Dakota is exactly correct, and I desired to make this statement to the Senate. I am very sorry I fell into an inadvertent error.

Mr. NYE. I was sure the Senator from Tennessee would not want to leave the wrong impression, and that if the matter were called to his attention he would correct the statement, as he has done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). Again referring to my pair, I am advised that if present the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] would vote as I am about to vote. I am therefore at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. PEPPER. I announce that my colleague [Mr. ANDREWS] is absent because of illness. If present he would vote "yea."

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] is absent because of illness. I am informed that if present he would vote "nay."

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is absent because of illness.

So the committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to as follows:

NATIONAL RESOURCES PLANNING BOARD

Salaries and expenses: For all expenses necessary for the work of the National Resources Planning Board, to perform the functions transferred to said Board on July 1, 1939, and for all expenses necessary for the planning activities of said Board in the interest of national defense, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; contract stenographic reporting services; printing and binding (not to exceed $8,000); purchase of books of reference and periodicals; expenses of attendance at meetings concerned with development, conservation, and use of the resources of the Nation; not to exceed $20,000 for traveling expenses, $200,000: Provided, That no part of the funds appropriated under this item shall be used for the performance of any functions or duties other than the functions heretofore authorized by law to be performed by the Federal Employment Stabilization Board: Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be used except for correlation and coordination of planning with State governments and with political subdivisions of such States.

The appropriation herein made for the National Resources Planning Board shall constitute the total amount to be available for obligation by such agency during the fiscal year 1944 and shall not be supplemented by funds from any source.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendm nt submitted by the Senator from Tennessee on behalf of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 42, in line 25, before the period, it is proposed to insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That the Administrator may, with the approval of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, transfer to this authorization or to an authorization of a constituent unit from funds available for administrative expenses of the constituent units or the Office of the Administrator of the National Housing Agency such additional sums as represent a consolidation in the Office of the Administrator or in a constituent unit of any of the administrative functions of the National Housing Agency; but no such transfer of funds shall be made unless the consolidation will result in a reduction in manpower and a savings in administrative expenses, which savings shall not be used for administrative expenses but instead shall be returned to or remain in the funds from which administrative expenses are drawn under this authorization."

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I wish to appeal to the able acting leader, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], and the Senator in charge of the bill [Mr. MCKELLAR], if we might at this time recess until tomorrow at 11 a. m.?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I sincerely hope that such an order will not be made. The joint resolution providing for extension of the Trade Agreements Act is before the Senate, and has been under debate for 1 day. The act expires on June 12. Because of the fact that so many Senators were absent on Tuesday and Wednesday we had to forego the session of the Senate on those days, and I hope consideration of the appropriation bill may be concluded this afternoon so that we may resume consideration of the joint resolution extending the Trade Agreements Act the first thing tomorrow morning. I do not wish to proceed with it this afternoon.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I am sure that the amendment which has been proposed by the Senator from Tennessee on behalf of the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] requires some discussion, and, in my judgment, it will require considerable discussion. I think that, inasmuch as the Senate met at 11 o'clock today, we might as well recess now and meet again tomorrow at 11 o'clock.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I spoke to the distinguished Senator in charge of the bill [Mr. MCKELLAR] and he said he thought there might not be much debate concerning an amendment which the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] intends to propose, dealing with the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

Mr. MCKELLAR. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] has an amendment to which I see no particular objection. I see no objection to the amendment being adopted and going to conference. I hope the Senate may agree to that amendment and get it out of the way. If the Senator will have his amendment read I am sure it will take but a minute to consider.

Mr. MCNARY. Is the proposed amendment a modification of the amendment offered yesterday?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, my amendment has not as yet been offered.

Mr. MCKELLAR. No; that amendment has not as yet been offered.

Mr. MCNARY. I am directing my remarks to the amendment offered yesterday by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] on behalf of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. There is strong opposition to that amendment throughout the country.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Let us see if we cannot get down to that in a moment, and I will speak to the Senator from Oregon about it. Let us see now if we cannot agree to the H. O. L. C. amendment.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the committee amendment on page 46, beginning in line 15 and ending in line 21, was agreed to may be reconsidered, and when that is done I shall offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, to the committee amendment on page 46 I offer an amendment, which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment on page 46, line 21, before the period, it is proposed to insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That the Home Owners' Loan Corporation shall prepare a plan for its liquidation by July 1, 1945, and shall submit a report of such plan to the Congress, setting forth the terms of liquidation and such other information as may be necessary to inform the Congress of the disposition of the property of such corporation while in the process of liquidation: Provided further, That the Federal Home Owners' Loan Bank Commissioner, on behalf of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, shall transmit to the Congress semiannually during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, a progress report with respect to liquidation, showing all dispositions of the property of such Corporation by States during the period of liquidation, together with the amounts of Federal funds expended in the process of liquidation, and any losses incurred in the use of such funds during each quarterly period of the fiscal year 1944."

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. BYRD. Yes, I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. What is the period of final liquidation proposed?

Mr. BYRD. The amendment does not fix a definite period. It simply provides that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation shall present a plan for liquidation.

Mr. OVERTON. Within what time?

Mr. BYRD. Up to July 1, 1945, and then, of course, Congress can either accept or reject that plan as it sees fit. It further requires that semi-annual statements be made as to the liquidation now going forward, so the Congress may keep in touch with it.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. The amendment does not propose that liquidation shall be made.

Mr. BYRD. No; that a plan of liquidation shall be prepared.

Mr. MCKELLAR. No; I could not consent to anything like that. It merely directs that a plan be submitted by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation itself. I see no objection to that. The Congress should call on it for information at any time it desires.

Mr. BYRD. It requires semiannual reports as to the progress now being made in liquidation.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. I understand that the amendment of the Senator from Virginia makes no very material change in the present situation. Reports are now prepared from time to time, formally and informally, by the H. O. L. C. and they are submitted to the Committee on Banking and Currency, through which such matters clear in the Senate. I do not understand that the proposed amendment makes any material change in general procedure in that respect.

Mr. BYRD. It makes this change, that it asks for a report as to a plan for liquidation as of July 1, 1945, and then requires semiannual reports to the Congress, and it would then be a matter of public record as to the liquidation which is already going forward.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. I am not raising any objection to the amendment at all. I am simply calling attention to the fact that reports practically similar to what this amendment calls for are now being submitted from time to time. It is true there is no existing specific provision that they should be submitted to the Congress, but as they do come to the Banking and Currency Committee I presume they are a part of the records available to the Congress. I do not object to the amendment at all, but I do not think it makes any substantial change in what is being done now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] to the committee amendment on page 46, after line 21.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment, as amended.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. A parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Have all the committee amendments been disposed of?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No. The question is on the committee amendment, as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask that consideration of the amendment which I offered on behalf of the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] may go over until tomorrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, consideration of the amendment will be passed over until tomorrow.

The clerk will state the next committee amendment passed over.

The next amendment which had been passed over was, under the heading "National Housing Agency—Federal Home Loan Bank Administration", on page 43, line 2, after the words "total of," to strike out "$8,310,734, and such corporation shall be liquidated as provided by section 4 (k) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 to the extent necessitated by the reduction of administrative personnel herein required, and the expenses incident to such liquidation shall be considered as nonadministrative expenses for the purposes hereof. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation shall not incur for administrative expenses in excess of $833,333.33 for any month from July to December 1943, inclusive, nor in excess of $208,333.33 for any month from January to June 1944, inclusive" and insert "$12,142,200."

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, is the amendment the modification as expressed by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] in his amendment?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; it has nothing to do with that. The Glass amendment has not been submitted.

Mr. McNARY. Very well. It is not the present purpose of the Senator to submit it, I take it.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is true.

Mr. McNARY. Very well; I have no objection whatsoever. I objected to that amendment because it attempted to exclude the private housing agencies of the country from operation, and was rejected by the House. That is the reason for my opposition. Now that that amendment is not to be offered, I am content to go forward.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 43, lines 2 to 12.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment which had been passed over was, under the heading "Title II—General Provisions," on page 70, after line 24, to strike out:

SEC. 205. Unless otherwise specified and until July 1, 1944, no part of any appropriation contained in this or any other act shall be used to pay the compensation of any officer or employee of the Government of the United States, or of any agency the majority of the stock of which is owned by the Government of the United States, whose post of duty is in continental United States unless such person is a citizen of the United States or a person in the service of the United States on the date of this enactment who, being eligible for citizenship, had theretofore filed a declaration of intention to become a citizen or who owes allegiance to the United States.

And insert:

SEC. 205. Unless otherwise specified and until July 1, 1944, no part of any appropriation contained in this or any other act shall be used to pay the compensation of any officer or employee of the Government of the United States (including any agency the majority of the stock of which is owned by the Government of the United States) whose post of duty is in continental United States unless such person (1) is a citizen of the United States, (2) is a person in the service of the United States on the date of enactment of this act who, being eligible for citizenship, had filed a declaration of intention to become a citizen of the United States prior to such date, or (3), is a person who owes allegiance to the United States.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LODGE. Has the committee amendment been acted upon?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Not as yet. The amendment went over on the request of the Senator from Oregon.

The amendment submitted by the Senator from Louisiana will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 71, in line 23, after the word "States", it is proposed to insert "Provided, That for the purpose of this section, an affidavit signed by any such person shall be considered prima facie evidence that the requirements of this section with respect to his status have been complied with: Provided further, That any person making a false affidavit shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both: Provided further, That the above penal clause shall be in addition to, and not in substitution for, any other provisions of existing law."

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I should like to explain the amendment. I understand that the amendment will be accepted by the Senator from Tennessee who is in charge of the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator that I do not have the right to accept the amendment on behalf of the committee. So far as I am concerned, I do not express any opposition to the amendment at this time.

Mr. OVERTON. But in the committee meeting I think it was understood that the amendment would be accepted.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senate has to pass on it.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, the amendment relates to the citizenship clause. That clause provides in effect, that no compensation shall be paid under this appropriation Act or under any other Act to anyone who is not a citizen of the United States, or who has not filed a declaration of citizenship, or who is not a person who owes allegiance to the United States.

There is no objection at all to the House provision as clarified by the Senate committee amendment. The purpose of my amendment is to make the administration of the provision a practical one. As the provision now stands, disbursing officers of any department or agency of the Government will have to conduct an inquiry in order to determine whether any particular person is a citizen of the United States or has filed a declaration of citizenship or owes allegiance to the United States, and he will have to determine that question at his peril. If the disbursing officer should make a payment to any officer or employee who happened not to qualify under the restrictions and limitations of the provision, he would make the payment at his risk.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. OVERTON. I am glad to yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. The Senator may have provided in the amendment for the point I am about to raise; when I heard the amendment read I did not notice whether that had been done, because I heard it then for the first time: Suppose that, subsequent to the disbursement, the proof is developed contrary to the statement in the affidavit. Does the Senator's amendment provide for recoupment?

Mr. OVERTON. The Senator's amendment does not provide for recoupment. However, of course as a legal proposition I suggest that the Government would be entitled to recover any amount which had been paid to one who was not entitled to it. I do not think there is any question about that. The affidavit will constitute only prima facie evidence.

However, my amendment does provide that anyone who makes a false affidavit shall be penalized by being imprisoned for not more than 1 year or by paying a fine of not more than $1,000.

Mr. AUSTIN. I should suggest, Mr. President, that if the Senator also provided in his amendment that, in case of false statement, the person making such statement shall be liable in a civil action for recovery of moneys obtained, the matter would then be without question.

Mr. OVERTON. I have no objection to that, but I think it would follow as a matter of law.

Mr. AUSTIN. I am not so certain, in view of the language of the proposal, that it would follow. The Government here is becoming a volunteer in making the payment. The Government says, "Now we shall make the payment on a mere affidavit." Then, as a matter of law, has not the Government estopped itself from any civil recovery, if it says only that, "We shall prosecute this man for making a false statement, if it is false"?

That is a question which could be entirely avoided by inserting merely two or three words in the Senator's amendment.

Mr. OVERTON. I shall be very glad to undertake to dictate such a provision now if the clerk will take it down, or I shall be very glad to yield to the Senator from Vermont, in order that he may do so.

Mr. AUSTIN. I am sure the Senator can do so better than I could.

Mr. OVERTON. I am not so sure about that.

Mr. President, I will modify the amendment. After the words "existing law", I insert the following: "Provided further, That any payment made to any officer or employee contrary to the provisions of this section shall be recoverable in action by the Federal Government."

Is that language satisfactory?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. OVERTON. Now, Mr. President, let me make the further statement that when the subversive-activities clause was before the Senate several years ago, I was either appointed as a committee of one to draft an appropriate provision respecting the subversive-activities clause, or else I appointed myself as a committee of one; I have forgotten which was the case.

At any rate, I devoted a great deal of thought to that matter. I consulted those in the administration who had to do with the disbursements and who made the payments; and I came to the conclusion that, among other things, it would be wrong to constitute each disbursing officer a tribunal to determine whether one was guilty of subversive activities or was a member of an organization the purpose of which was the overthrow of the Government of the United States. Therefore, I provided in the clause that for the purposes of that clause, an affidavit shall be considered prima facie evidence that the person making the affidavit does not advocate and is not a member of an organization, that advocates the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force or violence.

After considerable discussion, that clause was adopted as a protection to the disbursing officers. It was agreed to by the Senate and by the House, and has been incorporated in innumerable provisions of appropriation acts since then.

The purpose of the pending amendment is similar to the purpose of the amendment about the overthrow-of-the-Government clause. That purpose is that an affidavit shall constitute merely prima facie evidence, so as to protect the disbursing officer, that one qualifies for the reception of payment under the provisions of this section. Then there follows a provision imposing a severe penalty upon one who makes a false affidavit; and that penalty is in addition to other penalties prescribed by law—as, for example, the penalty on one who commits perjury.

Mr. President, I think the amendment should be agreed to, and not only should be taken to conference, but should be agreed to in conference between the House and the Senate.

In the last deficiency bill the House inserted a similar provision incorporating what I have in the pending amendment, omitting, however, the penalty clause, but making the affidavit prima facie evidence, so as to protect the disbursing officers. That was approved by the Appropriations Committee of the House. I think, therefore, that the House conferees will approve this amendment if it is adopted by the Senate. I understand that the amendment is agreeable to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]. I therefore ask that it be agreed to by the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I know that the Senator from Louisiana is an expert on this particular subject. I distinctly recall when this subject first arose, about 3 years ago. It is my recollection that we dealt with it in a satisfactory manner at that time. I would appreciate being informed why it is necessary to deal with it further at the present time.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, the provision to which the Senator from Massachusetts refers applied to those who belong to an organization which advocates the overthrow of the Government, or who themselves advocate the overthrow of the Government. They are not entitled to employment or compensation. This is a new clause in reference to citizenship; and I should like to throw the same safeguards around the citizenship clause that were thrown around what might be called the Communist clause.

Mr. LODGE. I thank the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] to the committee amendment, on page 71, line 23.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the next committee amendment passed over.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I do not believe there are any further committee amendments except the one referred to by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] a while ago, which the committee has directed me to offer. I stated that under those circumstances it would be necessary for me to offer it. I hope, with the consent of the Senator from Oregon, we may take it to conference. If there is any trouble about the amendment we can thrash it out in conference and see what can be done with it.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I always try to be considerate. I very strenuously object to the amendment. The Senator now advises me that he is bound by a committee commitment.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Committee action.

Mr. MCNARY. I like the other word just as well.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Or commitment.

Mr. MCNARY. I do not wish to embarrass the Senator from Tennessee. I wish to help him out. He is in a hole. If he merely wishes to take the amendment to conference, read it over, and discharge his duty in that fashion, I will go along.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee on behalf of the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 42, line 25, before the period, it is proposed to insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That the Administrator may, with the approval of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, transfer to this authorization or to an authorization of a constituent unit from funds available for administrative expenses of the constituent units or the office of the Administrator of the National Housing Agency such additional sums as represent a consolidation in the office of the Administrator or in a constituent unit of any of the administrative functions of the National Housing Agency; but no such transfer of funds shall be made unless the consolidation will result in a reduction in manpower and a savings in administrative expenses, which savings shall not be used for administrative expenses but instead shall be returned to or remain in the funds from which administrative expenses are drawn under this authorization."

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, let me explain the amendment. There has been a consolidation of a number of departments, and the head of the National Housing Agency came before our committee and said that it was possible for them to make a further consolidation of agencies and save the Government money. This amendment was drawn for that express purpose; and it is provided in the amendment itself that such consolidations may be made only in the event they save the Government money and also save manpower. I invite the attention of the Senator from Ohio and other Senators who may be interested to the language on page 2 of the amendment:

> But no such transfer of funds shall be made unless the consolidation will result in a reduction in manpower and a savings in administrative expenses, which savings shall not be used for administrative expenses but instead shall be returned to or remain in the funds from which administrative expenses are drawn under this authorization.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee on behalf of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I think I was on my feet before the announcement of the Chair that the amendment was agreed to. I wish to ask the Senator from Tennessee a question regarding the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment was agreed to?

Mr. TAFT. I understood the Senator from Oregon to object to the amendment. Perhaps I did not speak up as quickly as I should have.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the amendment was agreed to be reconsidered.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I hope that will be done.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote by which the amendment was agreed to is reconsidered.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, under the Overman Act the President may consolidate bureaus.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. TAFT. Would this amendment confer upon the Federal Housing Administrator the power to consolidate bureaus without referring the question to the President? If so, it seems to me it is clearly additional legislation, and not proper in an appropriation bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is entirely true. The amendment is hedged about in this way:

> The Administrator may, with the approval of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget—

That is a part of the Presidential office—> transfer to this authorization or to an authorization of a constituent unit from funds available for administrative expenses of the constituent units.

And so forth. The consolidation must meet two requirements. It must save both manpower and money to the Government. I can see no possible objection to the amendment. The transfer may not be made unless the consolidation saves both manpower and money.

Mr. TAFT. My difficulty is that in the National Housing Agency there are consolidated three completely separate organizations.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. TAFT. One is the F. H. A.; another is the Home Loan Bank System; and the third is the F. P. H. A. Those agencies are very jealous of one another and of other bureaus. It seems to me somewhat doubtful whether we should confer upon the Federal Housing Administrator the right to take a bureau away from one of those agencies and give it to another, or take it into his own office, even if such a transfer would save money.

Mr. McKELLAR. It may not be done unless it saves both money and manpower.

Mr. TAFT. It seems to me to be a matter of such importance that it ought to go to the President himself. He made the consolidation under certain conditions. It seems to me that if there are to be further consolidations they ought to be made under the Overman Act and not under an appropriation bill authorizing the Administrator to make these rearrangements.

Mr. McKELLAR. Would the Senator prefer to have the amendment read:

> That the Administrator may, with the approval of the President—

And so forth?

Mr. TAFT. Yes; I think that would entirely remove my objection.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I modify the amendment by striking out, on page 1, line 2, the words "Director of the Bureau of the Budget" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "President of the United States."

Mr. TAFT. I withdraw my objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be modified accordingly.

The question is on agreeing to the modified amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] on behalf of the committee.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, have the committee amendments been concluded?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The committee amendments have been concluded. The bill is before the Senate and open to further amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 66, line 7, before the period, it is proposed to insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the purchase of oleomargarine or butter substitutes, except for cooking purposes, but if the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs finds at any time that the procurement of an adequate butter supply is not feasible, this appropriation shall be available for the purchase of oleomargarine or butter substitutes to the extent that such administrator finds to be necessary to meet the requirements of the Veterans' Administration facilities for other than cooking purposes."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief explanation of the proposed amendment. For a number of years similar appropriation bills have carried the following limitation:

> Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the purchase of oleomargarine or butter substitutes except for cooking purposes.

It was originally placed in the law because it was found that in some of the Government institutions oleomargarine, or butter substitutes, were being served to the inmates thereof in lieu of butter. It is now, of course, a well-known fact that there is a shortage of butter in the United States, and the limitation referred to was omitted from this bill when it passed the House of Representatives. Language similar to the amendment which I have just offered was incorporated in the first deficiency bill.

The language, as Senators well know from a study of it, does not bar the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs from utilizing oleomargarine or other butter substitutes for veterans in veterans' hospitals, except where he is in a position to obtain butter. In other words, he may buy it when butter is not available. The desire is to maintain this principle in the statute, but to recognize the emergency which now exists.

I feel certain that the Congress will wish to continue the policy which it has followed for a number of years of providing butter for the inmates of and persons assigned to veterans' hospitals wherever it is available to be furnished as a part of the regular diet.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I think it may require some time for the proper consideration of the amendment. It may be advisable to allow the matter to go over until tomorrow. If it is not put over, of course we shall have to proceed now. It is the same old fight being made against the South on the oleomargarine question. I do not see any necessity of going into it on this occasion. The other House declined to go into it. It is an attempt against the use of products of cottonseed oil in the interest of butter.

I had always understood that when people knew what they wanted to buy and what they wanted to use, they ought to be permitted to exercise their free choice. I feel the same principle of free choice should apply to veterans in hospitals.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, if I may be pardoned for intruding, it is now nearly 6 o'clock, and if we get into this subject discussion is likely to develop similar to that which I have seen develop in the past. I think we had better adjourn until tomorrow at 11 o'clock.

Mr. BANKHEAD. We may as well.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I do not want to take an improper attitude. I realize that the hour is late. House Joint Resolution 111 was reported last week. To accommodate some Senators, I put it over until Monday. Then, to accommodate still other Senators, I stated that I would not ask for a Senate session on Tuesday and on Wednesday of this week. In the meantime I consented that the pending bill might be considered. I had no idea there would be a prolongation of the discussion on the bill. I shall ask the leadership if this matter is to go over until tomorrow.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, if the Senator from Georgia will permit me, this matter may be disposed of on a point of order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I wish to ask if the amendment would not be considered in the nature of legislation and subject to a point of order. Our committee considered it, and we had a hearing upon it. The Senator from Wisconsin appeared, and the committee was of the impression that during the war we needed all the butterfats and substitutes we could get, and that the provision should not be inserted. I understand that the other House feels the same way about it. I am inclined to think that this may be treated in the nature of legislation, and I make a point of order on that ground.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair rules that all after line 4 is subject to the point of order. Does the Senator from Wisconsin wish to reoffer the amendment in a modified form?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, in view of the situation which exists so far as the purchase of butter is concerned, I would not wish to absolutely tie the hands of the Veterans' Administrator and prevent him from utilizing butter substitutes if butter is not available, even though the Senate might agree to the amendment. The Senate and the House have both incorporated this language, or similar language, in similar appropriation bills, as well as other bills, for over 10 years, to my certain knowledge. However, in view of the butter shortage, and the difficulty of obtaining it, I should not wish to offer the amendment in its original form, as it exists in the present statutes, because I believe that some latitude must be allowed the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs in instances—rare though they may be—when he may be unable to purchase butter for the hospitals distributed over the United States.

Therefore, if the point of order against the amendment in its present form shall be sustained by the Chair, the Senator from Wisconsin will be forced to accept the ruling.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a statement prepared by me with respect to estimates submitted by the Budget Bureau.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Under the provisions of the pending bill, the appropriations of the Budget Bureau have been reduced from the amount requested by this Bureau.

At this time I will not discuss the details of this reduction, but I do want to take this opportunity to say that I have come in close contact with the Budget Bureau and its director, Mr. Smith, during my service as chairman of the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures, and I think it is only fair to say that the Budget Bureau is perhaps the only agency of the Government that is showing any concern with respect to holding down governmental expenses.

I have not always agreed with the Budget Bureau. I, of course, know it is under the control of the Executive and must carry out the Executive's policies, but I think the Budget Bureau has made earnest efforts to hold down needless Government expenditures and to bring about orderly and consistent methods of budget procedure, which I believe to be very vital in view of the vast magnitude of our expenditures.

New activities are constantly being placed upon the Budget Bureau. For example, it now has, by congressional enactment, the control of all reports and questionnaires, and has already effected a reduction of 14 percent in these questionnaires as instituted by the different agencies of the Government.

I am making this statement so that as one Member of the Senate it may be understood that while not agreeing in all the actions of the Budget Bureau, I do know that insofar as the Budget Director himself is concerned, he and his organization are doing all they can to eliminate useless and unnecessary expenditures.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate and open to further amendment. If there be no further amendments to be offered, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H. R. 1762) was read the third time and passed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, ask for a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. GLASS, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. TRUMAN, Mr. GREEN, Mr. McKELLAR, Mr. NYE, and Mr. BRIDGES conferees on the part of the Senate.

PHOSPHATIC FERTILIZER

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the body of the RECORD at this point a statement prepared by me on the subject of the use of phosphatic fertilizer manufactured by the T. V. A.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY BEGINS TO SHIP AMMONIUM NITRATE TO BE USED AS FERTILIZER ON DEMONSTRATION FARMS IN 14 STATES

This week the Tennessee Valley Authority is shipping ammonium nitrate from Muscle Shoals in Alabama to 14 different States. Because requirements of the War Department for explosives have been reduced this new product can be made available for fertilizer use on the same test demonstration farms which have been participating in the program through which Tennessee Valley Authority's highly concentrated phosphatic fertilizer has been distributed during the past 8 years.

The results obtained by the use of this new product on these demonstration farms will furnish practical and scientific information which will be exceedingly valuable if, because of further reduction in the need for explosives the capacity of other plants, those under private operation, becomes available for use as a fertilizer on the land. Six thousand tons of ammonium nitrate, high in nitrogen content, containing over 34 percent of the vital mineral and conditioned with lime, will be distributed from Muscle Shoals to demonstration farms in May and June. This week's shipments will go to Kentucky, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, Missouri, Wisconsin, and New York, and there is a possibility that some of the product may also be provided for demonstration farms in Oregon, Vermont, Ohio, and New Mexico.

An additional quantity above that allocated for use on demonstration farms will be produced by Tennessee Valley Authority, but according to regulations of the War Production Board it must be made available for distribution by the industry under allocations by the War Production Board. These allocations, I am informed, adhere to the formula of historical fertilizer use. I do not pretend to know the best way to distribute a material of which we have a critical shortage, but I want to go on record now as questioning the desirability of freezing any longer in any way the "historical" method of handling fertilizer in the United States. Historically the marketing policies of the fertilizer industry have made impossible the full replenishment of the mineral content taken from the soil by cropping. The worn-out lands of the South, the dust bowls of the West are footnote comments to the "historical use" of plant food from commercial sources.

I should prefer to see more recent history honored. I should like to remind the antiquarians in the fertilizer industry, the War Production Board and the Agriculture Department that history has been made since 1933. I should like to be assured that in decisions affecting fertilizer and war food production the history of Tennesseee Valley Authority's demonstration program in the past 8 years had not been excluded from consideration. I reviewed that program on this floor recently, and summarized the results obtained since this one agency of government had the courage and the vision to turn its back on the tradition of the past and provide a new plant food to make a better history for the future.

In my judgment it was an important moment in our agricultural history when the Board of Tennessee Valley Authority decided in 1933 to use the facilities of Muscle Shoals to produce phosphatic plant food. When they entered into cooperative agreements with the extension services of the land-grant colleges in the several States to inaugurate a demonstration program to try out the new fertilizer developed another paragraph in history was recorded, and when more than 40,000 farmers agreed to change their farming practices to use the new materials, the writing of a whole new chapter was begun. Those farmers paid the freight, they bought the lime that most soils needed in addition. They took a chance in order to participate in a great new program to relieve a basic mineral deficit in their soil. The results achieved have been magnificent. Those demonstration farmers made agricultural history. They proved what soil scientists had long contended—that by the abundant use of phosphate combined with the planting of legumes, nitrogen would be drawn from the air and fertility restored to the soil with profit to the farmers. They demonstrated a plan which will insure the efficient use of manpower and machines and guarantee full production from every acre, every crop, and every animal.

Since 1935, 42,000 farmers in 29 States have participated in the demonstration program. On their farms the Tennessee Valley Authority has shown what happens when P_2O_5 is made available to the soil in highly concentrated phosphatic plant food. Those farmers have used an average of 17 pounds of P_2O_5 on every acre of crop and meadow and pasture every year. And as a consequence, on their farms they have increased production of meat and eggs and dairy products, the foods we need today, by an average of over 30 percent.

That was the average use of P_2O_5 and the average increase in production. It includes the results obtained on the poorest land, by the least industrious farmer, and reflects the experience of those beset by special tribulations of inclement weather or by personal misfortunes. On the most successful farms the increase in production of war-scarce foods has gone up over 60 percent. To make that startling record, 30 pounds of P_2O_5 has been applied to every cleared acre. On the same land, the same men, with the addition only of this new plant food have increased their food production without more manpower or more machinery. This is history, too. But it is not the history honored by the fertilizer industry or the experts who advise the War Production Board. Theirs is the history which tolerates a use of 2 pounds of P_2O_5 per acre. That was the average use of phosphate on the farms of the rest of the country, while the demonstration farms stepped up their use as high as 30 pounds.

Devotion to the policies sanctified as history by the industry and the so-called experts who parrot their contentions, limits phosphate use and prompts the specious claim that we have a surplus capacity for production of P_2O_5 in this country. Of course we have a surplus if the farms of the country continue to be limited to 2 pounds per acre by the marketing policies of the industry. If those policies are permitted forever to restrict our food production, then we will always have a capacity for production of the precious mineral of about 600,000 tons beyond anticipated demands. Preoccupied with preserving the habits of the past, no effort has yet been made by the industry, or our agricultural agencies to get that surplus used on the land.

Yet if that much P_2O_5 were applied to the soil and if the results were similar to those experienced on demonstration farms we would have 24,000,000,000 additional pounds of milk this year. That is more than we need. As a matter of fact, the use of only one-tenth of the idle commercial capacity for production of P_2O_5 would mean that our goal of milk production could be reached without more manpower or more machinery. But the capacity is not being used. The land is not getting the mineral. New acres are opened instead. Men and machines are wastefully employed. Formulas of historical use are cited as sacred standards, and the experience of more than 40,000 farmers over 8 years is ignored.

Tennessee Valley Authority does not agree with the optimistic statements which picture this country with a surplus capacity for P_2O_5 production. It reports that we have a critical shortage, if the need of the land for vitality to produce the food we need is taken as the measure of demand. I think the Authority's judgment is likely to be correct on this subject. I like the kind of history it has written in the past few years. I know what this program has accomplished in the South. And I know how disastrous it will be if the supply of P_2O_5 for fertilizer is restricted. Such a restriction threatens.

Part of Tennessee Valley Authority capacity devoted to phosphatic fertilizer production has had to be turned over to make elemental phosphorus for combat uses, and substantial demands for shipment of this highly concentrated fertilizer to Great Britain have to be met. To meet this situation, Tennessee Valley Authority recommended almost 2 years ago that additional capacity be provided in order that the supply of phosphate for demonstration farms should not be reduced because of these additional demands. Congress agreed with Tennessee Valley Authority's position and authorized construction of a plant at Mobile in my own State. Funds were appropriated, designs were completed, a site was purchased, but priorities for the use of material have been denied. Of course, such a plant requires substantial amounts of steel. But every ship load of this concentrated phosphatic fertilizer applied to British soil means that seven shiploads of food are spared a crossing.

Every pound of P_2O_5 used on our land relieves the shortage of nitrogen, releases men and machines. I wonder if those relationships have been balanced. I am afraid the decision has been reached by the very men whose selective sense of history does not include the experience of the past 10 years, who do not know the story of a fertilizer program based on the need of the land, rather than the settled habits of men.

Again it is another page in history as Tennessee Valley Authority begins to send out this new plant food, as the capacity of the plants at Muscle Shoals make one more contribution toward breaking down the mineral limitations of our soil. The same farmers will cooperate and the same demonstration methods will be used as 6,000 tons of this new product are used on the soil. I know it will be effectively applied but I am concerned about the use of the amount to be made available for distribution by the industry according to the formula of "historical use." Upon inquiry I am advised by the office of Tennessee Valley Authority that the Authority proposed a different method for distribution of the balance. It wanted farmer cooperatives to have its product, believing that a better educational program would be provided. That recommendation was rejected by the War Production Board. I have asked for a report. I want to know the details. For we ought to know, if additional quantities of ammonium nitrate become available for fertilizer as military demands decline, how it is likely to be used. The War Production Board, the War Food Administration, all agricultural agencies will have a basis for decision when this two months' test is over. On July 1, this brief demonstration will be history, too.

I do not want its results ignored as the implications of the program with respect to phosphate use have been evaded. Problems of storage and shipping, problems of application will have been encountered. If every difficulty is resolved and if more material is available, we can have high hopes for our next planting season—provided only that fertilizer history is brought up to date. Unless it is, the benefits of this program will be restricted to participating farmers. We will know when the experience of this decade has been added to the knowledge of the past in the circles where fertilizer experts move. It will be the day that private industry produces P_2O_5 to the full capacity of its existing plants. It will be the day priorities are granted for the Mobile plant. It will be the day when our agricultural experts face the basic problem of increased food production, when recommendations for fertilizer production and plans for distribution are based on the need of the land, not the habits of farmers or the interest of a private industry in the historical method of treating soil exhaustion.

EXTENSION OF RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate resume the consideration of House Joint Resolution 111, to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending amendment is on page 1, beginning on line 8.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, it is too late to proceed with the consideration of the joint resolution at this time, and I am willing that a recess may be taken.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session,

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations (and withdrawing two nominations under the War Manpower Commission), which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received and nominations withdrawn, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

As in executive session,

The following favorable reports of nominations were submitted:

By Mr. GEORGE, from the Committee on Finance:

Wirt G. Bowman, of Nogales, Ariz., to be collector of customs for customs collection district No. 26, with headquarters at Nogales, Ariz.

By Mr. WHEELER, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

Basil Manly, of the District of Columbia, to be a member of the Federal Power Commission for the term expiring June 22, 1948 (reappointment).

By Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs:

Rear Admiral William A. Glassford, Jr., United States Navy, to be a vice admiral in the Navy, for temporary service, to rank from the 19th of May 1943;

Rear Admiral Raymond A. Spruance to be a vice admiral in the Navy, for temporary service, to rank from the 15th day of May 1943; and Capt. Wilder DuP. Baker to be a rear admiral in the Navy, for temporary service, to rank from the 13th day of July 1942.

By Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads:

Sundry postmasters.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, as in executive session I ask that the Senate confirm certain nominations on the executive calendar, which I ask to have stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will proceed to state the nominations.

THE ARMY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Army.

Mr. HILL. I ask that the nominations in the Army be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

THE MARINE CORPS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Marine Corps.

Mr. HILL. I ask that the nominations in the Marine Corps be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nominations in the Marine Corps are confirmed en bloc.

Mr. HILL. I ask that the President be notified forthwith of all nominations confirmed this day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the President will be notified forthwith.

RECESS

Mr. HILL. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock a. m. tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Friday, May 28, 1943, at 11 o'clock a. m.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate May 27 (legislative day of May 24), 1943:

PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

James H. Flanagan, of the District of Columbia, to be a member of the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia for the term of 3 years from July 1, 1943 (reappointment).

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS

Wirt G. Bowman, of Nogales, Ariz., to be collector of customs for customs collection district No. 26, with headquarters at Nogales, Ariz., to fill an existing vacancy.

UNITED STATES PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

The following surgeons to be temporary senior surgeons in the Regular Corps of the United States Public Health Service, effective from June 1, 1943:

Oswald F. Hedley
Thomas H. Tomlinson, Jr.

The following passed assistant surgeon to be temporary senior surgeon in the Regular Corps of the United States Public Health Service, effective from June 1, 1943:

William E. Graham

The following passed assistant surgeons to be temporary surgeons in the Regular Corps of the United States Public Health Service, effective from June 1, 1943:

Daniel J. Daley
Eugene W. Green
Jack L. James
Edgar B. Johnwick
Leo D. O'Kane

The following passed assistant sanitary engineer to be temporary sanitary engineer in the Regular Corps of the United States Public Health Service, effective from June 1, 1943:

Walter N. Dashiell

APPOINTMENTS, BY TRANSFER, IN THE REGULAR ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES

TO ADJUTANT GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT

Lt. Col. Archibald Andrew Fall, Infantry (temporary colonel), with rank from August 18, 1940.

TO FIELD ARTILLERY

First Lt. George Brendan O'Connor, Infantry (temporary captain), with rank from June 12, 1938.

Second Lt. Joel John Dilworth, Air Corps (temporary first lieutenant), with rank from May 29, 1942.

TO INFANTRY

Second Lt. Thomas Martin Ward, Quartermaster Corps (temporary captain), with rank from June 11, 1941.

PROMOTIONS IN THE REGULAR ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, MAY 27, 1943

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Father, we praise Thee that in every disappointment Thou still dost love us and in every darkness Thou dost enlighten us. O wondrous story of deathless love: It comforts in the gloom of night, it lifts in the hour of burden, and stills the sighing heart. We would chant the psalm of thanksgiving and pray that our faith may not become blind, nor our devotion frozen, nor the anchor of our hope locked in the chilly embrace of doubt and skepticism.

We pray that down through the aisles of the past to the vaulted roof of the future, the angels' song may be heard in all the temples of our Republic. O let the incense of their holy altars envelop our country, blessing all hearthstones and circling forth over land and sea. Inspire us to dedicate our talents and gifts and withhold not. Lest we be judged unfaithful to our sacred vows, may we deny ourselves, take up our cross, and follow Thee. He who knocks at the door of every heart and stretches forth His arms in every hour of need, will teach us the fortitude of unrequited labor and the joy of humble tasks done in love. Almighty God, with great soul might lead us to have faith that we are a mighty part of a world plan that shall carry with it the rapture of moral victory and the aspirations of a free people. In our Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

THE PRESIDENT OF LIBERIA

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to announce to the House that His Excellency, Edwin Barclay, the President of the Republic of Liberia, will be received by the House today at 12:30 o'clock, and will address the House at that time. I therefore ask unanimous consent that it may be in order for the Speaker to declare a recess at any time this afternoon, such recess to be subject to the call of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MEMORIAL SERVICES FOR EMPLOYEES OF THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, May 24, 1943.

The Honorable SAM RAYBURN,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I have been asked to use your good offices to extend to the Members of the House of Representatives an invitation to attend a memorial service for those employees of the Federal Government who have lost their lives in the service of their country during the present war. The memorial service as planned has the enthusiastic approval of the President. It will be held at 4 o'clock on the afternoon of Sunday, May 30, in the Sylvan Theater on the grounds of the Washington Monument. In the event of rain the service will be held in the Government Auditorium.

A limited number of chairs will be available for Members of Congress, Supreme Court Justices, and head of departments and agencies. Admission cards for these may be obtained from Mr. Robert Bailey, Civil Service Commission contact representative, in room 248, House Office Building.

Very truly yours,

WM. H. MCREYNOLDS,
Administrative Assistant to the President.

EDSEL B. FORD

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I rise this morning to place forever in the permanent RECORD of this body the distressing news of the death of a great American, Mr. Edsel B. Ford, president of the Ford Motor Co. He was the only son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Ford, the worthy son of a famed and distinguished father. He died at his estate at Gaughler Point, on beautiful Lake St. Clair in the village of Grosse Pointe Shores, Mich. His death came as a shock to dynamic Detroit, and to friends of the motor industry throughout the world. The great industry over which he presided strained every facility within its domination to serve the war effort. The slogan was "Full production for victory."

The Ford Motor Co.'s production lines deliver the following fleets of weapons: M–4 tanks, Pratt & Whitney aircraft engines, jeeps, M–10 tank destroyers, amphibian jeeps, universal carriers, Consolidated Liberator bombers, truck and jeep engines, transport gliders, Army trucks, rate-of-climb indicators, tank engines, gun mounts, magnesium castings, aircraft generators, armor plate, turbosuperchargers.

His father, Mr. Henry Ford, now in his eightieth year, with his faithful wife ever at his side, has done many notable things in a long life. And tribute should be paid today to this distinguished couple for the ability and foresight they displayed in the rearing of an only child, to become the man that the world learned to know as Edsel B. Ford. Devoted, retiring, able, quiet, respected; a family man, with three sons in the armed service. He always stood aside that his father might have his day. His own responsibilities came at an early age, and they were indeed great. The war brought him extra burdens. His load was heavy. He laid it down at the early age of 49. The sympathy of an appreciative Nation goes to his distinguished family.

WORK RELIEF IN PUERTO RICO AND THE VIRGIN ISLANDS

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 128) to authorize an appropriation for work relief in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object and withhold the reservation until the gentleman can make his statement.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the resolution?

Mr. BELL. House Joint Resolution 128, I might say, grows out of the fact that not long ago the House passed a resolution authorizing an investigation of the economic, social, and political conditions in the island of Puerto Rico. Shortly after that the Senate passed a resolution which came over to the House, providing for a relief bill in Puerto Rico in the amount of $25,000,000 this year and $25,000,000 next year. That bill was referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs, and after holding several hearings and giving the bill full consideration, that committee felt that it did not want to approve a 2-year relief program until the House-approved subcommittee could go to Puerto Rico and make a complete investigation of conditions there. Such an investigation would include a study of the necessity to pass such a relief bill and would enable us to be better advised as to the actual needs there.

We were told that at the present time there were almost a quarter million of people on relief and out of employment. While in continental United States unemployment has been taken up by the war effort, the effect in Puerto Rico has been just the reverse.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Has any effort been made to give the people of Puerto Rico relief by way of war work?

Mr. BELL. There have been some military installations put in down there. Those, of course, have given some employment, but the purpose of House Joint Resolution 128 is merely to act as a stop-gap. In substance the resolution provides that an appropriation of not to exceed $8,000,000 is authorized to be made by the Appropriations Committee and to authorize the extension of the present relief program there for not to exceed 5 months.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. As I understand, this would be a temporary appropriation until the committee has had opportunity to make an investigation to see why Mr. Tugwell has not planned some work for the people of Puerto Rico.

Mr. BELL. That is it exactly. The committee did not want to enter into the proposed 2-year program which was passed by the Senate until it could find out more about what is going on in Puerto Rico. While no members of the committee want to see people starve to death during the interim, and on the contrary want them to be taken care of, we felt that the mere call of humanity demands that we do something at this time to take care of the temporary situation.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. How was the vote in your committee?

Mr. BELL. There were no votes cast against the resolution, although the entire membership of the committee was not present at the time.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BELL. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. As the gentleman knows, I supported the resolution and I think the investigation in Puerto Rico should be made. I should like to suggest that at the moment a subcommittee of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce is inquiring into certain orders that might result in the elimination of brand names and trademarks. I have observed in the press of the Nation and have been reliably informed that under Mr. Tugwell's guidance and leadership a system has been put into effect in Puerto Rico which has resulted in the elimination of brand names and trade-marks on goods and on commodities imported into that territory from this country.

It strikes me that a real service could be performed by the committee to which the gentleman refers, in its investigation if it would, in connection with its inquiries into the general economic situation in Puerto Rico, inquire into that regulation and into the orders and operations which have resulted in the elimination of brand names and trademarks in this island. It is claimed on the part of the administrator, or of the government there, that a saving has been effected. The chamber of commerce says that no saving has been effected, but on the contrary a great deal of waste and loss will result.

Mr. BELL. I think that the resolution authorizing the investigation into the economic, political, and social conditions in the island is amply broad enough to cover an investigation into just what the gentleman from Indiana has called attention to, and I will be glad to pass that on to the committee making the investigation.

Mr. HALLECK. There are many who believe that Puerto Rico has been made something of a guinea pig in that sort of an experiment. How soon does the gentleman expect to get under way with the investigation and make some report?

Mr. BELL. The subcommittee of the Committee on Insular Affairs expects to leave Washington tomorrow or the next day.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BELL. I yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Tugwell advocated the philosophy for this Government here in the United States that all private industry would have to disappear. Has he been carrying that out to the detriment of the people there?

Mr. BELL. That is one of the things the committee wants to find out when it goes down there.

Mr. REED of New York. I hope you will.

Mr. GOSSETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BELL. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GOSSETT. I believe the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs neglected to point out that under the present law this whole program expires on June 30. Unless we take some action, the whole works program of Puerto Rico will be stopped automatically on June 30.

Mr. BELL. That is correct. I may add that at the present time certain projects which are said to be of use to the military installations are under process of being completed, but they cannot be completed by June 30. At that time, as the gentleman has said, all authority to proceed and money to proceed with will expire, so that unless this House Joint Resolution 128 is adopted, all of that work will immediately stop on June 30 and a great number of people unquestionably will suffer as a result of it.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BELL. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. May I say, in reply to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED], that while I have no brief for Rex Tugwell and do not believe in public ownership of private land, unless this Government takes some steps to cut up the lands in Puerto Rico in some way and enable those people to grow something out of that ground on which they can live—something to eat, if you please—we shall have to feed them for all time to come. Starvation is not only going on there now, I may say to the gentleman from New York, but it was going on there under the Harding and Coolidge administrations and has grown gradually worse. Unless some provision is made to permit the people of Puerto Rico to grow something out of that ground to live on, we are going to have to feed them probably for all time to come.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BELL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Before the subcommittee on Interior Department appropriations, which appropriates money for Puerto Rico, it developed that if they were permitted to refine raw sugar in Puerto Rico it would put thousands of people to work, and they could ship that sugar here in less bulk than they are shipping the raw sugar now. The people there and the people in the United States would be benefited if they could build those refineries and refine the raw sugar there and ship it here. I think it would be well for the gentleman's committee to make an investigation of that point.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BELL. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GROSS. In supporting the resolution in the committee I had in mind the observation made by the gentleman from Indiana. He is entirely correct. While Mr. Tugwell may be responsible for a lot of it, I am also aware of the fact that if the large sugar industries there had not been interfered with many of those people would have work. The observations the gentleman made a moment ago are entirely correct. The individual is helpless, but if he has a job with the sugar industry he is better off than if he is on relief.

I favor this resolution because it is a stop-gap. I personally am familiar with the conditions there, having been down there. Those people are in very great need, which has been made more acute by the Tugwell administration and by the war.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BELL. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Will the gentleman tell us what program is in force now to bring Puerto Ricans into this country to help the war effort here?

Mr. BELL. I am not familiar with what has been done in that respect. The purpose of House Joint Resolution 128 is merely to bring about a stop-gap to take care of a desperate situation until the committee can go down there and inquire into just such questions as the gentleman raises.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. I hope the gentleman will keep in mind that at the present time we are releasing 1,000 Japanese a week from the relocation centers. If we can afford to release 1,000 Japanese a week we can certainly afford to bring Puerto Ricans up here to do the kind of work we are now calling on the Japs to do in this country.

Mr. BELL. I assure the gentleman the committee would be happy to inquire into that point.

Mr. REED of New York. If the gentleman will yield further, there is one reason why this matter should be investigated, and that is that you can find quite a lot of trained labor there. Vocational education has been carried on in Puerto Rico for quite a number of years. There ought to be a large mass of well-trained young people, who are now mature, to take over some of the work that is needed to be done for the war effort.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BELL. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. May I point out that we do appropriate money and we are bringing a great many laborers in from the Bahamas to give employment to the needy people of the Bahamas. I know the gentleman's committee will inquire whether it would not be better to bring them in from Puerto Rico and take care of our own, rather than bring in people from some other country.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BELL. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CHURCH. May I ask the gentleman if it is not true that in our committee it was very clearly established by the testimony that private industry was discouraged in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands rather than encouraged?

Mr. BELL. I may say to the gentleman that there was considerable testimony indicating that.

Mr. CHURCH. The testimony was to the effect that the long-run program for the betterment of those people should be to encourage industry and encourage the development of more jobs rather than to discourage it.

Mr. BELL. There was some testimony along that line, too.

Mr. CHURCH. The gentleman will recall that I brought out in the testimony the philosophy of Dr. Tugwell himself that discouraged a great deal of business from going there; further, that little has been done toward bringing those people into the United States, where employment can be had.

The chairman also knows that I voted against the resolution.

Mr. BELL. I was not aware of the fact that the gentleman voted against the resolution, although I knew that he was against it.

Mr. CHURCH. The gentleman is aware of the fact that I object to this measure. I know that it is merely a stopgap. I cannot approve it, because I cannot bring myself to believe that we should continue outside of the United States in the Virgin Island and Puerto Rico that W. P. A. activity which we stopped in the United States over a year ago by failure to appropriate for the W. P. A., and the fact that this W. P. A. work has been turned over to the Federal Works Administration does not help the program much.

Mr. BELL. The gentleman will recall that the testimony is undisputed that at the present time there are from a quarter of a million to a half a million people unemployed in Puerto Rico, and unless this stopgap legislation is passed and the W. P. A., the Federal Works Agency, continued temporarily, there will be great suffering among the people.

Mr. CHURCH. And the gentleman is aware of the fact that I fear that continuing this activity may do more harm than good in the long run and may be tossing away another $8,000,000 the next 5 months without solving the problem in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands. Of course, this is only an authorization and not yet an actual appropriation. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of the right to object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri for the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Federal Works Administrator is authorized to provide work for employable needy persons on useful public projects in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands for the period July 1, 1943, to November 30, 1943, in accordance with the appropriate provisions and for the purposes prescribed in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1943, which provisions are hereby extended and made applicable to the appropriations made to carry out the purposes of this joint resolution. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated a sum not to exceed $8,000,000 to carry out the provisions of this joint resolution, including administrative expenses in connection therewith.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HIS EXCELLENCY EDWIN BARCLAY, PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF LIBERIA

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as a committee to wait upon and escort the President of Liberia the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM], and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON].

Under previous order of the House, the Chair declares the House in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

RECESS

Thereupon, at 12 o'clock and 24 minutes p. m., the House stood in recess subject to the call of the Speaker.

During the recess the following occurred:

The President of Liberia and his party entered the Chamber at 12 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m., and the President of Liberia was escorted to the Speaker's rostrum by the committee of Representatives appointed for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. Members of the House of Representatives, there are few republics outside of the Western Hemisphere. Today we have as our guest the President of a republic in Africa. It is my pleasure to present to you Edwin Barclay, President of the Republic of Liberia. [Applause.]

The PRESIDENT OF LIBERIA. Mr. Speaker, Members of the House of Representatives, I consider it a great honor to appear before your honorable body, and I am fully appreciative of the courtesy done me and my country by your permitting me to be present at your session and to convey to you greetings from the only democracy in west Africa to the great democracy of this hemisphere. It is fitting that I should convey this greeting, because it is to American democracy that the people of Liberia owe the foundation of their state and the character of their political institutions.

With the world now fighting to maintain for all peoples the democratic ideals upon which the American Republic was founded, Liberia, as a matter of choice, is dedicated to cooperate with and to render all assistance within her power to those states that are now engaged in a terrific struggle to banish terrorism and authoritarianism from the world.

Up to the present we have made considerable contribution to attainment of this objective. Although we have neither large armies, air forces, nor navies to contribute, we have what is important in the prosecution of the war—natural resources and a strategic position which we have freely placed at the disposal of the United Nations as our contribution to the cause of liberty and human dignity. I thank you.

At 12 o'clock and 43 minutes p. m., the President of Liberia and his party departed.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the Speaker called the House to order at 12 o'clock and 44 minutes p. m.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the proceedings had during the recess of the House will be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include an article from the New York Times in regard to the production of sulfur on the island of Sicily.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include certain quotations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mrs. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a letter written to the Washington Post.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend by own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the proposal to repeal the Chinese Exclusion Act, and include therein a short editorial from the New York Times on the same subject.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

WILLKIE THE LEADER WHO DID NOT LEAD

Mr. SHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. SHAFER addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein two letters.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include two press releases from the Washington Star.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MORTALITY AMONG MEMBERS OF THE HOUSE

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, yesterday we held memorial services for our deceased Members. It must have been very gratifying to the House to realize that during the past year, while it is to be regretted that we lost any Members, our number was reduced by only 3—the smallest number by far during the years since we started our memorial exercises. I remember that our first group included 28. Since that time the roll call of deceased Members has steadily decreased, in spite of the fact that we have been under very great strain during the past several years, until yesterday there were but three.

Mr. Speaker, may I at this time pay tribute to Dr. George Calver, who I believe, to a very great extent, is responsible for this reduction in the mortality of our Members. I think Dr. Calver has done a great deal for all of us because of his personal interest in our welfare and his unquestioned ability. He has taught us how to maintain our health and he has cooperated with us in trying to do so. I am sure I voice the sentiments of our Members when I say that Dr. Calver has proven himself indispensable.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentlewoman from New Jersey has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. D'ALESANDRO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a sermon by the Most Reverend William T. McCarty, military delegate of the Army and Navy diocese, delivered at the fifth annual solemn memorial Mass at Arlington National Cemetery.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix on the subject of merchant marine awards of distinguished service medals and to include therein the citations from March 15 to May 15.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the 6 months' anniversary of the Coast Guard SPARS and include therein certain quotations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an article entitled "All-American Centennial," by Howard R. Driggs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the service and activities of Disabled American Veterans and to include therewith certain statements of commendations made by various persons of this organization.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include a letter from a soldier in the Pacific area.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENNETT of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BUFFETT] may extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENNETT of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include a short newspaper article about a mother and father in my district with six children in the service of their country.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TALBOT. Mr. Speaker, I have two requests: First, that my colleague the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. COMPTON] may be permitted to extend his own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article; and, second, that I may be permitted to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

(Mr. MILLER of Connecticut asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a radio broadcast.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LEMKE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article by the United Farmers of Illinois.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include therein a newspaper release of mine on the Kerr amendment.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BEALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. TIBBOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

FARM MACHINERY

Mr. COFFEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend my own remarks, and to include therein a short editorial.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. COFFEE. Mr. Speaker, I read from the Sol H. Lewis column of the Seattle Times of April 18 the following article:

OUR PEEVISH PLOWMEN

I know the commandment about not coveting thy neighbor's possessions, but I really don't blame our Lynden farmers for casting an envious eye across the international border 3 miles northward, where they see their Canadian neighbors using brightly painted new agricultural machinery and implements.

None of these farm essentials can be obtained from their home Lynden dealers. Priorities and freezing and red tape have our United States implement factories all bound up, although top officials at Washington continue to appeal for bigger crops.

I'll let you in on the secret, folks, why we are forgetting the commandment and are waxing so covetous up in this sector. All the bounteous stocks of tractors, plows, harrows, drills, and tedders which can be bought up in British Columbia have marked on them, "Made in the U. S. A."

What are we going to do about this? Are we going to stand by supinely and allow this absurd, intolerable situation to continue without change? Let us do something about this maddening condition. What kind of enthusiasm for the war program can we engender in farmers when such developments as these occur. It is despairing, provoking, and echoes to high heaven for quick and decisive action.

THE DIES COMMITTEE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

[Mr. RANKIN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, there is no effort to disband or do away with the Dies committee. The Dies committee has been continued for the present year. The members of the Dies committee have not had a meeting since the Comintern is supposed to have been abandoned, but I am sure the majority of the members of the Dies committee feel they have a real job of house cleaning to do here in America as a result of the work of the Comintern in the last twenty-some-odd years. We have that job of house cleaning to do yet if it can be done.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a lucid and a very powerful article written by the distinguished columnist, William Philip Sims, under the caption "Russia versus Poland." I invite the attention of the membership of the House to this article.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE OFFICE OF PRICE ADMINISTRATION

Mr. STEWART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. STEWART].

There was no objection.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call attention to an existing order of the O. P. A. which discriminates against the local merchants who support every public enterprise, contribute to the chamber of commerce and who develop their towns, counties, States, and country. This order is very much in favor of the chain stores so far as the selling of merchandise is concerned. It permits the chain stores to undersell the independent merchant, which undermines the independent merchant business of America. We all know and appreciate that our local independent merchants give as much of their time, money, and energy to the development of home enterprise as any other class of people on earth.

These independent merchants invest their earnings in a home, in a business house, and the general improvement of their home town in the building of churches, public parks, and always deposit their money in their home town. Now what is the picture with respect to the chain-store operators—most generally rent their business house and deposit their money in out-of-town banks, and upon the first slackness of business the chain store moves to towns where business is better and the independent merchant which this O. P. A. order affects will have to assume the load of carrying on local society and government.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a few excerpts and quotations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD]?

There was no objection.

REPORT ON TAX BILL

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have until midnight tomorrow to file a report on the tax bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] may have permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD in two instances, in one to include a newspaper article and in the other to include a radio address.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER]?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns tomorrow it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next. I may say that on Tuesday the conference report on the tax bill will be brought up for consideration and on Wednesday there will be consideration of a labor bill. Beyond that I have no information to convey to the House at this moment as to the program for next week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]?

There was no objection.

INVESTIGATION BY COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 38, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, is authorized and directed to make a study and investigation of the present system of marketing, transportation, and distribution of farm products from rural areas through the various marketing agencies to the ultimate consumer, as it affects farmers, the various types of middlemen, wholesalers, retailers, and consumers, with a view to ascertaining, among other things:

(a) The effectiveness of the present system of marketing, and the adequacy of present marketing facilities, with particular regard to the protection of farmers and consumers.

(b) The effect of transactions on the futures grain and cotton exchanges upon such system and upon farmers and consumers.

(c) The existence of any practices in connection with the grading, storing, processing, transporting, distributing, or marketing of farm products, which adversely affect farmers and consumers.

(d) The present and prospective development of the types and methods of transportation for farm products, and the existence, if any, of discrimination in railway freight or in motor carrier rates on farm products in the various areas.

(e) The feasibility of establishing an up-to-date marketing and distributing system from the rural areas through local, State, and National marketing agencies under a farm cooperative program that would provide facilities for proper grading and distribution, necessary storage, and for other essential activities of an orderly marketing program.

The committee shall make a report to the House as soon as practicable after its study and investigation has been concluded, and in its report the committee shall make such recommendations as it may deem proper, including recommendations with respect to any legislative action necessary to effectuate its recommendations.

SEC. 2. For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to hold such hearings, to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within the United States, whether the House is in session, has recessed, or has adjourned, to employ such experts and such clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents by subpena or otherwise, to take such testimony, to have such printing and binding done, and to make such expenditures as it deems necessary. Subpenas shall be issued over the signature of the chairman of the committee, and may be served by any person designated by the chairman. Oaths or affirmations may be administered by the chairman or any member of the committee designated by him.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN], and at this time I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FULMER].

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, this bill has the hearty approval of every member of the Agriculture Committee and a unanimous report by the Rules Committee.

May I state that many State legislatures including my own State legislature have passed resolutions endorsing the passage of this bill. I have received many letters from labor organizations and consumer organizations giving their hearty approval to the passage of the bill.

I want to state to you frankly out of my long experience as a general merchant and banker dealing with farmers, as well as in connection with my own personal operation of my farm, that the major problem during all these years which has been increasing as the years go by confronting farmers as well as consumers is the manner in which farm products are marketed and distributed.

Farmers are engaged in the most technical and hazardous business of any group in this country.

They are supposed to know all about the various types of soils, fertilizers, and the proper grading of their various crops, of which, for instance, cotton, has more than 30 different grades and lengths of staple. He plants his crops but in that he has to contend with all types of weather, floods, droughts, and insect infestation, he is unable to even guess the amount of crops that he will be able to harvest.

Farmers operate as individuals, therefore they are unable to fix or demand, a fair price for that which they produce. In other words, he is forced to accept that which he is offered in his local market. If he ships to some distant market he has to accept in the way of a price that which is left after everyone else handling these products gets theirs. Very often these products reach a glutted market and in a great many instances farmers not only do not receive any returns, but are called upon to pay the freight. Millions of consumers not connected with any type of consumer organization are called upon in making their purchases to pay extremely high fixed prices, including many additions commonly called spreads between the farmers and the consumer.

We have been in recent years, appropriating money to pay farmers benefit payments commonly called a subsidy with the hope that farmers may be able to receive the so-called parity price for their products.

Mr. Prentiss Brown at the head of the O. P. A. is now proposing to roll back the consumer price and pay a subsidy to certain handlers of farm products with the hope of cutting down on the high and unreasonable prices to consumers. I want to state emphatically that you had just as well put this money in a rat hole as far as being able to settle the farmer and the consumer problem in this manner.

How long would General Motors, the International Harvester Co., or any other well organized industry or business last if they had to market their products in line with the manner in which farm products are marketed and distributed—they would not last 6 months.

These groups under rules and regulations formulated by their various associations of which they are members not only definitely control their production in line with the purchasing power of the country but they control the marketing and distribution of their products as well as fix the price—you can take it or leave it.

Out of all my past experience and even at this time as a Member of Congress I am just as helpless in marketing my farm products as any other farmer. Let me give you one experience: I shipped to this city, Washington, a beautiful lot of lima beans. Practically everyone interested in buying beans stated that there were plenty of lima beans on the market. I sold a portion of these beans to a certain chain store. I divided the balance between two commission merchants. I received from the chain store $1.10 per basket of 30 pounds, and 65 cents and 45 cents from the two commission merchants. At the same time these beans were being sold to the consumers here in the city at 10 cents per pound, amounting to $3 per basket.

I have been interested in doing something about this serious problem confronting farmers as well as consumers ever since I have been a Member of Congress, but because of the attitude of those who are responsible for the various spreads between the farmer and the consumer and because of the attitude of millions of consumers backed by the large metropolitan press contending that the farmers of the country were responsible for the high consumer prices we have not been able to do anything about it.

During the past few months, on account of the operation of the O. P. A. in trying to fix price ceilings for farmers and every other group handling farm products operating between farmers and consumers, not only have the eyes of the consumers of this country been opened but you Members of Congress have been made to realize the serious problem confronting helpless farmers as well as innocent consumers because of the manner in which farm products are being marketed and distributed. I fully realize that in the passage of this bill you are giving to me and the members of my committee a tremendous job. I want to assure you, however, because of my deep interest in millions of innocent farmers, many of whom, although responsible for feeding 130,000,000 of people in this country are living in poverty with their children denied the privilege of proper education and proper opportunities, that I expect with the assistance of the distinguished members of my committee to give to you as well as the people of this country, including the millions of innocent farmers and consumers, the very best service that we are capable of rendering.

Let us get the facts and let the chips fall where they may. In making this investigation we want it definitely understood that we do not want to harm any necessary legitimate business connected with the marketing and distributing of farm products, and there is no thought in the mind of any member of my committee in making our final report of advocating the putting of the Government into the marketing and distributing of farm products. There is too much of that going on at this time.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULMER. I yield.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The price of food in the big cities is getting worse every day to the people, and especially the poorer people.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina 1 additional minute.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Assuming that this resolution is adopted, can the gentleman tell us what consideration will be given to that matter, from the standpoint of going into the cost to the public and how that will be corrected?

Mr. FULMER. I will be glad to answer the gentleman from New York.

At the present time the farmers in my State are getting two and a half cents a pound for potatoes. The people in your city, New York, are paying twelve and a half to fifteen cents a pound. Who is getting the difference between the two and one-half and the 15 cents? It goes to numerous middlemen, many of whom are perfectly useless, who do not produce a living thing, simply operate more or less as real parasites, absolutely sapping the very life blood out of the farmer or the consumer, or both of them. While this has been a major problem all these years, this is the first time the people have ever awakened to the fact that this is true and are demanding that something should be done about it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

NATIONAL YOUTH ADMINISTRATION

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that the N. Y. A. has found a place in the educational life of the Nation—a place heretofore neglected, and I shall advocate the continuance of N. Y. A. until it becomes an integral part of our public-school system. The continuation of this activity cannot be immediately transferred without great cost and the readjustment of our public-school system. Its value is so great in my opinion that we would make a great mistake not to continue this inestimable opportunity now given the youth of the country and provide funds for this purpose.

I have an intimate knowledge of what the N. Y. A. has done and is doing in my State, North Carolina, and I think I have a correct picture of what it has done in other States of the Union. In peacetime it gave boys and girls in my State an opportunity to develop latent talents and become not only useful, but happy citizens.

The National Youth Administration has geared its program of activity into a vital and fundamental part of the Nation's war effort. Through simultaneous training of workers for war industries, and production of critical materials for the United States Army, the Navy, the Maritime Commission, and other war agencies, the N. Y. A. is playing an increasingly important role in the Nation's all-out effort to protect and preserve the American way of life.

As an illustration of the fundamental changes which have taken place in the N. Y. A. since the establishment of the N. Y. A. war production training program in July 1941, it may be pointed out that in North Carolina alone, in the period from July 1, 1941, to March 31, 1943, there were 11,162 trained young people between the ages of 16 and 24, inclusive, who went from their N. Y. A. training centers into industry. These jobs were principally in critical war and war-related industries, many of them with companies or agencies such as the Glenn L. Martin Co., the Norfolk Navy Yard, the North Carolina Shipbuilding Co., the Fairchild Corporation, the Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co. These and many other firms served by N. Y. A.-trained youth hold key and essential contracts for the production of guns, ships, planes, tanks, and the hundreds of other materials and supplies necessary on the battle fronts scattered throughout the world where the heroic young men of the United States and of the United Nations are fighting and dying in order that the Jap-Nazi-Fascist tyranny may be wiped from the face of the earth forever.

The N. Y. A. training program is based upon production. This makes it possible to train youth under the same conditions which they will experience when they enter employment in private industry. Each youth learns his job by doing actual production work under the supervision of a trained and skilled technical supervisor. By beginning with simple production jobs, the youth progresses to more complicated types of production as he gains familiarity with the tools and procedures of the training shop to which he is assigned. In addition, during the period of from 10 weeks to 3 months that a youth undergoes training, he learns good work habits and workshop techniques, as well as the safety practices upon which progressive concerns place great and proper emphasis.

Since the establishment of the war production training program of the N. Y. A., the North Carolina centers of N. Y. A. have produced many thousands of articles for the war effort. These include ships' ladders for the United States Maritime Commission, which are being used in the construction of Liberty freighters, Diesel engine flanges for the United States Navy, cartridge containers for the United States Army, desks and tables for military posts, cooks' uniforms for the United States Army, sighting bars, identification tags, targets, gun racks, and many other types of essential equipment which were not available through normal industrial channels due to the heavy demands made upon industry for the mass production of war equipment. The shop facilities of N. Y. A. training centers have also provided maintenance and repair services for the mechanized equipment of the armed services stationed in the State.

Through this two-fold program of training and production, the N. Y. A. war production training centers provide young men and women throughout North Carolina, and the United States, with practical work experience and thorough training in those occupations which are essential to war production, and in which there is at the present, and prospectively, a great shortage. These occupations include machine shop work, aircraft sheet metal work, blueprint reading, industrial sewing, aircraft woodworking, radio, welding, foundry practice, and other occupations of equal wartime importance.

At the present, more than 2,200 young people in North Carolina are daily receiving training in vital work-training activities in N. Y. A. local and resident projects located in Elizabeth City, Scotland Neck, Rocky Mount, Greenville, Washington, Kinston, Wilmington, Raleigh, Durham, Burlington, Greensboro, Lexington, Winston-Salem, Lenoir, Ellerbe, Hickory Grove, Sardis, Asheville, and Charlotte.

There are those who attempt to minimize the great contribution N. Y. A. has made and is making to the prosecution of the war effort. In the light of the splendid record of N. Y. A., it is difficult to understand why this should be so, for since that tragic day at Pearl Harbor over 500,000 American youth have received N. Y. A. war production training. To be exact, 591,000 boys and girls have received training in mechanical skills which have been of inestimable value to industry in meeting the enormous production schedules which it has had to meet.

Can anyone honestly say that this contribution to industry has been of no importance? Certainly the thousands of factories scattered throughout the land which have been saved the time and trouble of breaking in unskilled workers would never say so, for these companies, hundreds of them, have formally expressed their approval of N. Y. A. training. With the ranks of their skilled workmen long since depleted, manufacturers have had to make the best possible use of those remaining, even as they have had to make the best possible use of their machinery, and neither of these two factors can be fully utilized for the prime purpose of production if the training of inexperienced persons for semi-skilled tasks must be undertaken at the same time.

Only 2 percent of the total youth population of the United States ever graduate from college, and only 10 percent of our high school graduates ever have an opportunity to attend college. There are thousands of boys and girls in our Nation who have God-given talents to do well the things taught by N. Y. A. provided they are given an opportunity to develop these talents. They feel secure in knowing that they can earn a livelihood, and this security enables them to enter the threshold of life with confidence and soon find a place of usefulness which makes them fine citizens. The N. Y. A. offers a wonderful opportunity to thousands of young people who would otherwise be untrained for suitable employment and who heretofore have been denied an opportunity to make a great contribution to the country.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, this is a resolution that has been recommended by a unanimous vote of the Committee on Agriculture and also by the Rules Committee. It provides for a study and investigation of the present system of marketing, transportation, and distribution of food products from rural areas through the various marketing agencies to the ultimate consumer. I think it is a good resolution and that the report of this committee would be of real benefit to this body in considering the most important problem of food distribution.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL].

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein certain excerpts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

S O S FOR EUROPE'S CHILDREN

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I will vote for this resolution. I want, however, to discuss another important food problem in the short time assigned to me. Mr. Speaker, will America permit the children of Europe in the subjugated countries under Axis domination to die for the want of food? Yesterday I introduced a resolution, House Resolution 244, urging that the United States inaugurate a program at once to save the children of Europe's subjugated countries from starvation and to give food relief to the adult civilians as well. America, through all her history, has been known for her humanitarian activities. Our lend-lease program, which to date involves the expenditure of the colossal sum of $70,000,000,000, is the greatest contribution ever made by a nation in the world's history for the preservation of civilization and for the assistance of distressed nations overrun by invading conquerors. One of the greatest tragedies growing out of World War No. 2 is the fact that hundreds of thousands of the children of the overrun countries of Europe are being gradually starved to death for the want of food and care. The president of the Greek Red Cross, in London, stated that 110,000 children in Greece and Piraeus alone—one-third of the children—have perished of hunger and the epidemics coming from hunger. It is reported that in Athens in 2 months in 1941, 9 out of 10 babies died at birth. Tuberculosis in many of the stricken countries has risen above 60 percent. This blight will be visited upon the oncoming generations for decades to come. The starved children of Europe who survive this holocaust will be crippled in body and mind, and the vitality and the well-being of the nations of which they are a part will suffer the blight for many generations.

Mr. Speaker, there is ample food in many of the nations of the world not directly involved in the conflict as active participants to save these children, particularly in many South American countries, and much food even in our own country that could be allocated to save the lives of these little folks who are crying for bread, and also to help save the adult civilians as well. Furthermore, there are adequate shipping facilities in neutral countries, such as Sweden, which are available for this humanitarian purpose of carrying food necessary to sustain life to the subjugated countries of Europe. In the interests of humanity the blockade against such mercy ships should be lifted and the essential foods necessary to sustain life be permitted to pass to these children. Can we in America not stop this harvest of death and bring relief to them who are without relief from any other source?

Pursuant to permission heretofore granted, I include as a part of my remarks a most interesting discussion of this problem by Tracy D. Mygatt:

S O S FOR EUROPE'S CHILDREN

(By Tracy D. Mygatt)

THE WORLD'S MOST TERRIBLE STORY

The world has no story more terrible than the slow starvation of Europe's children in this war. Exact figures are not available. But we know that the child life in six countries is involved, countries most of which have been democracies, countries which would be allies of the United States were they not Nazi-conquered. Children of France, Belgium, Holland, Norway, Poland, and Greece, are in peril.

Journalists, Red Cross workers, American friends—persons who have witnessed the children's sufferings with their own eyes in southern France before that, too, was occupied—tell us that no words can picture the hourly agency of these beggared children whose food ration (even when obtainable) does not suffice to sustain life and to whom, save in the case of Greece only, the Allied blockade permits no outside food to be brought in. For it is the supreme irony that this cruel wrong is being done these children not by their masters and enemies but by their so-called friends.

FOR MANY IT IS TOO LATE

One knows something of the story of Greece. Before the blockade was partially lifted some 9 months ago, we have it on the authority of the President of the Greek Red Cross in London that 110,000 children in Greece and the Piraeus—one-third of the child population—perished of hunger and the epidemics fatal because of hunger. In Athens alone in a period of 2 months in 1941, nine out of every ten babies died at birth.

In Belgium, where the child population of 2,000,000 is the most sorely menaced of all the occupied countries, the average daily calory ration dropped in July of 1942 to the appalling level of 886. Even in the First World War it never fell below 2,280. Tuberculosis among children has risen in many sections as high as 60 percent, in some to 100 percent. In starving France the rate of the great white plague mounts daily.

BUT FOR OTHERS THERE IS STILL TIME

The relief that has been sent to Greece under Swedish and Swiss supervision in this past year, though still grossly inadequate, has saved thousands of little lives. Working under these neutral governments, the International Red Cross has performed a vast humanitarian work. For the children of this one country at least there has been raised what ex-President Hoover strikingly calls the front of human decency.

THE "GREEK EXPERIMENT" MUST BE REPEATED

Child salvage in Greece was made possible because, after long agitation, chiefly in Great Britain (where public opinion is far ahead of our own), the Allies agreed to let food for children pass through the blockade to Greek ports, and because on their side the Axis Powers promised not to divert the food to their own uses. This promise the Axis has strictly kept. And our own United States Government, in a letter from Under Secretary of State Sumner Welles to the President of the Greek War Relief, written as long ago as last August, certified that the operation in Greece has been successful and that the Nazis have derived no benefit from it. What has been done for the children of Greece can be—must be—done for the children of France, of Belgium, of Holland, of Norway, of Poland. For these, too, we must raise "the front of human decency."

MONEY IS WAITING

Money—the occupied nations' own money—is available to buy the medicines, milk, and vitamins their children need. For, loose reports to the contrary, the governments-in-exile desperately want to see the children, upon whom the future of their countries depends, rescued from the worst death known to man, slow starvation—provided always it will not benefit the enemy.

FOOD IS WAITING

South America has lost many food markets through the war. The Latin American countries have food which they are only too eager to sell—grains, meats, fats, milk. Thus, with both money and food at hand Europe's children can be saved without depriving rationed Americans of 1 ounce of food or taking from their pockets 1 penny of cash.

SHIPS ARE WAITING

Sweden has ships at this moment which she is unwilling to risk in belligerent shipping. She is ready to charter these idle vessels to feed the starving children. War supporters should take note that Allied shipping will be in no way affected because little children of the occupied countries continue to live. But as Rufus Jones of the American Friends Service Committee said in the Carnegie Hall meeting on February 20, 1943:

"The blockade which is an instrument of starvation will not be open for mercy ships until America sends out a loud and unmistakable call to open the way for food to go to the children of Europe."

We must use all channels of democratic influence to persuade the American and British Governments, to let the food go through the blockade.

HUNGER LAYS NO SAFE BASIS

Granted that some children in the occupied countries will survive today's misery, is it reasonable to suppose that this rickety, tubercular, thwarted remnant, who have felt in the formative years of childhood every man's hand against them, will in the future have mind or body to help build a free and warless world? Is it not rather ominously certain that, however great the Allied victory, the resentful child-victims of today will grow up to become the storm troopers of tomorrow? Nazi Germany is in large measure the harvest sowed by the Allied blockade of 1919.

GET YOUR FRIENDS TO ACT

Here, in the desperate plight of Europe's children, is a meeting ground for all people of good will, be they pacifists or war supporters. It is our plain duty, then, to bring them the facts and to urge them to act now with all speed. To write urgent letters to the President, to Secretary of State Cordell Hull, to their Representatives in Congress. Also strong letters to the press. To beseech their ministers and rabbis to cooperate. To take the floor on this tragedy at their unions, their clubs. To seize any and every avenue of influence to halt this atrocious cruelty to the children before it is too late.

Not that we would put the job off on others. We ourselves must speak the word, write the letters. But we must gain wider influence. The vital need, as Rufus Jones has well said, is to: "shake America wide awake so that we can deal with this absolute priority for any permanent peace—the saving of the children of the conquered parts of the world."

Let the mercy ships sail!

There are now pending in the Congress a number of resolutions to accomplish this purpose. I introduced the following resolution (H. Res. 244):

Whereas the food supply of all the small nations invaded and occupied by the Axis Powers is exhausted, due to the requisition of native food supplies by them and the dislocation of food production and economic processes and the inability of these invaded countries to secure their usual imports through the blockade; and

Whereas many thousands of citizens of these countries, and particularly the children, are in dire distress and need for essential food to preserve their lives; and

Whereas great numbers of these children, as well as their parents, have already met death through starvation, and the remainder through malnutrition are facing starvation; and

Whereas there are food surpluses available in the American continents and shipping facilities may be secured through neutral countries; and

Whereas the demands of humanity and common decency require that the United States come to the relief of these stricken countries and provide sufficient food to save the lives of the children now facing death from starvation, and perfect arrangements so that food may be provided for the adult civilian populations, without in any way interfering with military operations or making it possible for any of the Axis Powers to profit by reason of this relief to the stricken countries; and

Whereas Belgium, Norway, Poland, Greece, Yugoslavia, and the Netherlands and others of the subjugated countries have lived in friendship with the United States during our entire national existence and have sent us millions of our most useful and helpful American citizens, and now have no means whatever of securing the necessary agreements by which this disaster can be averted: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the United States respectfully urges that the Government of the United States, through the Secretary of State, perfect at the earliest possible moment, and put into effect a program in cooperation with the British Government and the Governments of Sweden and Switzerland and other Allies participating with us, the setting up of a definite relief program for these stricken nations and particularly for the providing of the necessary food to prevent the starvation of the thousands of innocent children in these various subjugated countries who are now dying from lack of sustenance; and be it further

Resolved, That in the perfecting of plans for the accomplishment of these humane objectives that provision be made, based on agreements with the belligerents, or otherwise, for the use of these food supplies for this specific purpose, with adequate provision for the protection thereof and with full safeguarding of such relief so that the Axis Nations may not obtain any military advantage by reason of this relief being provided to the children and the adult civilian populations of the invaded nations.

Mr. Speaker, I most respectfully urge my colleagues to give early consideration to all of these resolutions which have for their common purpose the giving of relief to the starving children as well as the adult civilians of the overridden nations of Europe, held under the cruel heel of the Nazi invaders and who are being slowly starved to death. If we wait, it will be too late. Many thousands already have gone to their doom. We must act with great speed if these little folks of Europe are to be saved.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, off and on for some period of time we have discussed subsidies on this floor, but I doubt very much whether we have, first, a correct appraisal of the determination of the administration to impose subsidies upon this country, and, second, an adequate concept of what subsidies will mean to our economic structure in the immediate future and in the post-war period. To me, that proposal is so profoundly interesting that I am of the opinion that it is going to be one of the major problems and a major controversy in this country before we get through. A little rational analysis and a little common sense in the approach will, I think, indicate the magnitude of the problem. One can analyze it about in this fashion.

Take a specific item. Here is a can of corn for which the retailer normally would have to get 20 cents a can or maybe more in order to bring about a fair margin of profit. Under the system that prevails now, he cannot buy canned corn and sell it for 20 cents, and translate that same practice to other commodities, without going out of business, so it is proposed now, first, to place a ceiling on canned corn, and secondly, to find out what it costs the packer and processor to produce canned corn, permit him to sell it to the retailer under the price ceiling, and still remain in business, and pay to the processor a subsidy out of the Federal Treasury.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Let me cite another illustration. They propose to roll back the price of butter 5 cents a pound and pay a subsidy of 5 cents a pound to the processor. By so doing the consumer saves 60 cents a year on the 12 pounds of butter he is allowed under the rationing system, and the Federal Treasury pays out $90,000,000 in order to finance the butter subsidy. This 60 cents that you may save as a consumer is not enough to buy you a haircut the next time you go downtown.

Mr. DIRKSEN. It is rather singular now that notwithstanding the many expressions on the floor of this House concerning subsidies and the action of this House on the agriculture appropriation bill and other proposals with respect to subsidies, the determination is still there to adopt the subsidy philosophy.

Let us look for a moment at the mechanics of the subsidy application. If you are going to pay the processor the difference between what it costs plus a margin of profit to put up a case of canned corn or tomatoes or a side of beef, and what it will take the retailer to sell that same commodity under a ceiling price, you have to audit everything the processor pays, and you may have to go back and examine the costs of the feed that goes into the livestock. You will have to examine the cost of the raw material, you will have to examine the costs of the commodities. You must have people in the processing plant checking every item of cost, for obviously you are not going to disburse the money out of the Federal Treasury unless a fair and careful audit and check has been made. There will be auditors and accountants in the plants. There will be regional set-ups, there will be district set-ups. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation will have to make its own check-up before it places its seal of approval upon the payment of a subsidy. Finally, before the Federal Treasury disburses any money, it will want to be satisfied that the amount to be paid to a processor has been carefully ascertained and represents the difference between his cost and the amount he will get under a price ceiling.

Spin that out in terms of personnel. I will venture the opinion here and now that Prentiss Brown will need at least 20,000 more people on the pay roll to make audits, to make accountings, to have watchmen to watch the watchmen to watch the watchmen to see that the Federal Treasury is safeguarded. So there will be superimposed upon the economic structure of the country a tremendous personnel structure that will ultimately break down, because, in my humble judgment, it cannot be efficaciously and efficiently done.

Mr. CLEVENGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. CLEVENGER. I wonder if my distinguished colleague from Illinois has considered this subsidy proposition in connection with the price of coal. We have that facing us right now. Is it contemplated to increase the price of coal to the consumer or take that out of a subsidy?

Mr. DIRKSEN. It may be. We subsidize the transportation of coffee today, we subsidize the transportation cost of gasoline, and now we propose to apply it to meat beginning the 1st of July. We propose to apply it to other commodities that go upon the tables of the people. How far will the program go? It may be that every item that enters into the cost of living in the country will finally become the objective of the subsidy, in view of the fact that all prices are presently subject to inflationary forces.

Mr. CLEVENGER. May I say further that we are already subsidizing out of the Federal Treasury competitive crops in other nations to the extent of millions of dollars?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Exactly.

Mr. CLEVENGER. That is quite in violation of the spirit of this House.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Now we shall have to go abroad in the country to find accountants. We must find auditors. The renegotiation service in the Army, the Navy, and the Maritime Commission cannot find experienced auditors in sufficient quantity to do that job expeditiously, and yet here is a proposed program which will require a host of persons trained in the field of auditing and accounting.

Out of some 90,000 war contracts, less than 15 percent have been audited, because they do not have the necessary personnel. It is now proposed to subsidize all of the commodities and to find C. P. A.'s and accountants everywhere in competition with other agencies of the Government, and in my considered judgment it cannot be done. You cannot administer that kind of a program successfully.

But the other and the more important implication is this: Do not forget that the inflationary spiral and the inflationary procedures that have been engendered all this time will still keep working their way in the post-war period. You are likely to get more repercussions after the war than now. The demand will then come out to cling to this whole subsidized program, and in a little while it hardens into permanency, and takes on a rigid character, and then all the power in the Government cannot pry it loose. Some years ago a distinguished member of the Cabinet made a statement, with respect to subsidies, and said that first the people will rather demur at the idea of a subsidy, but that after a time, when they get acclimated, they will expect it, and then a little bit later they will demand it. When we embark on this subsidy program I say to you frankly that we cannot see the end, nor can anybody else in government, and we may find ourselves committed for a generation of time for the payment of subsidies out of the Federal Treasury, bringing with it the greater centralization of the bureaucracy of this country, and finally a complete domination of business. If you take a processor whose volume of business in a year is $20,000,000, and $1,000,000 of that amount comes out of the Federal Treasury, in the way of subsidy, that means that the Federal Government has a 5-percent interest in that business. We are stewards of the public treasury. We could then very well say, "Since 5 percent of that business comes out of the people's fund we ought to have a couple of directors on the board of directors," and when you spin out that implication the ruin may finally be complete, and that may be the avenue by which we socialize the productive industries of the United States. This is an important and a dangerous thing that requires the best thinking of Congress now to match the determination of every agency in the Government that is bound and determined that there shall be a subsidy program for this country.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. The gentleman has touched briefly on the point that I had in mind. If we adopt this situation we are admitting that our economic system has broken down. The question in my mind is this: When wages get back to normal, as they will after the war, how are we ever going to get away from a subsidy?

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman has put his finger upon it. What someone is trying to do is to find a sweet and royal expediency with which to resolve a fundamental maladjustment in our economy. There may be an inclination to take something sugar-coated, because it is disagreeable, but in proportion as we take the sugar-coated route, so the fall will be infinitely greater when we get through.

The full implications of the subsidy philosophy have not yet fully impressed themselves upon this body. It may prove to be a long and tortuous road. It may extend far into the post-war period. It may require billions of dollars. It may develop other maladjustments which in turn will make it increasingly difficult to get back to a free economy in the post-war period. Certainly, it means growing Federal control over every industry, every business, and every commodity which is subsidized, so that finally we will have created a sort of W. P. A. for business and industry.

It is so easy to contend that it works in Great Britain and should therefore work here. Do not forget that Britain has only 7 percent of her people employed in the production of food commodities and hence it could work in a country where a small percentage are subsidized for the other 93 percent. Finally, do not forget that Britain's food needs have been provided by us through lend-lease and that the administration of a subsidy under those circumstances is comparatively easy and simple compared with the problem here. Let me earnestly suggest the need for immediate and careful consideration of this subsidy matter now before we embark upon a fallacious course that is dangerous and from which there may be no returning before it is too late.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, we have before us today in my judgment a most constructive proposal, and I rise at this time in support of Resolution 38 introduced by the chairman of the Agriculture Committee. I think there has been a good deal of misunderstanding abroad in this country, both today and in the past. When we have talked about living costs we have failed to distinguish between the prices received by the farmer at the farm for his crop on the one hand and the price the consumers pay for consumable food commodities when they are finally purchased in the markets of the Nation. There is a tremendous difference between these two things. For example, a loaf of bread costing the consumer 12 cents includes about 1 cent to the wheat farmer. And there are many other examples of the same thing that can be given. Not over one-third of all consumer expenditures for all foods has, through the years, reached the farmer.

In my judgment there are two fundamental things that we have to consider in all these instances. One of them is a constructive solution of these economic problems, and the other is the maintenance of a fundamental freedom among the people of this Nation and avoidance as much as possible of dependence upon Government. I believe and am convinced that out of this study there can come findings as to methods for the solution of this problem of the spread between what the farmer receives and the consumer pays, which method will not involve any dependence upon Government but which will be based on the cooperative action of the farmers themselves in getting together and mutually forming themselves into cooperative marketing and buying organizations for the solution of this problem. Cooperative methods have already proven successful, in many parts of the country and in connection with many problems. Cooperatives of farm producers have made all the difference in giving to those farmers command over their own economic fate.

I come from a section of the country where cooperatives are very widespread among our farmers, growers, and ranchers. I only need point out to you the vast difference between the problem confronted by individual farmers, each operating as an individual producer coming to market with his crops and confronted there with monopolistic control of that bottleneck between the producer and his market, and finding it necessary to sell at whatever price is dictated by that middleman. I ask you to contrast that picture with the other picture of a group of farm producers, wholly independent of any governmental intervention or aid, who have joined together in a cooperative organization, in order that they together may market their commodities in an orderly and fair way and have something to say about the price for which they shall sell.

Mr. FORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. FORD. Is not the only thing wrong with this that it comes about 50 years later than it should have?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I think this has always been the central problem of agriculture, and I am glad the chairman of our committee has brought this matter to the attention of the House. I have no doubt it will pass this House without dissent. I feel that is altogether worth while. The main thing I wanted to bring to the House in these few remarks is simply the idea that out of earnest and careful consideration of this problem there can come a deeper understanding on the part of all of us, on the part of many people throughout this country of the capacity that exists among groups of the American people to solve their problems in a constructive manner, if they will apply the principle and method of cooperation thereto.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I am glad to hear the gentleman say what he has said with regard to the purpose of this resolution, because I value his opinion. I may say for the benefit of my colleagues in the House that the gentleman from California is also the author of a very outstanding book, and I hope to have the pleasure of going through it in the very near future.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I appreciate very much, indeed, what my able and earnest colleague from Minnesota has said. I want to thank him very sincerely, indeed, and to say I will feel very much honored to have him read my book.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LAMBERTSON].

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JENNINGS].

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial and an essay.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COOLEY].

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, this resolution contemplates the most comprehensive investigation that has ever been sought at the hands of Congress. The magnitude of the task should not frighten us. The scope of the resolution is broad enough to actually embrace a thorough investigation of the entire economy of America. Under the authority of this resolution all phases of the great distribution system of this country will be thoroughly investigated.

The resolution was unanimously reported by the House Committee on Agriculture and met no opposition at the hands of the Rules Committee of the House. I predict that it will pass the House in a few moments without a dissenting vote. This, Mr. Speaker, is clear and convincing evidence of the necessity for the investigation contemplated. It seems to be generally conceded by everyone that the spread between the prices producers receive and the prices consumers must pay is too great. When you visit retail stores it is easy to understand why consumers complain. When you visit the farm it is easy to understand why farmers complain. In seeking the passage of this resolution I do not mean to even suggest that the margin of profit now being realized by the retail merchants of America is in itself the cause or even a contributing cause. Frankly, I do not believe that the retail merchants have realized or are now realizing unholy profits upon retail sales. The fact is, on account of the many difficulties which they are now encountering many small retail merchants have been forced out of business. Thousands of them have been forced to close their doors on account of the fact that they could not operate upon the small margins of profit which they are allowed to make.

In supporting this resolution I assure you that I am not only interested in the welfare of the producer and in the welfare of the consumer, but I am likewise interested in the welfare of those who are now charged with the responsibility of operating this great distribution system of America. Certainly those who are now dependent for a livelihood upon the successful operation of the distribution system of this country should welcome the investigation which is sought by this resolution.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. I know many questions will be investigated by this committee relating to the transportation of produce from farm to market and its distribution, but I wonder if this committee or one of its subcommittees will thoroughly investigate the reprehensible practice engaged in by some labor organizations in making truckers pay a fee to their unions before they can enter certain cities, which charge comes out of the pockets of both the farmer and the consumer.

Mr. COOLEY. I thank my friend for having mentioned the very deplorable situation referred to. I have every reason to believe that the committee will thoroughly investigate this particular matter.

The sponsors of this resolution are devoted to the ideals of America and they believe in the American way of life. They believe in the competitive system of free enterprise and they likewise believe that with all of its ills and imperfections the distribution system of America is the best distribution system in the world. There is a general belief, however, that within our present distribution system many evil practices have been permitted and that many parasites and leeches have fastened themselves upon the distribution system of the country which should be and remain in all respects a competitive system.

It will be the purpose of this committee to determine whether or not our system can be made more efficient or more economical. It will be the purpose of the committee to determine whether or not better methods of marketing can be found; methods which will bring about the greatest possible reduction in distribution costs. This, Mr. Speaker, is the imperative challenge to the merchants of America. We must eliminate the evil and preserve the good that is in our present system and we must perfect our system for the future. Only by thinking of the future will we be able to influence the economy in which we shall live.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOLEY. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Does the resolution also provide for investigating the discrimination going on here in Washington in favor of the chain stores over the individual groceryman?

Mr. COOLEY. I think that the resolution does contemplate that. As I stated in the beginning, I think the investigation will be the most comprehensive ever authorized by this Congress and the committee charged with the responsibility of conducting this investigation will have an opportunity to perform a very worth-while service.

Mr. RANKIN. Will it also investigate the freight-trade discrimination against the agricultural sections of the country?

Mr. COOLEY. I certainly hope so, and if I have anything to do with it I shall insist that that be done.

Mr. PACE. That is particularly named in the resolution.

Mr. COOLEY. Yes; that is definitely mentioned in the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GILCHRIST].

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Speaker, so far as I now recall, I was the first person to lay down upon this table a long line of packages of food which people bought in order that they might eat. I had exhibits like this now in my hand and I called attention to the great spread between the farm prices farmers got for these foods out on the farm and the prices consumers paid for use at the dinner table. The farmer is always blamed for this great spread between farm and dinner table but he gets very little of it.

Here is a corn product. I live in a corn country. The corn in that package of corn flakes cost $134.40 a bushel, and still they damn the farmer, although he got about 80 cents a bushel for it.

I also have in this second package some good old corn meal. Nobody ever had better food than good old corn meal mush on Sunday night, mush and milk, or fried mush the next morning. You cannot have any better stuff to eat than that on the farm. That corn is just simply ground up corn. I suppose the farmer got 80 cents a bushel for it. But the corn in this package cost $3.36 a bushel.

I sold some corn when I was out home during the recess at Easter for 88 cents per bushel. It is always the farmer who is to blame. The farmer is not responsible for the high cost of living.

This is a bill for the consumer. I have seen corn so low that we burned it in our homes in order to keep warm instead of buying coal with the proceeds of that corn. This resolution provides simply for an investigation. When we were before the Rules Committee someone there asked me, "Well, what are you going to do about it?" Candidly, I told them that I did not know exactly what we could do. But there are many things that might be done. The doctor always has to make an examination and a diagnosis of the disease before he can remedy it. If I have fallen arches, the doctor should find out whether the trouble is in my feet or up here in the lumbar vertebrae. That is what we will do in this case. We want to know what is causing this thing that makes living so high and farm products so low. We want to know, for example, how the cooperatives can maintain and save the consumer this money and how the farmers can get some of the things that they really earn. I have never yet read a metropolitan paper that told the truth. They all talk about the higher cost of living as if it were the farmer's fault.

Something was said a moment ago about chain stores. Here is the O. P. A. advertising about rolling back prices and paying subsidies, and telling our small merchants that they cannot sell as cheaply as can the big chain and catalog houses. They are absolutely advertising it to the consumers of the small merchants at the cost of the small merchants and they are advertising to the consumers that the chain stores can sell cheaper than the local merchants. An investigation as called for in this bill is demanded.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. VURSELL].

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a letter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. VURSELL]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of the time on this side to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MURRAY].

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, as far as this resolution is concerned I am sure that under the leadership of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FULMER] it will be handled in a very splendid manner and ultimately some good will result from it. I just wonder if our immediate food problem does not need a little more attention than some may think. I do not think the Members of this House appreciate the difficulties and the embarrassing situation as far as food is concerned.

I just want to leave one thought with you, if I can, in regard to subsidies, and I know how dangerous this ground is I am going to step out on. I know how thin the ice is, so do not feel sorry for me. The mere fact that you pay a subsidy is not any assurance that we are going to get production. This last year we have had subsidies extended to cheese, for example, but we still have 24 percent less cheese today than a year ago. They have not put any subsidies on hogs, but we have something that takes the place of a subsidy. We had a guaranteed price of $13.25 as a floor price up until September 1944. That inspired the producers to go ahead. The hog farmer knows what the floor is going to be and he knows that as long as the governmental agencies keep corn down below parity that he has a pretty good feeding ratio, so he can go ahead and expand his operations as far as hogs are concerned.

There is something deeper than that in these subsidies, and here is where the ice really gets thin.

That is the difficulty. They say, Are you against a subsidy? I got a letter this morning from the head of a farm organization saying he was against all subsidies. I wanted to be honest with myself and honest with him and I had to ask him if he wants to dispense with subsidies as it affects his own group.

I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] a question with reference to the farm bill. How in the name of common sense can they bring in a bill like the agricultural appropriation bill was brought in on the floor of the House to provide for the payment of not $5, not a hundred dollars, not a thousand dollars, but as high as a hundred thousand dollars for certain big land operators in this country—to people who happen to be engaged in a system of agriculture from which they are receiving 100 percent, 120 percent, to as high as 145 percent of parity for their product?

I ask you in all fairness the question, Why should the United States Treasury send checks to someone who is engaged in the type of farming from which he is receiving 120 to 140 percent of parity; why should a subsidy be taken out of the Treasury for which the future generations will have to pay? We all know why they want to roll back prices. There is no use deceiving ourselves; it is not only to take care of a group of our citizens who have not had an increase in salary, to take care of the group of citizens that are on relief, individuals who are receiving pensions, railroad retirement payments. As far as I am concerned, individually, I can understand the reason for extending a subsidy as far as paying the grocery bills of some of those groups with a whole lot more complacency than I can to take millions and millions of dollars out of the United States Treasury and send checks to people that are getting 125 to 140 percent of parity, when some of them will receive up to $100,000 a year.

There are those who stand up on the floor of the House, day after day, and seem to feel badly for some particular group of people, like these small business groups, and I have seen enough tears shed here this session to float a battleship, but the question that disturbs me about it is the fact that, with all the lawyers we have in Congress, we do not know where the authority of law is that gives the O. P. A. the right to put these people out of business; I would like to know under what law or authority these men are put out of business.

When Mr. Brown was before our committee he was asked the question as to what authority they are using, what authority does the O. P. A. have, to issue certain orders and regulations which are forcing people out of business. Mr. Brown himself said he was not too sure whether he had the legal right to do what certain groups were trying to get him to do. I think that is one of the troubles of this whole grade-labeling business. First of all, you have got to find some authority in the law authorizing them to do something about grade labeling before we should have grade labeling.

In other words, Congress formerly passed laws and the bureaus carried them out; now Congress has to pass laws to keep the bureaus from doing something they did not have a right to do in the first place. These packers and canners are a part of this food program and we must recognize that fact.

There is no use of our getting excited about it. As to subsidies, I think if we are going to subsidize we should subsidize right straight across the board on the basis of need. If we want to give a subsidy to the groups that are not already getting a subsidy, that is one thing, but why should we pay a subsidy out of the United States Treasury to someone who is now getting 125 to 140 percent of parity for his product, and deny a subsidy to another person whose wages have been frozen at 30 cents per hour? If the subsidy is wrong in principle, we should quit. But there is no justice in extending subsidies to one group and denying them to other groups that have a more economic reason for needing them.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, apparently there is no opposition to this resolution. It is a resolution that ought to be adopted. It is a resolution that is of importance and far reaching in its scope. I doubt if there has been a resolution introduced that is more far reaching than this one. I hope that this committee in its investigation will go into the question of discriminatory freight rates.

Mr. MORRISON of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLMER. I yield.

Mr. MORRISON of North Carolina. I would just like to inject into this argument this thought: That I am very much in favor of the resolution, but I wish to express the opinion that it will not have much effect on our present situation. This investigation will involve time. I think that the country is in a critical condition with respect to the production of foodstuffs and that we ought to proceed, long before we can possibly hope to have a report from this committee.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I have a special order for today, which I would like to change to next Wednesday. I therefore ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday next, June 2, at the conclusion of the legislative program and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. SCOTT, from June 1 to June 3, inclusive, on account of official business.

WOMEN'S ARMY CORPS

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 495) to establish a Women's Army Auxiliary Corps for service in the Army of the United States; and pending that motion, may I say that it is my understanding that the bill is to be considered with 1 hour of general debate, the time to be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS] and myself.

The SPEAKER. That has already been agreed to.

The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 495, with Mr. IZAC in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I just wish to make a very brief statement on the bill as it is presented to the House.

The Senate passed this bill last February. It came to the House Committee on Military Affairs and was amended in several particulars.

The principal thing the legislation does is to change the status of the present Women's Army Auxiliary Corps, which is treated now as with but not in the Army, the change being that it is no longer to be the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps, but the Women's Army Corps.

Under this measure, if enacted in its present form, as reported by the committee, these women will be permitted to volunteer or not volunteer, as they choose, as members of the Army of the United States; in other words, it remains a voluntary organization. Those who are now in the corps as an auxiliary to the Army may become as a whole members of the Army, but those who do not wish to remain in the Women's Army Corps and become members of the Army are to be discharged.

The number fixed in the original legislation as a maximum was 300,000, I believe, although I may be mistaken. My recollection is not definite on it. We have reduced that to 150,000. I am not sure we acted wisely in that respect, but I find no objection to it and no criticism up to this time.

Another vital change which the House Committee on Military Affairs wrote into the bill as an amendment is a provision stating that the members of the Women's Army Corps shall not be permitted to command combat troops. Their authority is limited to the command, control, and direction of those in the Women's Army Corps and does not apply to the male members of the United States Army.

Another change we made in the Senate bill was to reduce the minimum age limit from 21 to 20. The age limits fixed in the pending bill are 20 to 45.

We do not provide in this measure that the members of the Women's Army Corps may have the benefits of the service men's dependency allowances, but we do provide that they shall be entitled to all other benefits and privileges of other members of the Army of the United States, that is, male members, enlisted men and officers in the same rank that they shall occupy in the armed services. We put the administration of this portion of the act under the Veterans' Administration instead of the Federal Employees' Compensation Commission.

As I stated a moment ago, this remains entirely voluntary. The corps is a volunteer organization. There will be no drafting of members of this corps. The only enlistment will be volunteering by those who desire to become members of the corps.

Mr. Chairman, I think that in substance covers the principal changes in the legislation.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Does this measure allow these girls the privilege of taking out insurance?

Mr. MAY. It applies to them the same as to enlisted men and officers in the Regular Establishment, of the same rank and grade.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. Chairman, the act approved about a year ago which established the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps provided for the creation of a corps of women for service with but not in the Army. This was done designedly, for several reasons, the principal problem being that the creation of the Corps was in the nature of an experiment. The extent to which the Corps would be utilized by the Army was uncertain, and its exact place in the Military Establishment was subject to some doubt. That was somewhat the reverse of the situation insofar as the WAVES of the Navy are concerned. The WAVES became part of the Navy, but the WAAC did not become part of the Army.

I may say that the record of the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps since it was established more than justifies the wisdom of the forward action taken at that time. It is a matter of record at the War Department that the Department here has had requisitions from division, corps, army, and general military headquarters throughout the country, and even outside of the country, for approximately 500,000 trained WAAC's, it having been proven conclusively to the military commanders that they might well replace personnel at these headquarters and allow them to shift the duties of male noncommissioned officers and officers from these headquarters to combat and front line duty; so that the value of the WAAC as a military adjunct is now definitely established.

This bill in effect gives them the various benefits which would accrue to them as a result of being a part of the Army. It also lowers the enlistment age to 20 from 21. This puts them on an even basis with the WAVES, with similar provision being made for them.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS].

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I think there is no real opposition to the bill. It seems but just to give these women an opportunity to take out national life insurance, and to give them other benefits. The War Department believes they will be more valuable actually taken into the Army than as an auxiliary. In the beginning they felt that an auxiliary was wise, but as time has gone on they have felt it is important to take them into the Army.

I have seen a good many of these WAAC's and I find them extremely dignified and unselfish in their service. They only wish to take the place of the men in order to release them for duty and to fill any position where they are needed, no matter how humble or prosaic. They are doing a very fine, patriotic job, and they have my deepest respect and gratitude, and I know that all the Members of the House hold them in the same respect and the same honor that I do. The Commander in Chief of the Army, President Roosevelt, paid the WAAC's a fine tribute on their first anniversary.

The following information was presented to me by the War Department showing the necessity for a certain number of WAAC's overseas:

The War Department has found by experience that there are certain duties that are most efficiently performed by women. This was true in 1918 when a number of civilian women were sent to France, and it is true today in most of the overseas theaters. These duties relate principally to clerical and communications functions in the higher headquarters.

Conditions in the active and semiactive theaters today are such that it has been found impracticable and inadvisable to send to those areas women in civilian status, and the War Department now restricts the movement of women to those areas to those who are enrolled in some uniformed organized corps (such as the WAAC or the Army Nurse Corps). This is necessary in order that their supply, administration, and security may be properly handled by appropriate military agencies.

It will continue to be necessary to send some women overseas. Certain clerical and technical personnel will be required in addition to nurses, hospital dietitians, and physiotherapists. All should have equal protection of the uniform and a recognized military status. The need for WAAC services overseas is frequently relatively greater from the standpoint of military efficiency and necessity than is the need for them in this country, even though the numbers overseas will never be excessive. To prohibit use of the WAAC's overseas will seriously hamper the War Department in making the most effective use of all Army personnel and will deny to the women who must be sent overseas the protection that status as a member of the Women's Army Corps affords.

Attention should be invited to the fact that we already have WAAC units in overseas theaters, particularly in north Africa. Any restriction now in the use of WAAC's overseas would necessitate the immediate replacement of this personnel, with resulting burden on shipping and administration.

There appears to be little consistency in permitting nurses, hospital dietitians, and physiotherapists to go overseas and at the same time prohibit similar use of Women's Army Corps personnel.

We now have under consideration requests from overseas theater commanders for over 3,000 WAAC personnel. Plans for early shipments against these requisitions are now being formulated.

The following is a letter from the able director, Oveta Culp Hobby, as a result of further quotations from Army officers as to the kind of service the WAAC's are performing:

MAY 26, 1943.

Hon. EDITH NOURSE ROGERS,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MRS. ROGERS: Here are some additional quotations about the corps which ranking officers have made. I am sure you will enjoy reading them as much as I did:

Brig. Gen. J. R. Kilpatrick, commanding general, Hampton Roads, Port of Embarkation, Newport News, Va.:

"I am greatly impressed with their discipline, intelligence, efficiency, and devotion to duty. They have raised the standard of discipline of the command and are doing a splendid job."

Col. George W. Teachout, commanding officer, Camp Crowder, Mo.:

"I believe we have at Camp Crowder one of the largest groups of the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps in any post. * * * The morale of the girls is very high. General Milliken, General King, and myself, each of whom has a company in our command, are most delighted and pleased with the work that the girls are doing."

Maj. Gen. Barton K. Yount, commanding general, A. A. F. Flying Training Command, Fort Worth, Tex.:

"Your corps has already proved its value in hundreds of departments which were not anticipated when it was founded.

"The first detachments of WAAC's have begun to arrive at stations of this command, and they are already beginning to take the place of enlisted men who will thereby be made available for service overseas."

Brig. Gen. Herbert C. Holdridge, Post Commandant, Fort Washington, Md.:

"The war has come into the home, so woman's place is now in the war."

Lt. Gen. Brehon B. Somervell, A. S. F.:

"Where the WAAC is, there is a job well done. The women of the corps are more than fulfilling the hopes of the Army. Their work is splendid; their service of great value. The Army needs them more and more, and looks on them with pride."

Brig. Gen. T. J. Hanley, A. A. F.:

"The WAAC's are doing a fine job wherever they are and the Army Air Forces are looking forward to receiving many more companies."

Col. E. W. Timberlake, post commander, Bolling Field, D. C.:

"The Women's Army Auxiliary Corps personnel assigned to our command has shown the highest type of intelligence and aptitude in relieving enlisted men for administrative functions. The exchange is made on a one-for-one basis and, frankly, I have found the WAAC's work, quantitatively and qualitatively, to be equal to that of the enlisted men they replaced."

Col. Charles W. Seifert, post executive to Fifth Service Command:

"The WAAC company is fulfilling our expectation of service to the very highest degree. Their demonstration of military courtesy, enthusiasm, and spirit of service is an inspiration to the entire command."

Sincerely,

OVETA CULP HOBBY,
Director.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEARNEY].

Mr. KEARNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks at this point and include an article from the Yank.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will have to get permission in the House to include the article referred to.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York to revise and extend his remarks?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be no further desire for time in support of the bill. I understand the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINCENT] has requested time in opposition. I yield the gentleman 10 minutes.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, this bill ought not to be here. In my service, I believe it is the worst bill that has been introduced in this Congress during that time. No one, in my judgment, can justify the provisions of the bill. I am not speaking here today for myself. I am speaking to you today for the women of America. The other day I made some remarks on this floor with regard to a similar bill for the WAVES, and a committee came to see me. That committee was made up of the wives of naval and Army officers. They told me that they had been precluded from going out of the United States with their husbands during the emergency. They said for our sake, they pleaded with me to use every effort I could to prevent the women's auxiliaries, the WAVES, the WAAC, the SPARS, or any other organization to have that privilege which was denied to them. Do you doubt that the wives of Army officers and naval officers are opposed to this measure? Of course you do not. They want to bring in 150,000 WAVES and 150,000 WAAC's. I do not know how many SPARS they want to bring in or how many of these other auxiliaries. I was amazed the other day when I read in a newspaper that some college had organized a group of girls that called themselves the WORMS. Here is what you have to contend with. There are nearly 10,000,000 men in the service and only 1,250,000 men overseas. You cannot open a second front because you do not have sufficient shipping to send the men and equipment over there. And it was testified before our committee that it takes 17 tons of shipping to send 1 person over. Five hundred WAVES would take approximately 10,000 tons of shipping; a pretty good-sized ship to take them over.

And here we have MacArthur praying for dive bombers, praying for planes, praying for bombs, and machine guns, and what do you do? You send them a bunch of WAVES or a bunch of WAAC's, and why? Because they say the women ought to have a part in this war. I take off my hat to the women of this country. They have built our cities, they have built our schools, and our homes, and we owe a great debt of gratitude to them for all the fine things in this country.

God created them a little lower than the angels, and they can have anything in this country that they want. I say to you that if they had the right to sit in these seats this afternoon and vote on this bill it would not pass, because the good women in your district and in my district would not support a measure of this kind. They are not going to fight. One of them came up here the other day to see me. I do not know why. She is not from my district, she is not from my State, but she had seen in the newspapers where I had been opposed to some of these organizations. She said to me: "I want to tell you about this thing. They took me down to Daytona Beach when I was enlisted, or incarcerated or whatever you want to call it, and they took over a big hotel down there and they took every door off the hotel, the first thing. They did not want any privacy in that building. They took all the doors down, even the bathroom doors, and they put all the girls in together. Then they had to have a bed check—I never heard of a bed check before—at 11 o'clock at night." All military training. I then asked her to tell me what they taught them down there, whether they taught her to run a typewriter, or an adding machine. She said: "Here are some of the things I had to learn. The hardest thing I had to learn was to salute an officer. You had to stand with your feet together, stand up straight, get your arm out at a particular angle, but I could not do the job just right." After a while she mastered that in the boot training. She said the hardest thing she had to learn was to say "Good night, ma'am."

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want you to tell me in the name of common sense what good it is going to do, to teach a girl that kind of stuff, when you say they are to be brought in here to do book work so as to release some man for overseas duty. The fact is you want to militarize the women of this country, to regulate them, and teach them that men are superior, and that they have to look up to them and salute and that commands must be recognized. Then you have in this bill that a WAAC cannot give a command to anybody except a WAAC. She cannot command a soldier or a sailor even though she outranks him. No, she has to take commands from some officer.

I hope that this Congress will not allow the womanhood of this Nation to be taught that there s class in this country. I have always thought that a good woman was as good as anything in the world; that she was equal to anything. But no, not so. Down in Kentucky, down in my own district a few days ago, at a camp down there, a ridiculous thing happened. A second lieutenant came down the road in a car driven by a WAAC. They drove up to a famous roadside inn, a beautiful little place, to eat. He got out of the car. He left the WAAC at the wheel. He went in and wined and dined himself, and he did not take the girl in, never bought her anything to eat. When he was questioned about his action, do you know what his answer was? He said, "I could not take her in for lunch because I outrank her. I could not eat with her. Because of military regulations it would be a violation for me to do that." If you want to teach our women and our girls to become chauffeurs for second lieutenants in the Army, then I am frank to admit that I do not understand my colleagues.

Oh, look here. We are spending billions of dollars; a bankrupt nation. When the boys come home we will not be able to pay them compensation. Yet you have three or four hundred thousand SPARS and WAVES and WAAC's. Look at what your country is paying your money for. Here is a picture in Sunday's Star. There is a beautiful girl. She said, "I joined to serve my country and I am having the time of my life."

You go down into my district and the high school children are bringing out their pennies to buy bonds in order to send bombs over there, and then they take that money and they spend millions and millions of dollars on this program, buying advertising, building camps, and renting institutions. The other day LaGuardia came down here and he got hold of Admiral Jacobs. He sold him on the idea of training the WAVES up in the Bronx at Hunter College. We spent $1,000,000 to rent the college. We spent $800,000 to rent apartment houses to house the WAVES. I said to Admiral Jacobs, "What did you do that for?" He thought it was very improper for me to ask such a question. You may think it improper now for me to bring this matter to your attention, but he said, "In fact, New York City has been hard hit by the war."

One member of my committee said, "I am surprised at that because the other night I was up there and I thought I was going to have to sleep in the park. I could not get a hotel room anywhere. I thought it was the richest city on the face of the earth. I have bragged about it all over my district," yet we come to find out from this admiral that he let LaGuardia sell him a bill of goods on Hunter College because New York needed something. Bartering away the people's money. Why? Because LaGuardia came down here and sold him on the idea of taking girls from Washington, from Tennessee, from Kentucky and sending them to Hunter College to be trained.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENNETT].

Mr. BENNETT of Missouri. I just wanted to ask the gentleman from New York a question. It is my understanding that under the law at present deceased WAAC's are not entitled to be buried in national cemeteries as are the WAVES and SPARS and the women marines. Is it the gentleman's understanding that one of the benefits which will accrue as a result of the enactment of this legislation is that that will be equalized?

Mr. ANDREWS. It entitles all members of the WAAC to all benefits of members of the Army.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I do not have any further requests for time. Therefore the Clerk may read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby established in the Army of the United States, for the period until the cessation of hostilities in the present war and for 6 months thereafter or for such shorter period as the Congress by concurrent resolution or the President by proclamation shall prescribe, or until January 1, 1945, whichever is earlier, a component to be known as the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 3, strike out all after the enacting clause down to and including line 9, and insert "That there is hereby established in the Army of the United States, for the period of the present war and for 6 months thereafter or for such shorter period as the Congress by concurrent resolution or the President by proclamation shall prescribe, a component to be known as the Women's Army Corps. The total number of women enlisted or appointed in the Women's Army Corps shall not exceed the number authorized from time to time by the President, and in no event shall exceed 150,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. The enlisted personnel of such corps shall consist of women enlisted in the Army of the United States under the provisions of the concluding paragraph of section 127a of the National Defense Act, as amended (54 Stat. 213). All laws and regulations now or hereafter applicable to enlisted men or former enlisted men of the Army of the United States and their dependents and beneficiaries shall, in like cases and except where otherwise expressly provided, be applicable respectively to enlisted personnel and former enlisted personnel of such corps and their dependents and beneficiaries.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, in line 9, after "2", strike out the remainder of the line and all down to and including the period in line 13, and insert: "The enlisted personnel of such corps shall consist of women of excellent character in good physical health, who are enlisted in the Army of the United States under the provisions of the last paragraph of section 127a of the National Defense Act, as amended (54 Stat. 213), and who are on the date of such enlistment citizens of the United States between the ages of 20 and 45 years."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. The commissioned officers of such corps shall consist of women appointed as officers in the Army of the United States under the provisions of the joint resolution of September 22, 1941 (55 Stat. 728), and ordered into the active military service of the United States.

They and their dependents and beneficiaries shall have all of the rights, privileges, and benefits accorded in like cases to other persons under that act, except where otherwise expressly provided.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 3, line 5, after the word States, insert "The commanding officer of such corps shall be a colonel and such officers of lower rank shall be appointed as the Secretary of War may prescribe: Provided, That physicians and nurses shall not be enlisted in this corps: And provided further, That military authority of officers commissioned under the provisions of this act may be exercised over women of the Women's Army Corps only, and is limited to the administration of the corps."

Page 3, line 15, after the word "act", insert "except where otherwise expressly provided."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. The Secretary of War is authorized to prescribe such additional regulations applicable to such corps and to the members thereof as he may deem necessary. The Women's Army Auxiliary Corps and the Army Nurse Corps shall be the only women's organizations in the Army of the United States.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all of section 4.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no woman appointed as an officer in the Army of the United States under the provisions hereof who has previously held an appointment as an officer of the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps established pursuant to the provisions of the act of May 14, 1942 (Public Law 554, 77th Cong.), shall be entitled to any uniform allowance payable to officers of the Army of the United States. Such officers who have not received a complete issue of uniforms, insignia, accessories, and equipment prescribed under the provisions of section 8 of such act of May 14, 1942, may be issued the remainder of such prescribed articles, and all such officers who have heretofore received, or may hereafter receive such complete issue, or any part thereof, may retain such articles as their personal property.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 3, line 23, strike out "5" and insert "4."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word and ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, in rising at this time I am appreciative of the tolerant attitude of the House which, during this debate, grants me the privilege of speaking out of order so that I may pay my humble tribute to the name and memory of one of Michigan's greatest citizens, and one of the greatest personalities of this generation, the late and beloved Edsel Bryant Ford.

Fate denied me the privilege of knowing, personally, this outstanding and upright fellow citizen, but I feel in my heart that I have known him intimately during most of my life.

Edsel Ford was a man of my own age. I have watched him grow alongside of his illustrious and productive father. I have watched him expand, even ahead of the great Ford enterprises. The only son of his father, he led an exemplary and inspiring life. Unlike the sons of some wealthy families, Edsel Ford grew to manhood modest, unspoiled, and productive. Scandal, not in the slightest degree, ever soiled his name. In following his father's footsteps, he has made a great success of his business but he has never lost touch with the world about him as he patronized the arts and the sciences, and contributed mightily to every worthwhile charity, not confining his gifts to any geographical area, nor to any particular element, or restricting benefits to any creed of our society.

My heart goes out to Henry Ford, a noble father, and to Mrs. Ford, a loving and devoted mother, in this their hour of supreme sacrifice in the loss of their only son.

In the time of the Nation's crisis, why could not this life have been spared to sustain the parents and the family of this outstanding and universally beloved citizen.

I offer my silent prayer for the repose of his kindly and noble soul, and I pray that the God of all, the Master Mechanic of the Universe, shall welcome this genius of production and grant him life everlasting, where his efforts will be even more appreciated than they were upon this earthly sphere. May the good Lord sustain the bereaved widow and the splendid sons and daughter, and the parents of the deceased with true Christian fortitude until they shall all meet again.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. Effective on the last day of the second calendar month following the date of the approval of this act, the act of May 14, 1942, as amended, except section 11 thereof, is hereby repealed. Section 11 of such act of May 14, 1942, shall not be applicable to enlisted personnel or commissioned officers of the corps established by this act except in cases in which its applicability is based upon the status of such enlisted personnel or commissioned officers as former members of the corps established by such act of May 14, 1942. Enlistment or acceptance of appointment under the provisions of this act shall terminate service under the act of May 14, 1942, and personnel who were enrolled or appointed under the act last mentioned who do not so enlist or accept appointment hereunder will be discharged. The Secretary of War is authorized to provide transportation and sleeping accommodations, or an allowance in lieu thereof, at the rate of 5 cents per mile, for the travel from her last duty post to the place of her acceptance for appointment or enrollment to any member of the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps established pursuant to the provisions of such act of May 14, 1942, who is not appointed or enlisted in the Army of the United States pursuant to the provisions of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 4, line 13, strike out "6" and insert "5."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Kentucky to explain why the bill does not give the dependents of the WAAC's an allowance. It is because enlisted members of the WAAC do not have dependents, or is there some other good reason for it?

Mr. MAY. The provision we inserted does not take away from the dependents that may be included under the Servicemen's Benefit Act, but it prohibits those members of this corps who are single from making claims for it, or those who have secondary or collateral dependents, that is, brothers and sisters rather than children.

Mr. KUNKEL. How about parents?

Mr. MAY. They are not included.

Mr. KUNKEL. But the parents of enlisted men are included.

Mr. MAY. They are.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky: On page 5, line 9, after the word "act" change the period to a colon and add the following: "That no member of this corps stationed in the United States shall be ordered to serve outside of the continental United States."

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of my amendment is to stop sending these WAAC's outside of the United States. The record will show, I am certain—at least I have seen newspaper statements of the fact—that they have had some trouble in north Africa with the organization they sent over there.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I feel sure the gentleman does not wish to make any statement along that line. I have checked and rechecked with the War Department and they tell me they have not had any difficulty with them over there.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. I yielded to the gentlewoman to ask a question, not to make a statement.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I know the gentleman does not wish to do the women any injustice.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. I am not saying that the girls were at fault, and no criticism of them should be made. Members of Congress who put through legislation to send them over there are due the criticism, not the girls. Since the gentlewoman has questioned my statement, I may say that I refer to the article in the Times-Herald by Helen Essary, whose daughter is a member of the WAVES. I am sure the gentlewoman from Massachusetts saw that, and I am sure all of you saw the statement in the paper about the trouble that had developed in north Africa, where the girls had to be given protection, probably by the convents or by the Mothers Superior over there. That statement was in the Times-Herald in an article written by Helen Essary a few days ago.

Here the Government goes out and robs the country of school teachers by advertisements such as I showed you awhile ago. Advertisements which appeal to the women of the country. Of course the women are patriotic, but you know what problems it brings when you put them in the service. Here is a battery here, there is a company there; they need a clerk, they need somebody to keep their records. What did we do in the other World War? We took boys out of the Army whose arches were fallen or who had other defects which prevented their serving in the combat troops. In my outfit we had a boy who had worked for the Associated Press. He could operate a typewriter faster than any person I have seen. He kept our records. There are plenty of boys who can do this work. Why have embarrassment? Why have trouble? Because when you send them over there boys are going to give their lives to protect them. When you send girls over there remember that with our soldiers you also have Arabs, you have Senegalese, you have all kinds of people in the service and they are going to be thrown in contact with them. There is bound to be complications. Those problems will come up. The only reason you want this bill is to go out and use it to entice more girls to join the organization. You know, the people of this country have not swallowed this stuff. They say, "We do not want our girls to go." Why, a mother came a thousand miles to my office to see me. Her daughter worked here in Washington and she is 20 years old. The mother was crying and asked me to beg her daughter not to join this organization. I told her to go down to Potomac Park, or to go down to Anacostia and look around and find out what the enlisted personnel in this organization had to do. The officers have good times. The enlisted personnel peel potatoes, they scrub floors, you make servants out of them, and teach them to say, "Good night, M'am," and all those things. Down South we expect our servants to use that language, not the young ladies of the land.

This is a problem and you have a number of them over there now. Certainly you have enough over there. Let us stop, look, and listen. Let us quit sending them over there. Let us send some men over there who can fight. Let us take off our coats and get ready to fight. You are in a war. When America thinks of an invasion, there will be the wounded, the crippled and maimed who will be piled back into this country. Women get sick the same as men do. They will crowd the hospitals, they will use up the doctors. They have no business over there. They are in the way and I beg this House and ask the Congress to rise up against this. I believe if we had a secret vote we would not have many votes for this bill, and you need not be afraid of it. I made the fight last July and I went home. I received the praise and approbation of 95 percent of the good women of my district. They do not want this thing. They do not want this to happen. You have 9,000,000 mothers now who have sent their sons away. They can stand that, but let us not send their daughters. They are in enough sorrow.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE]?

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, the objection comes too late. I make the point of order that the Chair had already ruled that the unanimous consent request was granted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair put the question, I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS] objected.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINCENT].

Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly that my good friend from Kentucky treats this bill partly as a matter of levity and also subjects 50,000 fine young women in this country, who have volunteered, if you please, to help win this war, to a certain form of criticism and sarcasm, to which I do not think they are entitled, and which I know they do not deserve. I happen to be a member of the Committee on Military Affairs and I have attended the hearings on this bill, and I voice, I believe, the unanimous opinion of the committee charged with the responsibility of looking into the matter. We heard the representatives of General Marshall who stated that these women have done a masterful job wherever they have been sent. Now, we bring in a bill here to clarify and simplify the law that this Congress passed by an overwhelming majority. I say in all fairness to these women that it is neither just nor magnanimous to ridicule them or to encourage vile and untrue propaganda about them. I see smiles and levity from a few, but I do not think these fine women deserve it. They volunteered their services and I assert they have done a grand job.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Did General Marshall testify on this bill?

Mr. THOMASON. Not personally on this bill, but the chairman of the committee, the distinguished gentleman from your own State, will bear me out that General Marshall sent word to the committee by his official representatives and spokesmen that the WAAC's had done a marvelous job and he not only wants them retained but he needs more. In that connection, may I ask my friend to take the time to read the report of General Eisenhower in north Africa in reference to the fine young American women who went to the battle front, who went right into the offices along with the high-ranking Army officers all the way up to the front, and also acted as translators. Many of them are college women with three or four degrees and who are able to speak two or three languages. Ask General Eisenhower how these fine young women performed in the battles of north Africa and there will not be a vote against this bill.

I wish I could relate some experiences that the members of the Committee on Military Affairs, along with a good many other Members of the House, had in New York yesterday. Most of the trip was a military secret but every man on the trip will now testify that the WAAC's are doing a fine patriotic job both at home and abroad. May I add right here that when 50,000 fine young American women in this country, enlisted and volunteered they probably enabled some married men to stay out on the farms of Kentucky and other States. These women who volunter must prove themselves to be women of high character. There has been entirely too much vile and untrue propaganda reflecting upon the character of these young women and I resent it. The records of the War Department show that they come from the best homes of America, and it is our duty in this terrible crisis to defend and encourage them. That is what I propose to do.

Mr. Chairman, I am only relating what the record shows by the testimony submitted before the Committee on Military Affairs.

I want to add this: That if these women have been doing a good job in north Africa, as General Eisenhower says they have, if they have done a splendid job in England, as the War Department says they have, if the War Department now says we need them and more, too, in order to enable more young men to enter the combat service, if they are needed, and you are going to adopt this amendment prohibiting foreign service, why not make it apply to nurses and all women now doing such grand work overseas? Why not be consistent?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. WADSWORTH. If the reason back of this amendment is sound, should we not disband the Army Nurse Corps?

Mr. THOMASON. Not only disband the Nurse Corps, but disband every military activity in which women are participating.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

Mr. KUNKEL. I object.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I take the floor only to show this: This is a bill from the Military Affairs Committee, and my good friend from Texas in some of his remarks has created a possible inference in the RECORD that those of us who a little later might have a different mind with respect to bills from the Navy Department might be placed in a wrong position with respect to any action we take on this bill.

I am perhaps willing to accept the advice of the Military Affairs Committee on matters originating in that committee, because I think, and I hope, that they have secured sufficient information from the War Department which they feel justifies them in their recommendation to the House. But I do not want any action of mine or of any other Member on this bill to be construed as binding him to follow any legislation or to support any legislation that might be brought on the floor of the House relating to the Naval Establishment. I say that for this reason: I am a member of the Naval Affairs Committee. We had a bill on the floor about 3 weeks ago to grant permission to use WAVES in overseas duty. I opposed that because I can tell you, as a member of the Naval Affairs Committee, that no one from the Navy Department has ever given any information to our committee that would in any way justify Congress allowing WAVES to go overseas.

Mr. THOMASON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I will yield in just a moment.

The situation with respect to nurses is entirely different. Nurses are women who, in most cases, have had 3 or 4 years of rigid disciplined service. They are more acquainted with life by nature of their profession.

There are 6,000 enlisted men on duty here in Washington, in the Navy Department, and 7,500 officers, most of them clamoring to get overseas. Women were enlisted and commissioned in the Navy in order to make it possible for these men to be relieved of desk duty and sent overseas, and we cannot justify sending one single woman into danger, even a danger that is occasioned by just a trip across the ocean, when there are over 13,000 men on duty behind desks in the Navy Department in Washington, and thousands and thousands of them are in the Naval Establishment in shore stations throughout the United States.

I am saying that so that when someone later comes out with a bill granting permission to use these WAVES on a service they never enlisted for, that because we might have accepted the recommendation from the Military Affairs Committee in this instance because they do not wish to risk impeding the progress of the war, and because we feel that the Military Affairs Committee should know more about it than the Members who are not on that committee, that any vote on this measure will not be considered as binding on anyone when a similar proposal might come with respect to the naval service.

Mr. COLMER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. COLMER. As a matter of fact, there is no difference, is there?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. In answer to my friend from Mississippi, I will say this: Maybe the War Department can justify, or the Military Affairs Committee can say that the exigencies of the moment are such, that the shortage of manpower is such that the need for women is great because in that way they can relieve men from desk duty in the War Department and send them overseas.

About that I do not know, because I do not sit in the secret executive sessions of the Committee on Military Affairs, but I hope that when they make a recommendation to this House they have examined the question thoroughly. I am a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, however, and a member of the subcommittee that has been appointed to investigate the personnel problem, enlisted, officer, and civilian, of the Navy Department here in Washington. The statistics we have on that with respect to these officers and enlisted men who want to go abroad, who want to go to sea, and who are not relieved to do so by a WAVE, are astounding. Then they come along and ask to send a woman overseas, when they are taking no steps to send the men who actually want to go.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EBERHARTER. If this bill is passed, will not that put these women in the same status as all soldiers, so that in the future if we pass any beneficial legislation for the veterans that legislation will apply equally to these women in the Army Corps; in other words, any pension legislation or anything like that will apply equally to these women?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Presumably it would, with one exception, that the provisions of the Service Men's Dependency Allowance Act do not apply to them.

But I did not want to discuss that particular phase of this bill.

The gentleman who just preceded me spent his time in discussing the bill that seeks to permit the WAVES to go on foreign duty. Personally, I am in favor of the WAVES going on foreign duty, but the conditions relating to the WAVES and to the women covered by this bill are not the same. In the first place, the women who are covered by this bill are already permitted to go on foreign duty and we are not authorizing it anew. When the WAVES bill was passed, for some reason the Committee on Naval Affairs saw fit not to recommend to this House that the WAVES be allowed to go on foreign duty. We are not bringing in something new in this bill to allow the WAAC's to have foreign duty. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINCENT] is injecting something new into it in trying to forbid to them that foreign duty. I certainly join with the gentleman from Pennsylvania in his desire to get these young men out of Washington and get them out of these desk jobs.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. With respect to the Naval Establishment——

Mr. SPARKMAN. With respect to all of them.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I take it for granted the gentleman knows more about the War Department than I do, because he is on the Committee on Military Affairs, but does the gentleman believe there is any justification in sending a single woman overseas in the Naval Establishment when there are 13,000 men on duty in the city of Washington?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Let us argue the naval bill when we get to it.

We have been assured by the War Department that they are moving these young men out just as fast as they can. Every woman in the Auxiliary Corps who has been trained and sent to the field has replaced a man. Under present regulations she must replace a man when she is sent out.

I was in a military establishment yesterday with other Members of Congress. I happened to talk to an officer of the WAAC. I asked her how many WAAC's were used in that particular establishment. She said that at the present time there are about 400, but that the plans call for 2,000. My question was prompted by seeing literally hundreds of young men, apparently able-bodied, well able to go out into field duty. Every one of those 1,600 additional WAAC's that will be sent to that establishment will replace one of those able-bodied young men and release him for foreign service. Remember that in foreign service we have hundreds and thousands of able-bodied young men who are driving jeeps and trucks and doing clerical jobs, doing the kind of work that women are doing in this country. Every woman we send to foreign duty will replace one of those men.

Talk about sending women to danger zones; we are working women right here in this country in places that are just as dangerous as the places they will be sent over there. There is a great arsenal down in my section of the country. I have gone in there and seen women doing dangerous work, working with dangerous chemicals, compounding explosives, and building fuses. I have read in the paper, as you have, of explosions in which women were killed. You do not object to their working in those places of danger. Is it any more dangerous to drive a jeep or an ambulance or a truck or to do some clerical work miles and miles back of the front line, but in a place where they can substitute for some able-bodied young men who can be out digging a trench and carrying a rifle and firing a gun and doing the real front-line work?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I had no intention of taking any part in this debate, and I certainly want to see the bill passed, but I do not want the RECORD to stand that in the opinion of this House, American women would be in the way if they were permitted to go overseas or to go to any part of the world with our Army.

I want to pay my tribute to the services rendered by American women during World War No. 1 in France and in other places. There is nothing that means so much to an American soldier, if he has the misfortune to find himself in an Army hospital, as to look up and see in that ward a fine American woman. I never saw one in the military service that was in anybody's way. The same thing applies not only to nurses but to recreational aides, physio and occupational aides, whether they are in uniform or whether they are just patriotic American women who have gone abroad to render whatever service in a recreational way they can to the men of the armed services.

So long as our military authorities continue to select the type of women that have been selected in the WAAC, the WAVES, and the other women's organizations, we are not going to have any problem with them, whether they be in Africa, Great Britain, or on the continent of Europe. I respect the women who have volunteered their services, and I know that the American men now serving in our military and naval forces will protect them wherever they may be assigned to carry on their worth-while activity. The man who wrote the words for the popular song The Rose of No Man's Land expressed my attitude to the American women who serve so nobly in time of war. God bless them. Their contribution to the morale and the morals of our Army cannot be overstated.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment and ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, a number of us in this House took part in a little trip yesterday, and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] came very close to bringing out a thought I have in mind, which I think is very pertinent. Those who were in the party will recall the great office building that our group passed by, where not alone on one floor but on half a dozen or more floors there were several hundred men who had their heads out of the window. I studied carefully the faces of those young men, soldiers, both officers and enlisted men. They were glancing out of the windows of this huge Army base office building and watching the world go by. I believe it was the gentleman from Alabama who said to me at that time, "Why can we not have WAAC's sitting up there doing those office jobs, so that they may release these young men, who certainly should be in more important work in this war of survival we are facing?" I agreed heartily with him. We estimated at that time, less than 24 hours ago, that fully 80 percent of those hundreds of soldiers who were watching us go by were under 30 years of age. Personally, I was disturbed at their lack of application to their jobs.

Permit me to bring one more point to your attention. In various tours of Army camps during the past 2 weeks I do not believe that I ever at any point heard of anything that was not complimentary to the work that the WAAC's are doing today. I made inquiry especially of numerous officers as to how the WAAC's were of assistance and whether such organization proved beneficial. These officers invariably praised the work of the WAAC's. One complained that there were far too few of this group in the service.

I do feel, Mr. Chairman, that the WAAC's perform a great service to our Nation. I do not agree that they should go overseas, however. Let the able-bodied men we saw yesterday in that office building go overseas. These young women can replace them at their office jobs and most likely do a far better job than the young men who I am sure would much rather go into active service.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I rise merely to make one or two remarks. There is a letter which appears in the record of the hearings from General Marshall, pointing out definitely the need for these women in the Army of the United States. He was frank enough to say to our committee that when he considered the original legislation he thought their proper place was to be with the Army, but not in the Army; but in view of the experience he has had in their training, he has changed his mind and come to feel that their place is in the Army.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. Yes.

Mr. COOLEY. To ask the chairman of the committee if the enlisted personnel and the heads of the personnel, both, likewise will be free to withdraw from service and not be forced to remain in the Regular Army?

Mr. MAY. I made that statement in my original remarks. It is entirely voluntary. If they do not want to remain, they are immediately discharged.

Mr. COOLEY. In other words, all of the enlisted personnel, under the changes made, will be free to retire from the service?

Mr. MAY. That is correct. And that relates to officers also.

Mr. HARRIS of Virginia. Did the general make any remarks in regard to the necessity for WAAC's going overseas?

Mr. MAY. I do not remember that there was anything in his letter about that, but he did send a couple of hundred of them to Africa.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I have a statement here that I shall ask to have inserted in my remarks, which comes from the War Department, and which was brought to me by a legislative representative, to use regarding the sending of women overseas. I think the House will be favorable to their going overseas, as the War Department has wished.

Mr. MAY. I read the article the gentlewoman refers to, and it may be included in my remarks, when we get into the House, if the lady so desires.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. While General Marshall may not have made any specific statements, it is true that the Secretary of War recommended the passage of this bill, which does provide for that service.

Mr. MAY. That is correct.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Is it not also true that the defeat of this bill would not abolish the auxiliary corps? This legislation is intended to supplant, replace, and perfect existing legislation.

Mr. MAY. Yes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Among other things, if it becomes necessary to discipline a member of the corps, this legislation would authorize that, whereas the present provisions are lacking in that respect.

Mr. MAY. I thank the gentleman for his contribution, which is in point and greatly clarifies the situation.

Mr. FOLGER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last four words.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOLGER. I yield.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOLGER. Mr. Chairman, I have finally concluded it would be a cowardly thing for me to remain silent, feeling as I do in reference to this legislation and seeing that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINCENT] is bearing the burden of the opposition alone.

I am opposed to the bill, and being opposed to it I did not feel it was allowable that I should remain silent in a cowardly way.

Mr. Chairman, I have not been requested to do so, and I know that no indictment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINCENT] was intended, but I do want to suggest to the House that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINCENT] has not spoken in disrespect or disparagement of the womanhood of the United States of America. If that conclusion was reached, I think it was by misunderstanding and misinterpretation of his words. The man does not live who holds in higher respect the womanhood of the world than I do. I do not claim unusual position in that regard, but I do claim equality of position with anybody who lives. On account of that pedestal upon which I have placed her and which position she has occupied in my life always, I am opposed to this bill. I have hesitated very seriously about making opposition to it because I did not have the advantage and benefit of listening to the testimony before this fine Committee on Military Affairs, which committee I have followed every time since June 1941, when I became a Member of this House. But I suggest to you that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER], who was rolled into this House to testify as to the grandeur of the presence of women in time of war, made most particular reference to that woman who occupies a position as grand as one can—that of a nurse who ministers to one when he is injured or sick or about to die.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOLGER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I do not want the RECORD to appear that I confined my remarks to nurses.

Mr. FOLGER. I shall be particular about that. The gentleman made further reference, and that is an interpretation of my own. We are having a shortage of nurses throughout this Nation today. There is pending in the House and in the Senate a bill which would limit an appropriation for the purpose of securing nurses against the anticipated time when there will be an alarming dearth of them. The bill provides that those who shall administer it must confine it to hospitals which have an average number of 100 patients per day throughout the year. In my State of North Carolina it has the effect of making provision for 9 hospitals and denying that provision to 34 hospitals, and I apprehend the same ratio will hold largely in every State in the Union. I want some more nurses.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOLGER. I yield.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Granting the gentleman's argument is true, and it is true, how would the defeat of this bill affect that proposition one bit?

Mr. FOLGER. I heard a soldier on the train the other night as I came to Washington, talking to two lovely girls. There were two soldiers and two girls. They were all nice. The girls were nice. The boys were fine. Those young men said, with great respect, "We wish you would give us nurses instead of soldiers or WAAC's and WAVES," and they did it very politely.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOLGER. I yield.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I would like to make the observation that anybody who knows the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINCENT] knows that he has the highest respect for the womanhood of America and knows that he places them on a high pedestal. For that very reason he is arguing against this bill, in order to preserve the respect that the people of this country have for the women of this country and to keep them on that high pedestal.

Mr. FOLGER. I do not think anything else was intended. I think it was a reference to some organization that was misunderstood.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment reported again?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the pending amendment.

There being no objection, the Clerk again reported the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINCENT].

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky) there were ayes 34 and noes 69.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: On page 5, line 10, insert:

"SEC. 6. The provisions of the Servicemen's Dependents Allowance Act of 1942 (Public Law 625, 77th Cong., approved June 23, 1942), shall not be applicable to the dependents of women enlisted under the provisions of this act. Money allowances for subsistence and rental of quarters shall be allowed to women commissioned or enlisted under the provisions of this act only to the extent that they are allowed to male commissioned officers and enlisted men, respectively, without dependents."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky: On page 5, line 18, after the word "dependents", at the end of line 18, strike out the period, add a colon and the following: "Provided, That members of this corps shall not be eligible for pension or compensation for disabilities received on account of service in said corps unless such service was rendered outside the continental United States."

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, we are about ready, I hope, to open a second front and when we do our wounded heroes will be coming back to this country in countless numbers. I hope when that time comes they will not be put into competition, these veterans returning from the battle fronts, with girls who have been assigned civil-service jobs in this country.

My amendment provides that if a girl goes overseas she shall be eligible for compensation, but unless she serves overseas she will not be eligible to receive a pension or compensation for physical disability received during the war. I hope you will not put them in competition with these boys who go over there and risk their lives, for the girls who stay home are not in the danger zone. The Government clothes them, pays them a good salary, and they are not in danger here. The whole theory of pension and compensation is to take care of our veterans who fight our wars, who put themselves in danger, and become thereby disabled.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Gladly.

Mr. COOLEY. If we intend to exact the same responsibility from the WAAC's, does not the gentleman think we ought to make them the same allowances and provide for them the same benefits whether they be pensions or other compensation? If we have the policy of employing them in this country, it seems to me that identically the same provisions should be made for the women as for the men.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. The committee did not do that; they excluded them from making allotments to their dependents. If it is true that their dependents are not entitled to allotments, the WAAC's who serve in this country ought not to be entitled to pensions or compensation for physical disability especially when they stay here in good jobs, in the country at home, not in any more danger than you are in, not in any more danger than I am in right now.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Would the gentleman support an amendment that would deny compensation to a soldier who served in the United States?

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. I certainly will support an amendment that would preclude any man who stays in the United States and is not put in danger from receiving any compensation. If he is not put in danger, why should he take funds due a wounded soldier?

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, does not the gentleman know that in some of the maneuvers, some of the practices, men unfortunately are injured and sometimes lose their lives in preparation for war right here at home?

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. But that is a minor thing. We know and they know that it is their own men who are flying above them. We have got to start making limitations. The fact of the business is that we are broke, this country is bankrupt, and when these men come back we will not have enough money to support them as we ought to support them. Now, are we going to put in competition with them a class of people who have civil service jobs who will come in and say: "Why, I won the war." It reminds me of a story. A beggar went into a restaurant: He told the manager he was a beggar and had no money. He said: "I am hungry; I want something to eat."

The proprietor said: "I am willing to give you something to eat if you will tell me a good story."

And the beggar told him the story of a woodpecker who in a storm lighted on the end of a branch of a great oak and began pecking on it. While he was pecking a great wind came along and uprooted the tree, and to his dying day the bird believed it was his pecking that caused the tree to fall.

And so many people who will never leave this country will run around after the war is over saying: "I won the war. I won the war." When the war is over the veteran who served in this country behind a desk, who never was in any danger at all but who had a good job at Government expense, the Government furnishing him his clothing, the Government furnishing him his medical attention, certainly he ought not be allowed a pension or compensation.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. KEAN. With reference to the gentleman's remarks about pensions to people who serve only in this country, did the gentleman vote for the bill that was passed last year providing pensions for widows of war veterans whose husbands died from disabilities not service connected?

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. I believe I did. I am a veteran of the last war and I vote for all veteran legislation; and that is the reason I am pleading with the House now to protect the veterans of this conflict, because I know and you know there will be literally thousands of them back here crippled and blind and helpless, and with this debt on us we shall not be able to provide for them properly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. McMURRAY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment and ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. McMURRAY. Mr. Chairman, I did not want to get into this discussion, but I think someone ought to stand up here and say that a great many of the words expressed here in behalf of American womanhood are in actuality an insult to the women of America. I am opposed to this amendment and I do not like section 6 of this bill. I do not believe in the discrimination that is being set up. I am in favor of the bill, and I shall vote for it despite section 6, but I do not like to see these discriminations set out in the law.

Mr. RICHARDS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMURRAY. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. RICHARDS. Is there any reason in the world why, if the women are going to be placed in the Army on an equal basis that the men are, they should not receive all the benefits that the men receive?

Mr. McMURRAY. I should like to say that I am in entire agreement. We are giving women the responsibility, as an integral part of the Army, to perform military services and no valid reason has been given that should cause us to deny them any benefits or any privileges that we give the armed forces of the United States.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMURRAY. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Is it not a fact that under this bill the women do get every benefit that the men get? An allotment is not a benefit to the soldier.

Mr. McMURRAY. An allotment to a dependent of a soldier is a benefit to the soldier.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. If the woman voluntarily enlists and has no dependents, she would not have any allotment to give. She must have no dependents when she enlists. If she acquires dependents after enlisting that should be her responsibility. Therefore she gets every benefit that the soldier gets. If I did not think so, I would not vote for the bill.

Mr. KUNKEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMURRAY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KUNKEL. I am in accord with the opinion the gentleman expressed on section 6, the dependent allowance provisions in this bill.

Mr. McMURRAY. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. ELSTON of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMURRAY. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ELSTON of Ohio. If the gentleman's position is correct and section 6 should be eliminated, it would be possible for a woman to make an allowance to her husband who is in the Army, and he to make an allowance to her, with the Government paying both of them. Does the gentleman think that is proper?

Mr. McMURRAY. I think there has been loose thinking on the question of allowance. I happen to be one of seven Members of this House who, on a standing vote, voted against a bill which wanted to restrict the Selective Service Act on the basis of dependency. I do not think dependency ought to be considered of major importance, and I believe it is the responsibility of the Government to make allowances for dependents when men and women volunteer their services to the armed forces of the United States. Now, I do not want to argue this. I merely state that I am opposed to section 6, if it does in fact discriminate against women. I hope that we will be sensible, that we will really be proud of our women, that we will defeat the pending amendment and pass the bill.

Mr. KUNKEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMURRAY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KUNKEL. It seems to me that the objection urged by the gentleman from Ohio could certainly be cured by legislative provision.

Mr. McMURRAY. I agree with the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINCENT].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments with the recommendation that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. IZAC, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill S. 495, to establish a Woman's Army Auxiliary Corps for service in the Army of the United States, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the previous question is ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky), there were—ayes 75, noes 13.

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 260, nays 39, answered "present" 1, not voting 132, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to establish a Women's Army Corps for service in the Army of the United States."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The doors were opened.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 seconds.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. I wish to announce there will be no legislative business at the session to be held tomorrow.

PRINTING OF ADDRESS OF PRIME MINISTER CHURCHILL BEFORE JOINT SESSION OF CONGRESS

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I submit a concurrent resolution, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution (H. Con. Res. 21), as follows:

Resolved, by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the address delivered before the joint meeting of the Members of the two Houses of Congress by the Prime Minister of Great Britain, the Right Honorable Winston Churchill, on Wednesday, May 19, 1943, be printed as a House document and that 30,000 additional copies be printed for the House Document Room.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on two subjects and include therein certain subject matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

INTERNATIONAL FOOD CONFERENCE

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I have just had a long-distance call from the gentleman from Ohio, Dr. SMITH, in Hot Springs, Va., who has been in constant attendance at the International Food Conference.

When I left Hot Springs on Saturday evening, after consultation with Judge Jones, the permanent chairman of the conference, he assured me that the gentleman from Ohio, Dr. SMITH, and I would both be handed all releases which have been given out as official statements of all delegates at that conference, and I may say that up to that time I had given to me approximately four inches of such documents, mimeographed, that went into the hands of all the delegates, and some of it no doubt, to the press. In other words it was, to say the least, public information.

I have just been informed by the gentleman from Ohio, Dr. SMITH, that for some reason, since my departure, no similar documents have since been handed to him and that he has been unable to obtain any such documents. Therefore, because of the secrecy which seems to have been assumed at this conference, the gentleman from Ohio, Dr. SMITH, and myself are today introducing a concurrent resolution which I will put in the hopper at this time.

THE OPENING OF INDEPENDENT COPPER MINES

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend my remarks and include a recent release of the Senate Special Committee on Small Business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, one of the commodities of which our country has suffered the greatest shortage has been copper. A statement by Mr. Eberstadt when he was with the War Production Board indicated that we were 50 percent short of copper even for war needs. And we all know how desperately copper is needed for electric power transmission and many other purposes if our domestic economy is to function at full capacity.

Nevertheless, we are at present dependent for 85 percent of all our copper upon the Big Three copper corporations of the country, and so far their influences have been sufficient to prevent the opening of some of the smaller independent and, in some instances, higher-cost mines. I am, therefore, very gratified indeed to be able to report to the House that within the past 10 days authority has at last been granted by the War Production Board for the opening of three important copper mines heretofore idle. It is my belief that a considerable portion of the credit for this is due to the persistent efforts of the Senate Committee on Small Business, to Mr. C. E. Wilson, of the War Production Board, and to some individual Members of Congress who have been fighting as hard as they know how against monopolistic bottlenecks in the production of needed metals. I include with my remarks at this point a recent release of the Senate Special Committee on Small Business dealing with this matter:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 17.—Charles E. Wilson, Executive Vice Chairman, War Production Board, has communicated to Senator JAMES E. MURRAY, chairman, Senate Committee on Small Business, an interpretation of the Government's labor policy affecting the domestic mining industry, which says that "the scarcity of labor at this time or in any particular mining district will not be an influencing factor in guiding our policy to bring in new mines which produce metals so necessary in our war effort."

This interpretation is regarded as a marked departure from the position which the War Production Board has followed since the injection of the strategic raw-materials question into the war-policy equation. Apparently it also throws down the gantlet to the War Manpower Commission, which has heretofore shown no indication of relenting in its policy of sanctioning no new, domestic, nonferrous mining work in sections where labor shortages exist.

Touching on this point, the interpretation by Executive Vice Chairman Wilson contains this significant reference: "The miners required in producing these metals will be made available from some source."

This new development has arisen rapidly from a situation created a month ago, when, at the request of President Roosevelt, Donald M. Nelson, Chairman, War Production Board, addressed a letter to the Chief Executive, setting forth certain policies to guide all the war agencies concerned in the production of strategic metals and materials.

At this time Mr. Nelson said: "As I size up the risks involved in seeking all we can get versus something short of that, the risks are much less serious under a policy of seeking all we can get."

Mr. Nelson also said: "I believe our policy should be to assign a very high preference so far as manpower goes, to the relatively small needs of domestic mining. We should make even more aggressive efforts to provide labor, by recruiting and training and perhaps military furloughs. * * * We must find ways to provide adequate working forces not only for operating mines but also for new projects."

Mr. Nelson's letter was transmitted by the President to Senator MURRAY with a note containing the words: "I do approve these policies, and am making them public in this letter to you."

Vice Chairman Wilson's communication to Senator MURRAY, released for publication today, carried this statement:

"We recognize the labor condition that will continue to exist and believe, with careful cooperation of all agencies having to do with manpower and labor along with the Army, that the required production of nonferrous metals will be forthcoming.

"As set forth in the policy attached to the letter written to you by the President under date of April 24, 1943, the scarcity of labor at this time or in any particular mining district will not be an influencing factor in guiding our policy to bring in new mines which produce metals so necessary in our war effort. The miners required in producing these metals will be made available from some source.

"We recognize that the heavy drain being made on the mines now operating makes it necessary that we bring in new properties so as to keep the production of critical metals on a basis required by our over-all war program."

Senator MURRAY expressed the conviction that the Wilson letter is the most important statement to the domestic mining industry since the President announced his approval of War Production Board's mining policy. "It makes crystal clear the attitude of War Production Board toward domestic mining and its determination to get all possible production from domestic sources," said the Montana Senator.

Senator JAMES G. SCRUGHAM, chairman of the Senate Small Business Committee's Subcommittee on Mining and Minerals Industry, declared: "In spite of the announcement of the President's policy, there appeared to be a tendency in some quarters to avoid its spirit and to interpret it with strong reservations, particularly in connection with the mine-labor shortage. Mr. Wilson's unqualified and definite interpretation removes all doubt regarding War Production Board's intention to carry out the policy so far as is humanly possible. It will be a specific guide for the Facilities Bureau when considering new projects. There need no longer be any reluctance on the part of War Production Board's Labor Division to give approval of applications for additional premiums so necessary to keep many small and marginal mines operating. Under this policy interpretation, which is as clear and specific as anything to come from War Production Board so far, many mining projects which are needed to increase the production of strategic and critical minerals and for which approval has been withheld, can now be approved. The Mining and Minerals Industry Subcommittee is gratified that Mr. Wilson recognizes the necessity for a forceful, simple statement of War Production Board's aims and that he has the courage to stand behind the mining industry in its all-out war effort."

Mr. Speaker, those who have not followed carefully the trend of events in connection with metals production, will probably not realize the very great significance of the passages in Mr. Wilson's letter to Senator MURRAY wherein he states that from now on alleged labor shortages will not be allowed to be used as excuses or grounds for objection by forces seeking to prevent full, all-out production of these necessary commodities. For this charge of "labor shortage," along with other grounds, has heretofore been repeatedly used in the manner I have just described.

It is earnestly to be hoped that the constructive action which I have here brought to the attention of the House may be followed by similar action to the end that some of the shortages in steel, copper, and other metals may be eliminated.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. THOMASON. I want to congratulate the gentleman on the fine work he has been doing about the copper program.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I thank the gentleman very much. I know he is profoundly and patriotically interested in this whole question.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEARNEY] be permitted to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

(Mr. DOMENGEAUX asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.)

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL] is recognized for 40 minutes.

THE NATIONAL DEBT

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein certain statements compiled by me.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I want to take the time allotted to me this afternoon to discuss the question of what a $300,000,000,000 debt will mean to this country. The President in his message to this Congress submitting his Budget told us that he had a $170,000,000,000 unexpended balance. In the same Budget message he asked us for $109,000,000,000 more, making a total of $279,000,000,000 unspent. On May 24 of this year the national debt had exceeded $139,000,000,000. In view of these facts and in the face of these appropriations and unexpended balances, no one can doubt but that the debt will reach or exceed $300,000,000,000.

Mr. Speaker, as a member of the War Department subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives, I am charged with the responsibility of assisting in the drafting, holding hearings on, and steering through the House, War Department appropriation bills aggregating billions of dollars. I have tried to discharge that duty to the best of my ability. I have tried to do what little I could to see that the taxpayer gets value received for the money we appropriate.

In 1941 I made a study of cantonment construction. I brought before this House a series of reports. The story can be told in one paragraph.

According to the congressional committee known as the Graham committee, it cost $206,000,000 to build the cantonments where 4,000,000 men were housed and trained in the World War No. 1. It cost $800,000,000 to build the cantonments where the first 1,200,000 men were housed and trained in this war.

Our national debt at the conclusion of World War No. 1 was approximately $27,000,000,000. This included some $11,000,000,000 loaned to foreign countries. We are talking glibly about a national debt which we are told will reach, or may exceed, $300,000,000,000. The war is costing us many times what it is costing England or Russia and when the war is over we will be burdened with the greatest national debt in the history of the world. The tragic part is that the people themselves cannot understand just what a $300,000,000,000 national debt will mean. The figures are so colossal that they are utterly beyond the comprehension of the individual citizen.

If the average individual knew just what that debt meant his demand for economy both in and outside the war effort, his insistence upon obtaining value received for his tax dollar would be irresistible upon the executive and the legislative branches of the Government.

It is with a hope that I can make the average taxpayer and citizen realize just what a $300,000,000,000 national debt will mean that I am speaking to this House today. If I can contribute just a little toward arousing public opinion on this question I shall feel that my efforts have been worth while.

On February 3, 1938, I delivered a speech on the floor of this House on the public and private debt of America. In connection with this speech I inserted tables giving the following information on each of the 48 States in the Union. Table 1, column 1, contained the name of each State; column 2, the population; column 3, the assessed valuation; column 4, the share of the national debt on a per capita basis; and column 5, the percentage that the State's share of the national debt was of its assessed valuation. I also gave other information in these tables. At the same time I inserted a table giving the same information for the State of Michigan by counties.

Again, on May 17, 1939, I inserted into the RECORD an article written by me for the Hearst papers, and which appeared in the Chicago Herald and Examiner.

In both the speech and in the article I pointed out the danger of the policy which was then being followed by the present administration. In the article published on May 17, 1939, I used the following language; I quote:

> This policy will lead us further and further on the road to spending and borrowing, and will inevitably be followed by unlimited inflation.

I then pointed out what the inevitable result of inflation would be. I think my record in trying to economize and obtain more for the taxpayers' dollar is well known in this House. Ever since I have been in Congress, and this is my fifth term, I have tried to awaken public consciousness, and have tried to make the public understand just where we are going and how we are going there.

The spending and talking of spending of billions and hundreds of billions of dollars has so confused the public mind that talking of billions alone will not bring about a consciousness of what is happening.

Every home owner and property owner knows what assessed valuation is because the taxes he has paid are computed upon the assessed valuation placed upon the property which he owns. I had hoped, and still hope, that by making a comparison between the assessed valuation of the property in America with the national debt, on a per capita basis, I can bring home to the people the enormity of the debt we are incurring and the results of such a debt.

Recently I wrote to each State and the District of Columbia and obtained their latest figures on assessed valuation. By assessed valuation I mean the value of every piece of property real and personal, tangible and intangible, that each State is placing upon its assessment rolls or is assessing for taxes.

WHAT WILL YOUR SHARE OF A $300,000,000,000 NATIONAL DEBT BE?

I have again compiled three tables which I am placing in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks. Table 1, column 1, gives the name of each State and the District of Columbia. Column 2, the population of each State under the 1940 Census. Column 3, the assessed valuation of each State according to the latest available figures, which are, with the exception of one or two, 1941 or 1942 assessments. Column 4 shows what each State's share on a per capita basis will be of a $300,000,000,000 national debt. Column 5 shows the percentage that that share of the national debt will be of each State's assessed valuation.

I am also enclosing a second table which gives the same information on each county of my home State of Michigan and the third table, which gives the same information on each of the 11 counties which comprise the Ninth Congressional District, which I have the honor to represent.

PUBLIC CONSCIOUSNESS MUST BE AROUSED IF WASTE IS TO BE ELIMINATED

After visiting 47 defense plants and traveling approximately 4,500 miles over a period of nearly 2 months and after examining and studying cost sheets, I have come to the conclusion:

First. Our ability as a nation to meet our financial obligations of the future will depend upon the policy we now follow in our expenditures.

Second. That it is absolutely essential that public consciousness of this debt should be awakened in order that we might eliminate some of the excess costs due to various causes in our production program.

Third. That only by eliminating such excess costs can we hope to avoid the ruinous results of inflation, the danger of which I pointed out as far back as 1938.

I am hoping, vainly I am afraid, but hoping nevertheless, that we will never reach the $300,000,000,000 national debt limit. The authorized national debt limit now is $210,000,000,000.

People have a right to rely upon you and upon me and upon every other public official to obtain as nearly a dollar's worth of value as possible for every dollar we spend. They have a right to depend upon us and to expect us to do everything we can to eliminate such excess costs, whether these expenditures are made for war purposes or nonwar purposes.

A $300,000,000,000 NATIONAL DEBT IS TWICE THE ASSESSED VALUATION OF EVERY PIECE OF PROPERTY IN AMERICA

The population of the 48 States and the District of Columbia, under the 1940 Census, is 131,669,275. The assessed valuation of the 48 States and the District of Columbia, according to the latest figures available, is $150,002,511,228. A $300,000,000,000 national debt is exactly twice the assessed valuation of every piece of property in America. Of course, one can argue that assessed valuations differ, and they do differ. Some States may assess on a 40 percent basis and other States may assess on what they call a 100 percent cash value basis.

A few years ago a study was made of the District of Columbia, which is supposed to be on a cash value basis. The study was made in connection with the tax problem and the share that the National Government should bear of the District's expenditures. If I remember correctly, the assessed valuation of the District of Columbia represented about 70 percent of the actua' value of the property within the District which was assessed.

THE ASSESSED VALUATION IS FIXED BY AN OFFICIAL OF THE STATE CHARGED BY LAW WITH FIXING THAT VALUATION

Property value is a relative term. Property value is determined, of course, by both the physical value and the income the property is producing. Apartment houses which cost millions of dollars were torn down in the city of Detroit during the depression to make room for parking lots because the owners could not pay the taxes on these apartment houses as their rentals had dwindled to almost nothing. Assessed valuation is the only valuation which is fixed by an official who is charged by law with the duty of placing an actual value upon each specific piece of property. It is the one type of valuation that we can understand and it is only when we realize that a $300,000,000,000 debt is twice the assessed valuation of every piece of property in the entire nation that we begin to realize just where we are going in our national debt and what the ultimate result may be.

ALABAMA'S SHARE OF A $300,000,000,000 NATIONAL DEBT ON A PER CAPITA BASIS WILL BE 606 PERCENT OF ITS ASSESSED VALUATION

I would like to comment upon some of the States and their share of this liability. The first of the alphabetical list of States is Alabama. Alabama has, according to 1940 census figures, a population of 2,832,961. The assessed valuation of that State, according to the latest figures obtainable is $1,063,905,950. Alabama's share of a $300,000,000,000 national debt on a per capita basis will be $6,453,485,158, or 606 percent of its assessed valuation.

ILLINOIS' SHARE OF A $300,000,000,000 NATIONAL DEBT ON A PER CAPITA BASIS WILL BE 342 PERCENT OF ITS ASSESSED VALUATION

The population of the State of Illinois, according to 1940 census figures, is 7,897,241. Its assessed valuation, according to the latest figures obtainable is $5,246,400,000. Illinois' share of a $300,000,000,000 national debt on a per capita basis will be $17,989,914,998, or 342 percent of its assessed valuation. This amount is $1,000,000,000 greater than the lowest point of the entire World War No. 1 national debt which was reached under the Hoover administration.

If the people of the State of Illinois were compelled to vote upon themselves a bond issue of nearly $18,000,000,000, a debt nearly 3½ times the assesed valuation of every piece of property on the assessment rolls of that State, would the people of that State be apathetic toward waste of Government funds and toward excess costs in the future as they are and have been in the past?

MICHIGAN'S SHARE OF A $300,000,000,000 NATIONAL DEBT ON A PER CAPITA BASIS WILL BE 180 PERCENT OF ITS ASSESSED VALUATION

The population of the State of Michigan, according to 1940 census figures, is 5,256,106. Its assessed valuation, according to the latest figures obtainable, is $6,623,578,978. Michigan's share of a $300,000,000,000 national debt will be $11,973,409,468, or 180 percent of its assessed valuation.

If the people of the State of Michigan were compelled to vote upon themselves a bond issue of nearly $12,000,000,000, which represents nearly twice its assessed valuation, would the people of Michigan be as apathetic, as callous toward the waste and excess cost in the future as they have been in the past? Would not the people of the State of Michigan insist that something be done instead of merely talking, as they are, about such excess cost and waste?

NEW YORK, OHIO, AND PENNSYLVANIA'S SHARE OF A $300,000,000,000 NATIONAL DEBT ON A PER CAPITA BASIS WILL EXCEED THEIR ASSESSED VALUATIONS

New York's share of a $300,000,000,000 national debt will be $30,705,485,476, or 108 percent of its assessed valuation. New York's share will exceed the all-time high of the entire national debt up to 1933.

Ohio's share will be $15,735,540,136, or 165 percent of its assessed valuation, while Pennsylvania's share of a $300,000,000,000 national debt will be $22,552,610,040, or more than twice the assessed valuation of all the property placed on the assessment rolls within that State.

May I ask again, would the people of New York, Ohio, and Pennsylvania be as deaf to demands of public economy and excess public expenditures if they had to vote upon themselves a bond issue for these tremendous amounts of money, or would the people of New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and other States insist upon more careful expenditure of both the war and nonwar dollar?

WHAT THE INDIVIDUAL COUNTIES' SHARE OF A $300,000,000,000 NATIONAL DEBT ON A PER CAPITA BASIS WILL BE FOR THE STATE OF MICHIGAN

Let us take some of the counties in my own State of Michigan. The first on the alphabetical list is Alcona County which has a population, according to 1940 Census figures, of only 5,463. The assessed valuation of this little county is $4,163,840, while its share of a $300,000,000,000 national debt will be $12,444,714, or nearly three times its assessed valuation.

Lake County, the smallest county in my district, has a population of 4,798. Its assessed valuation is $2,406,787, while its share of a $300,000,000,000 national debt on a per capita basis will be $10,929,844, or 454 percent of its assessed valuation.

Muskegon County, the largest county in my district, which has numerous war industries, has, according to 1940 Census figures, a population of 94,501. Its assessed valuation, according to latest figures obtainable, is $92,880,579, while its share of a $300,000,000,000 national debt will be over $215,000,000, or 231 percent of its assessed valuation.

THE SHARE OF THE NINTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT OF MICHIGAN OF A $300,000,000,000 NATIONAL DEBT WILL BE 285 PERCENT OF THE ASSESSED VALUATION OF THE ENTIRE DISTRICT

The population of the Ninth Congressional District, according to 1940 census figures, is 230,861. The assessed valuation of the 11 counties representing my district is $189,569,169, while my district's share of a $300,000,000,000 national debt will be $539,569,358, or 285 percent of the assessed valuation of the entire district.

Would the people of these individual counties be apathetic toward pleas for economy if they were compelled to vote upon themselves a bond issue which would, in some instances, be from four to five times the assessed valuation of all the property in their several counties?

I am bringing this matter before the House in the hope that publication of these staggering figures will make the people back home less insistent upon the expenditure of public moneys within their districts and more insistent in their demands for the elimination of waste and extravagance and excess cost, both in war and nonwar expenditures.

REPORTS OF WAR COSTS WILL FOLLOW WITHIN THE NEXT FEW WEEKS

I shall bring before this House within the next few weeks results of studies I have made along this line, including the results of the study I am making of war costs and production costs in defense plants. I have made this study as a member of the War Department subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee in the hope that I may in my own humble way contribute something toward the reduction of this tremendous burden which our people are and will be asked to bear.

In conclusion, may I say that Congress, and every individual in the Government who is charged with the expenditure of the taxpayers' money, must make every effort to reduce to a minimum the cost of civilian activities and to eliminate every dollar of unnecessary expenditures or waste both in nonwar and in war activities. While I realize that war production comes first and economy second, while I realize that war is waste, I also feel that there comes a time when we can, and must stop throwing money out of the window or down a rat hole. There comes a time when waste not only fails to contribute toward the war effort but actually retards the war effort and retards production.

Only an aroused public demanding and insisting upon immediate action by both the legislative and executive branches of the Government can bring about a change in a policy which has been responsible for so much waste and excess cost. This waste and excess cost, upon which I shall comment in a series of reports, must be self-evident and can be seen by every citizen who is concerned about the ability of our taxpayers to meet the ultimate tax obligation imposed upon them by this tremendous debt.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. I appreciate the fact that the gentleman has made this survey. I congratulate him on the industry he has shown in connection with it. I wonder if in his investigation he came in contact with the contract renegotiation law. Does the gentleman have any views as to whether or not that law should be repealed?

Mr. ENGEL. I expect to discuss that matter when I come before the House later but I may say to the gentleman from Texas that I am opposed to the repeal of the renegotiation law.

Mr. PATMAN. In other words, the gentleman realizes that unless we keep that law as it is there will be at least two or three billion dollars in the hands of a few people that should not be there, because we did not have the experience upon which to let the contract at the time quickly.

Mr. ENGEL. I think the gentleman's figures of two or three billion dollars are conservative; my candid opinion is that we shall get back around five or six billion dollars. I do not agree with the gentleman that they are in the hands of a few people. I think the records show that we are taking away excess profits from a great many contractors.

Mr. PATMAN. I am glad the gentleman corrected that, because I did not know.

Mr. ENGEL. I was one of the men who helped write that clause into the bill. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] offered the amendment on the floor of the House after it had been stricken from the bill which was drafted in my committee.

I do not want to comment now upon the trip I made through the plants. I spent 2 weeks in General Motors, Ford, and Chrysler, and I have some very complete information which I shall bring to the House.

This is what has been happening. A certain company, without giving names, had a contract to manufacture 3-inch armor-piercing shells. The first contract was for $16.80 per shell. Against that first contract were charged the tools and dies and jigs, the change-over in the factory, and educating and training the labor for that particular job. That was the first contract, and that company took successive jobs. It kept reducing the price until it got the price for the same shell down to $6.50 per shell, making renegotiation unnecessary in that particular instance, undoubtedly.

However, we have other companies who say, "We cut the cost of this shell to $8.60, and we think we have done a good job." Perhaps the actual cost was $6.50, which still allows them an excess profit. I believe in giving them adequate profits, but I also believe that no company or no individual has a right to make excessive profits out of this war.

I am not only not against renegotiation, but I expect to oppose any attempt to repeal the renegotiation law.

Mr. PATMAN. I noticed the gentleman's remarks particularly about the evaluation of all property in the United States. Of course, the gentleman does not insist that the assessed value represents the true value. I believe he mentioned that. The latest and the only estimate I have been able to get is that the values of tangible property, real estate, buildings, durable goods, and things like that, will amount to about $300,000,000,000. Even at that the picture is not encouraging. I am not trying to justify any waste or any large expenditure, because I am with the gentleman in the thought that we should reduce expenditures just as much as possible.

Mr. ENGEL. I made the statement in my remarks that the assessed valuation ranged from 40 percent to what some people call 100 percent of actual value, and I commented upon the District of Columbia study which showed that they had a 70 percent valuation on the property values here where they were supposed to assess at 100 percent value. But what I am trying to do is use some method which will make the average citizen understand just what is happening and realize what $300,000,000,000 means. By a comparison with the assessed valuation, he has a yardstick which he can use to measure this debt.

Mr. PATMAN. At the same time, the gentleman realizes that we are spending only about 3 or 4 cents out of every dollar that is spent for any purpose except for the war?

Mr. ENGEL. I agree with the gentleman. I believe in giving the War Department and the Navy Department what they ask for. You cannot do anything else. But I also believe in holding them responsible for any waste that occurs, and I think the time to stop the waste is now.

Mr. PATMAN. I agree with the gentleman that we should stop every bit of waste that we can, but when you cut down nonwar expenditures, if we cut them out entirely, the amount would be insignificant in comparison with the amount spent for war.

Mr. ENGEL. That is why I included war expenditures in my remarks.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL. Yes.

Mr. CURTIS. I think the gentleman from Michigan is one of the greatest fiscal experts we have and I believe that every thoughtful citizen is indebted to him for the splendid work that he has done along the line of fiscal policies and the investigations and reports that he has made. Here is a matter that has been bothering me for some time. We are appropriating these vast sums of money and we want to appropriate them because we want the Army and the Navy and everyone else to have all the money that they need. Naturally not all of this money will be spent by the time this war ends. There cannot be any other end to the matter than that, because we cannot handle the affair in any other way, for we must have a supply of things and not let it run down. What is being done by the Appropriations Committee, if anything, toward the recapture of appropriated moneys, so that they will not be in the hands of anyone who may divert them to any other purpose or who may spend them for nonwar projects?

Mr. ENGEL. If the gentleman will examine the appropriation bills, billions of dollars have been reappropriated. The appropriations lapse at the end of the fiscal year and revert to the Treasury unless they are reappropriated.

I think the gentleman will find in every contract let by the War Department, and I think the Navy Department has the same provision, a clause which enables the War and Navy Departments under certain conditions to cancel the contract in case an armistice is signed or in case peace comes. The gentleman will find that the Government is protected. While we are getting some of this money back, and some of it will not be expended, yet there is going to be a great deal of money required to readjust conditions.

For instance, when a contract is such that a factory has to be made over, so to speak, to make it possible to perform certain war work, naturally, you cannot chop the contract off and let the factory owner restore his factory to where it was before the war without compensation. You have to allow something to get it back to where it was, to give him a chance to get back to production. The committee has questioned the War Department officials very carefully along the line of having such clauses in these contracts.

Mr. CURTIS. I am not speaking so much of actual contract obligations. I think we all agree that too much of an abrupt stoppage of war contracts not only is injurious to business but prevents us from going to peacetime matters. It may have a bad international effect if we do not retain a strong army until the matter is completely settled; but in the beginning of the gentleman's remarks I understood him to say that the President had on hand a large sum of money which was not spent.

Mr. ENGEL. The President had at the beginning of this year an unexpended balance of $170,000,000,000, and he asked for $109,000,000,000 more to carry him through June 30, 1944.

Mr. CURTIS. Suppose at the time the war does end that there would be $100,000,000,000 in the same category as this $170,000,000,000. What would be the status of that; what would happen?

Mr. ENGEL. In the first place, we are just beginning to get the Army up to where it is approaching what we hope will be the limit, which means that your Army pay item is going to be perhaps three or four times as large as it was last year. Again, when peace comes, it will take a certain length of time before the Army can be discharged and get it back into civilian life.

There are certain appropriations which will lapse. When we appropriate an amount for Army pay, that sum can be expended only for Army pay. If there is no Army to pay it cannot be paid out, and it lapses back to the Treasury. There is so much for subsistence, but there are certain other lump sums that we have given to the President, to go out and purchase any equipment he wants to, and certain other funds that he must have in order to carry on the war, for which he does not have to account to Congress. Some of those funds may carry on through after peace is declared.

Mr. CURTIS. How about lease-lend funds? It seems to me that they can expend lease-lend funds for almost anything the human mind can imagine so long as it does not go to a citizen of the United States.

Mr. ENGEL. They can expend lease-lend money as long as the Lease-Lend Act is in force.

Mr. CURTIS. In other words, he can go on and spend lease-lend funds for the benefit of foreign nations after this war ends.

Mr. ENGEL. I think he can.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. ENGEL. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman has inspected many of these plants. I wonder if he is satisfied with the progress that is being made toward winning this war. That is, is the gentleman satisfied that everything is being done that can be done by the Army and the Navy and the different armed services?

Mr. ENGEL. Well, again, I do not want to anticipate remarks that I am going to make in the future. In order to dispel any doubt I want to say this, and I want to be fair, I do not think we are doing everything we can do. I do not think we ever reach our objective. But I believe we are doing a splendid job of production.

Mr. PATMAN. In the training of the men, does not the gentleman marvel at the fine coordination and the harmony that exists in getting these men together, training them, getting supplies to them, hundreds of thousands of different articles?

Mr. ENGEL. May I say I have not visited the training camps. I have confined my activities to going through the actual plants. While I think they are doing a good job in training, I believe there is room for improvement in our training program.

Mr. PATMAN. Does not the gentleman believe that even though there should be some waste, as much as we hate waste, that the main object is winning the war, and we have to risk a little?

Mr. ENGEL. I agree with the gentleman absolutely, but there comes a time when waste of public funds actually retards the war effort.

Mr. PATMAN. Of course, we do not want to do that.

Mr. ENGEL. On the other hand, there comes a time when it does not help the war effort. War is waste, as I said before. You cannot help but have some waste.

Mr. PATMAN. And haste makes waste, too.

Mr. ENGEL. Haste makes waste, but without anticipating what I am going to say, when I get through with my remarks which are to come, there will not be any doubt whatever and there will not be any difference in the gentleman's opinion and mine as to what is happening in this war program. I do not mean to imply any criticism of the War Department, General Marshall, or the General Staff, but I am talking about conditions which exist, and which I do not want to anticipate now. I can take the gentleman to my office and convince him that some things are happening that should not happen. I think that some costs are highly excessive.

Mr. PATMAN. Of course, anything that is against the public interest I think the gentleman is rendering a great service by disclosing it.

Mr. ENGEL. I agree with the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HORAN] is recognized for 30 minutes.

THE SHIPSHAW ALUMINUM PROJECT

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Speaker, first, I want to pay my compliments also to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL]. I think he not only represents the people of his district but also one of the almost forgotten virtues of Americanism, that of thrift, of getting the job done with the least waste of time and money.

Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this time in order to bring to the attention of the House and put into the RECORD a matter about which I have had a voluminous correspondence from the people of the Pacific Northwest, and particularly from the people of my district. They want to know why a grant of $68,500,000 of the taxpayers' money was made by the administration, without interest, to the Aluminum Co. of Canada in order that they might develop a property belonging to the Aluminum Trust in Canada. They ask for an investigation.

It is my conviction that matters such as these demand a complete and factual answer. The retention of confidence in Government demands that rumors—if they are rumors—be stilled and the faith of the people in their administration be restored with a candid recitation of sound policy as substantiated by a history of the facts. If there has been a central purpose in the present Congress, it has been to attempt to restore a sort of morality in our domestic dealings within the borders of the United States.

In the matter of farm credit, this Congress has taken action to oppose the making of nonrecourse loans. Yet here, apparently, is a huge, nonrecourse loan to the Aluminum Trust for the purpose of developing not a productiveness of our own country but that of a foreign nation, friendly though it be.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HORAN. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. Has the gentleman asked Mr. Jesse Jones about that?

Mr. HORAN. I have asked him about it; yes.

Mr. PATMAN. Has the gentleman received an answer from him?

Mr. HORAN. Yes; and my speech will show that his answer is very lame.

Mr. PATMAN. Does the gentleman expect to put his answer in the RECORD?

Mr. HORAN. His answer is already in the RECORD. It is in the hearings of the Subcommittee on Interior Appropriations. I might say to the gentleman from Texas that I am not here to indict anybody; I am here to present the side of the case as the people themselves are seeing it. I am supporting a resolution calling for an investigation.

Mr. PATMAN. If there is anything wrong, I hope it is gone into. That, of course, was one of the charges I brought against Mr. Mellon when I impeached him and caused him to be driven from the Treasury, and, naturally, I would not have any love for the Aluminum Co. of America in a case like that, but I do think that Jesse Jones is one of the most honorable and one of the most able men we have in our Government, and I just do not think that he would do anything wrong about it. I hope the gentleman looks into it thoroughly.

Mr. HORAN. I hope the Congress will pay attention to what the gentleman from Texas has just said, and respect this resolution and pass it, so we can get all the facts.

I have been inclined to agree and go along in this denunciation of what is termed nonrecourse loans Certainly, any honorable man who borrows money wishes to pay it back dollar for dollar with reasonable interest. He wants to do that by being protected in his markets. He wants to receive a reasonable reward over and above the cost of labor, material, and management. He wants to serve his Nation and the world by supplying your spiritual, physical, and material needs. He knows he must do this at the price you can pay.

But here we have the case of nonrecourse loan made, not to our American farmer, not to be used to pay American labor, but to subsidize foreign production and foreign commerce. If moral values are to be defined and imposed at home, it would seem both imperative and expedient that those same moral values attend every instance of our foreign relations. Consequently, I have joined with my colleague from the State of Washington [Mr. COFFEE] in demanding an investigation of the whole Shipshaw affair, and have asked for this time that I might review some of the background, some of the history, and some of the incidents which I feel should be justified or indicted by a full investigation. It should be mentioned here also that there are many legislators in the Canadian Parliament as concerned about this as we are here.

The story of the Shipshaw affair begins with the period immediately following the World War because at that time the Aluminum Trust decided, as a matter of policy, to look in foreign fields for locations for production plants. They wanted to find places where they could develop power sites—so important to the production of aluminum—where they did not have to compete with the high-priced power demands of domestic and small industrial consumers. They were aware, of course, of the tremendous opportunities in the western part of our great United States, but they excluded our own West because of the transportation burdens. I want you to remember that fact when we get to the "escalator clauses" later on.

In 1922, they acquired five power properties in Norway. The Shipshaw location entered the picture when in 1925 Alcoa bought from the James B. Duke interests three power sites on the Saguenay River in the Province of Quebec, purportedly for the purpose of eliminating a possible future competitor. On the Saguenay there were three power sites, the Isle Maligne, the Chute-a-Caron, and the Shipshaw.

In 1925 the Aluminum Trust developed the Isle Maligne power plant. The Chute-a-Caron was finished in 1931. Shipshaw, the third and largest, begins generating this year, and when finally completed will have a rated capacity of 1,200,000 horsepower.

So much for the power projects brought to the attention of this Nation because of the Shipshaw affair. It is sufficient to say that they would be of no concern to us had it not been for our war-born demand for aluminum and the short-sightedness of some of the men in high places in our Government who as late as 1940 insisted that we faced no shortage in aluminum.

Just why these men, who should have known, should have failed to develop every possible source of American production we probably will never know, but the fact remains that in the fall of 1941 the Reconstruction Finance Corporation's Metals Reserve Company entered into contacts with the Aluminum Trust looking for increased aluminum productiveness. These negotiations continued through the winter and resulted in two contracts. The first in May of 1941 and the second July 15, 1941. According to these contracts, the Aluminum Co. of Canada was to deliver 340,000 metric tons of aluminum by the end of 1944. In return, they were given without interest a down payment of $25,000,000 and also were extended a loan from the Export-Import Bank at 3 percent. This aluminum was to be delivered at the price of 17 cents a pound. This entire $50,000,000 was made available to the Aluminum Co. of Canada as of August 30, 1941, 1 month before construction began on Shipshaw. So far these contracts appear not to be beyond the scope of the usual procedure. However, it so happens that in this same month of August 1941 Alcoa had reduced the price of virgin aluminum in the United States from 17 to 15 cents per pound, probably due to the activities of Thurman Arnold, and from which grew the case of the United States against the Aluminum Co. of America.

In this case it was pointed out that the cost of producing aluminum in 1926 was 13.8 cents per pound and it was sold for approximately 27 cents a pound. The schedule through the years to 1937 shows corresponding figures. In 1937 the cost of producing aluminum had been reduced to 9.6 cents a pound, while it was being sold on the market at 19½ cents a pound. Mr. Speaker, I would like to place in the RECORD at this time exhibits 718 and 1701 of that case, which give the cost of producing and the selling price of aluminum through those years.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not, I wish the gentleman would agree to put Mr. Jones' letter in the RECORD in connection with his remarks.

Mr. HORAN. I shall be only too glad to, because it will not make Mr. Jones look very good.

Mr. PATMAN. That is all right; just so his statement goes in the RECORD.

Mr. HORAN. I feel sorry for him, because I shared the respect for Mr. Jones that the gentleman has, and I am very unhappy about all of this.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman knows that the question of critical metal, strategic materials, is a very important one. I ask the gentleman to suppose he were Federal Loan Administrator and needed production; that it was necessary to get production. Would not he seek it from any source he could obtain it, and if necessary, make certain commitments to get aluminum from any place when it is so necessary for this war? I know he would do it. That is what Mr. Jones was doing. He was doing what he considered to be the necessary thing, I am sure.

Mr. HORAN. I hope the gentleman from Texas tomorrow will read my speech in its entirety, for in it I show that we in the West were demanding that it be done not in 1940 but before that.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HORAN. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS. The gentleman from Texas spoke about the urgency of getting strategic materials. In the case of rubber this Congress gave a direct mandate to the R. F. C. to acquire a stock pile of rubber prior to the war with Japan, and it was not done.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield that I may reply to that statement?

Mr. HORAN. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. The truth is that Mr. Jones piled up the largest stock pile of rubber ever before in history known, 700,000 tons during the 18 months preceding Pearl Harbor; and had it not been for the vision and foresight of Mr. Jones we would have been caught with insufficient rubber to carry on this war.

Mr. HORAN. We were, were we not?

Mr. PATMAN. No. We were not. We had the largest stock pile of rubber we ever had.

Mr. CURTIS. It was less than a year's supply.

Mr. HORAN. In view of the demand for rubber for the war, 700,000 tons was not very much.

Mr. PATMAN. Yes; that is the normal supply for a year, and by cutting it down it was sufficient.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman from Washington may include the matter referred to.

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

Alcoa's average cost of producing virgin aluminum ingot, including provision for administrative and selling expenses

Year	Cost per pound	Annual average selling price per pound
	Cents	Cent
1926	13.82	26.98

Cost per pound: Exhibit 718. United States v. Aluminum Co. of America.
Selling price: Exhibit 1701.

Mr. HORAN. It would seem reasonably apparent that the Aluminum Trust has never lost any money on the basis of the selling price as against the cost of production. The only sound argument that we, who believe in the capitalistic system, have for the free competitive market is that it enables society thereby to get the raw or semifinished materials with which they, in turn, serve their fellow men at the lowest possible figure consistent with sound business methods and firm credit.

The only excuse for a fixed economy such as now stifles this Nation and the world is that we hope to temporarily achieve by force what may not have been achieved by freedom. Personally, I doubt that we will ever successfully replace a free economy with one that is bureaucratically controlled. Neither do I feel that our hopes for world peace can be sustained in a world-wide foreign commerce that permits, ignores, or even encourages world-wide trusts and the cartel system that goes with it.

In 1937, as the record shows, the Aluminum Trust was selling their aluminum for an average of 19.56 cents a pound. The record also shows that their costs in 1937 were 9.60 cents a pound. This figure includes depreciation and some selling and administrative expense. The figures were rejected by the court, we are informed, because they did not include any return on invested capital. It is worth noting, now, that Shipshaw, according to the records, is not burdened by any capital-investment costs. A year ago last winter a protest over paying 17 cents when the United States price was only 15 cents resulted in the cancelation of contracts Nos. 1 and 2 and the substituting of contracts Nos. 3 and 4. These were entered into between the R. F. C. Metals Reserve Company, the Aluminum Trust, and the Export-Import Bank, and the total aluminum order was boosted from 340,000 metric tons to 685,000 metric tons. Contract No. 3 called for 1,000,000,000 pounds, or one-half million metric tons, of aluminum. It called for delivery by the end of 1944. Of this contract, 800,000,000 pounds, or 400,000 metric tons, were to go to the United States at 15 cents a pound. But note this, 100,000 metric tons was to go into lend-lease at the apparently cartel price of 17 cents per pound, the old figure.

And here is where Santa Claus entered the picture. This contract assimilated the $25,000,000 down payment and the $25,000,000 loan of the earlier deal by providing an advance of $50,000,000 without interest or obligation except as to the delivery of aluminum. This was to "enable the seller to undertake the expansion of the productive capacity of its plant," according to the wording of the contract. That is the same principle that this House has denied in the case of nonrecourse loans to the farmers. In addition to the $50,000,000, a line of credit up to $25,000,000 was allowed at 3 percent. It is eloquent, I think, that the Company has not had to use this line of credit very much. It is worth noting that whenever we get a pound of Canadian aluminum from the Aluminum Trust, we pay them 10 cents in cash and credit 5 cents toward the reduction of the down payment. Against this 5 cents, if they wish, they can borrow an additional 5 cents at 3 percent. In the light of the cost exhibits cited, it is not surprising that they have not had to draw very heavily on the loan fund.

Contract No. 4 was entered into April 1, 1942. It called for an additional 370,000,000 pounds—296,000,000 pounds at 15 cents and 70,000,000 pounds at 17 cents, at lend-lease price. An additional interest-free advance for $18,500,000 was made and an additional line of credit, to the extent of $9,250,000, was opened. Thus, we see that the Aluminum Trust was given a noninterest advance of $68,500,000, $3,500,000 over the estimated cost of Shipshaw. In addition to that, they were given a 3-percent line of credit of $34,250,000 repayable at 10 years' maturity, based on dates when borrowed. And that is not all. Delivery of aluminum is cancelable by the United States on 6 months' notice. In that event, the Aluminum Co. of Canada is permitted to retain without obligation the unaccounted-for balance of the advance payment of $68,500,000. And that is not all. In the event of cancelation, the United States must pay to the Aluminum Trust 1 cent per pound for all metal undelivered under the contract. And even that is not all. We put into these contracts escalator clauses which give the Aluminum Trust the right to raise the price on aluminum. When transportation or labor costs rise, in connection with getting this material from British Guiana, they can add the increase. Consequently, although the contract calls for 15 cents a pound for aluminum delivered in America and 17 cents when delivered in lend-lease, I am very reliably informed that the present invoices will read better than 17 cents per pound delivered in America, and better than 19 cents delivered for lend-lease. Thus is the reduction of 2 cents, pointed to often as a shaky defense of this deal, washed out. I want here to recall the fact that the Aluminum Trust rejected our own West because of the costs of transportation—yet, today, they are making us pay for the hazards of transportation involved with the sites they did select. And that is not all. The Canadian Government has granted more help in the form of tax exemption politely labeled "accelerated depreciation." This is reported to be $37,000,000 in the case of Shipshaw or 56 percent of the estimated cost. According to reports from the Canadian Parliament, the complete depreciation about which our Canadian friends are no more happy than ourselves may amount to $175,000,000 on Alcoa of Canada's entire operation.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HORAN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. Does that not impress the gentleman that there must have been some real necessity for this increased production of aluminum?

Mr. HORAN. May I say to the gentleman from Texas that the people of my State have been insisting that was the case for 4 long years and begged this Government to open their eyes to the need of aluminum, but men in high places of this Government stated we did not need aluminum.

Mr. PATMAN. Is not the gentleman mistaken about that? Was it not the Aluminum Co. of America that was insisting all the time we did not need additional aluminum? The gentleman stated that Thurman Arnold was trying to do something about it.

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Speaker, thus fully paid for and more than half depreciated in advance, the Shipshaw comes into production this year. It is worth noting that the construction began in secrecy in October 1941, and because of the speed of construction and the severe weather in which the men worked required twice as many men as was estimated to be necessary for construction in normal times. A total of 10,925 men were required, and during the winters of 1941 and 1942 night temperatures sometimes ranged between 20 and 50 degrees below zero, requiring a change of shifts every 2 or 3 hours in order to prevent the men from freezing.

While we conserved our needed power developments here in the United States because of lack of materials what was being done, in secret, for the Aluminum Co. of Canada? Well, this construction required the use of 44 power shovels and cranes, 525 trucks, and 67 tractors. It required 1,400,000 cubic yards of concrete, involving a delivery of 31 carloads of cement a day, 14,000,000 pounds of reinforcing steel, 3,900,000 tons of dynamite, and 30,000,000 board-feet of lumber.

Exclusive of hydraulic and electric machinery in the powerhouse, our Government, while closing the doors to normal development in the West, development capable also of producing aluminum where men can work in milder climates; where transportation deliveries are more accessible and the national security furthered, while they closed the doors to development in our own West, the administration not only agreed, through our lend-lease connections, to the use of the named materials in this Canadian development, but they also granted priority ratings not permitted in our own domestic program. It would appear that the most-favored-nation's clause does not apply at home.

In January 29, 1942, at the request of the Metals Reserve Company of R. F. C., a priority of AA-3—equal to the highest rating at that date granted any power project in the United States—was given to Shipshaw. Within a month, the Power Branch of W. P. B. arranged to have six big steel shafts put upon the production schedule of American shops for Canadian Shipshaw. At almost the same time steel shafts for our own western projects were removed from production schedules. In April 1942 at the request of the Aluminum Trust, the Power Branch of W. P. B. added four additional Shipshaw shafts to the production schedules in the Camden Forge and Midville Cos. in the United States.

In October, the Shipshaw priority was raised to AA-1, higher than any United States power project, and within a few weeks was raised to AA-2X, the complete green light. In addition to the priority for shafts—called the bottleneck of power development—it is understood that the Canadian contractors secured silicon steel for the steel forging and casting through the assistance of W. P. B. Most other materials are reported to have been secured in Canada, but since in most instances these are merely Canadian branches of American firms, and because of the nature of lend-lease, we can say that this was still a further denial to the development of western power and reclamation. Thus our good old American Santa Claus apparently subsidizes through a nonrecourse loan the aluminum cartel. It seems to me if we would protect the future security and development of our own Nation, this whole proposition demands an investigation. Not only because of the definitely questionable nature of the deal itself, but because we here in this Congress are trying to eliminate such things as a matter of policy from our domestic transactions and also because we should certainly think twice before granting abroad what we are denying to our people at home.

The projects in America which were stopped are widely regarded as our margin of domestic security after the war. They not only give promise of employment when the let-down comes, but because of the reclamation features, they promise far more than the mere aluminum from Saguenay. They promise an industrial development and also homes and farms for the returning soldiers and those cast out from employment when the present "production for destruction" program shall have ended in our land. These western projects now being shut off by W. P. B. even as they favor Shipshaw are as yet but scarcely developed despite publicity to the contrary, but meager though that development is, those projects alone constitute an annual market for some three to four hundred million in nonwestern commodities, and with the completion of those projects better than a half billion dollars annual market. All this, of course, is in addition to the benefits to our transportation system, as it travels in its transcontinental way. The projects affected are the Grand Coulee, Shasta, Keswick, Anderson Range, and Davis Dams, Columbia-Big Thompson project, and several T. V. A. dams aggregating 1,600,000 horsepower, as well as the reclamation development dependent thereon. But that is not all. The Grand Coulee Dam is, indeed, a marvelous structure. It is built to use 18 huge generators. Up to a year or so ago progress of installing those generators was going on in an orderly fashion. Those generators are rated at 108,000 kilowatt-hours each, but so efficient is Grand Coulee that they actually generate 120,000 kilowatt-hours each. But through the exigencies of war and the actions of W. P. B., installations have been stopped even though the demand for power exceeds the program of installation.

To meet this demand generators have been brought to Grand Coulee which were originally planned for Shasta Dam. These generators are only about two-thirds as big and the nature of their design made it necessary to block off an entire penstock and turbine area in Grand Coulee in order to install them. The very bed of the generator compartments had to be mutilated and holes cut through them in order to accommodate these Shasta generators.

Time, manpower, and money have been wasted out there in order that Shipshaw might be favored.

Most tragic of all, that miraculous efficiency contemplated for Grand Coulee, a project many times called the eighth wonder of the world, has been seriously impaired, and at a time when our war industry is crying for power and more power.

Today men say that our old frontiers are gone; that the West of Horace Greeley, where men could go and create their capital out of sweat and sand, no longer exists as a land of opportunity.

I say to you that the real frontiers of the West are yet to be.

Out there are three-quarters of a billion acres waiting to be reclaimed. Out there are turbulent rivers waiting to be harnessed. Out there are enormous deposits of rich and useful minerals waiting to be converted into use. Out there are great forests and fine climate.

Our West is opportunity itself.

But it is a balanced opportunity.

Out West, the hand that turns to bring aluminum in this hour of need, brings also rich lands, improved navigation, flood control, power for our farms at low cost, fresh water for our cities, regulated water flow and delta control; the creation of marvelous wildlife and recreational areas, and most important of all, a greater security to you of the rest of the Nation because they will produce for your needs, and consume in return, your products.

At Shipshaw, there is aluminum, nothing more.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HORAN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. I express the hope that aluminum can be developed in the West and not only aluminum but also the iron ore resources that can be used to make steel and other critical materials. I feel there must be something wrong with the gentleman's statement, because I know Mr. Jones is not going to deliberately and willfully favor some foreign country, even Canada, one of our allies, over our own people in the United States. I am sure that a reasonable and careful investigation will disclose why that has been done.

Mr. HORAN. I was very careful not to mention Mr. Jones' name until the gentleman brought the matter up, because I am not trying to indict any man at this time. I want the gentleman to understand that. The best way he can protect his fine citizen from Texas is to join with me in demanding an investigation of this transaction and make it a matter of record.

Mr. PATMAN. If the gentleman will put Mr. Jones' letter in I will be glad to read it over.

Mr. HORAN. I am only too happy to put Mr. Jones' letter in because, in the face of the facts that have been developed up to now, it is a very, very lame excuse for what has been done at Shipshaw.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include Mr. Jones' letter in the RECORD. Also four pages from the Interior Department appropriation hearings on the Shipshaw matter in connection with my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HORAN]?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

THE SECRETARY OF COMMERCE,
Washington, March 24, 1943.

Hon. HARRY S. TRUMAN
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR TRUMAN: In reply to your inquiry about Metals Reserve Company's purchases of aluminum from Canada, beg to advise that May 2, 1941, at the request of the Office of Production Management, Metals Reserve Company contracted with the Aluminum Co. of Canada for the purchase of 170,000 metric tons (374,680,000 pounds) of aluminum at 17 cents per pound, the then-prevailing price of aluminum in this country.

This contract and all subsequent contracts in this program were approved by the President.

In connection with the purchase, the Aluminum Co. required an advance of $25,000,000, which we agreed to make at 2 percent interest. Such advances are authorized in connection with the purchase of critical and strategic materials under section 5d of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, and do not require interest. The interest was computed to equal 0.295 cent per pound of aluminum, and in drawing the contract this was deducted from the price of 17 cents. The advance was to be amortized at the rate of 6⅔ cents per pound of aluminum delivered.

Substantial advances on purchase contracts of critical and strategic materials have been made to China and Russia and in connection with purchases in some Latin-American countries.

May 13, 1941, the Office of Production Management requested that the initial contract be doubled. This was concluded at the same price. The company asked for an advance of $25,000,000 against this contract, and a loan for this amount was made to it by the Export-Import Bank at 3 percent interest.

In negotiating contracts with the Aluminum Co. of America to build and operate aluminum plants in the United States for our account, we secured a reduction from Alcoa in the price of aluminum in the United States from 17 cents to 15 cents per pound, thereby saving the Government a great many millions of dollars.

After getting the reduced price from Alcoa, we asked the Aluminum Co. of Canada to reduce their price from 17 cents to 15 cents, notwithstanding we had contracted to pay 17 cents. The company was reluctant to reduce the price since they were getting 17 cents from the British and Canadian Governments. However, we finally prevailed upon them to reduce the price to 15 cents on 80 percent of the shipments. To get this reduction in price, we waived the interest on the advances, and made a reduction in the amortization requirements. The reduction from 17 cents to 15 cents saved Metals Reserve Company $16,000,000, while only $2,500,000 was waived in interest. This revision of the previous contracts provided for an increase in our purchases of aluminum from Canada to 1,000,000,000 pounds.

February 23, 1942, we were requested by the War Production Board to increase the purchase of Canadian aluminum by an additional 370,000,000 pounds. These purchases were made at the reduced price schedule. The latter contracts also provided for advances against deliveries.

Total loans and advances to date in connection with all purchase contracts aggregate $69,500,000, and repayments have been $15,919,477. Total amount of aluminum contracted for is 1,370,000,000 pounds, and deliveries to date have been 368,000,000 pounds.

The contracts made provision for a fixed basis of cancelation on any part of the aluminum that we might determine not to buy.

Metals Reserve Company has had no control over the expenditure of the loans and advances; that is, whether they were to be used for working capital, plant expansion, or otherwise.

Sincerely yours,

JESSE H. JONES,
Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. MARLETT. The total requisitioned appropriations are $68,717,951, of which the cash on hand amounted to $3,533,341, leaving a net difference of approximately $65,000,000 expended.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Now, has your agency connection with the generating of power at Bonneville or Grand Coulee Dam?

Dr. RAVER. No, sir. We sell the power and construct, operate, and maintain the transmission and substation facilities.

LOAN TO THE ALUMINUM CO. OF CANADA

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Did you read the very interesting story in Merry-Go-Round this morning, with reference to the shortage of power in the Northwest and the inability to get priorities from the War Production Board? The article further stated that Jesse Jones had made a secret loan, I believe, of some $65,000,000 without interest to the Aluminum Co. of Canada.

Dr. RAVER. I certainly did read it.

Mr. CARTER. I have not read it, but I have just heard about it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Frankly, I was not only amazed, but shocked at the story. I have known and admired Secretary Jones for many years. I have also admired his businesslike methods, as well as his quick and definite decisions. I shall, of course, not pass final judgment until I hear his side of the controversy, but the story, to say the least, calls for a clear-cut explanation, or else there must be a thorough investigation of the whole transaction. I wonder if you have any definite information to give the committee concerning the matter either on or off the record?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It may be possible, Mr. Chairman, that they do not want any surplus power in the United States, as that might interfere with the Power Trust here, and that is why they are going to go up into Canada; then, after the war is over, they would not have any surplus here.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Let me add here that without doubt this committee as well as the Congress is entitled to know the full facts of the situation. Do you know anything about it, and if so, do you care to make any comment?

Dr. RAVER. Well, my comment goes entirely to the effect of a development of this kind upon this project in the Northwest, for which I am responsible for the administration at the present time. I do not know anything about the contract arrangement between Mr. Jones and the Aluminum Co. of America. But here we have been developing this project in the Northwest and supplying the power capacity for one-third of the aluminum production of this Nation, and we have been doing that conscientiously and for the purpose of winning the war. That is the reason you appropriated the money; that was the fundamental basis of it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Is it not true that there is a shortage, actual or potential, of aluminum in this country, and is it not also true that some of the plants are not operating to full capacity?

Dr. RAVER. There is supposed to be a shortage of aluminum. Not only that, but it is also true that some of the plants which are established in the Northwest today are not operating full capacity—not because we have not the power and have not provided the power for them, but because they are unable to secure the necessary alumina, which is the basic powder from which aluminum is made. Now we suddenly find out that a great power plant has been constructed in Canada by and for the Aluminum Co. of America, which is operating these Government facilities in the Northwest; that it was constructed secretly and at a time when critical materials—we were told, at least—prevented us from going ahead on much of our program. That is one of the reasons we have balances left in our appropriation from last year, because much of our program was stopped and we have been forced to operate our system on a shoestring, overloaded and without reserves and even without the necessary fire protection, in many cases, because we have not been able to get the fire hydrants and other critical materials that we need to protect this war-production plant; and at the same time we find those critical materials which we could not get, even to provide for a sound, sensible, operation of our own system, have been going to Canada for the Aluminum Co. of America. I do not think it sounds very good and I am glad to have that on the record.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Well, to say the least, it calls for an explanation. To say I have been shocked that $65,000,000 or $68,000,000 have been spent on such project in Canada, under circumstances as related in this news story is putting it mildly. I have no quarrel with our good neighbors on the north, but constantly we are hearing that in Canada they are actually making chairs out of aluminum and that they have an abundance of aluminum there. And I might add that they have an abundance of a lot of other things in Canada that citizens of the United States of America are being rationed on. It isn't a very healthy situation.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Well, it must have been to protect some big interest of the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Of course, I assume that an investigation will disclose that the Aluminum Co. of Canada and the Aluminum Co. of America are the one and same company.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Because when they stopped that Central Valley project and the one you are administering, when they needed the power there must have been some great influence to get the War Production Board to stop these projects and then send this material they claim was a shortage of, up to Canada for them to construct a plant there.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I do not know how other members of the committee feel, but this purported transaction does not seem to square with the long honorable record of Jesse Jones, generally recognized as a great farsighted, square-shooting businessman.

Mr. ALVEY. There is an article in this morning's PM that goes into more detail than Drew Pearson's article.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I have not read that article. The committee should get the facts. Here they are closing down a lot of power and reclamation projects in the United States, slowing up on others that are not running to full capacity, and at the same time, $68,000,000 of American taxpayers' money being loaned without interest, according to this story, to build an Aluminum Co.'s factory in the wilds of Canada. And the article further states, I believe, that a lot of the principal may never be paid back. Knowing the Honorable Jesse Jones as I do, I must say that part of it sounds fantastic to me.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, where did they get their money?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. According to the article, from the Metals Reserve Company, a part of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. JENSEN. And where is this plant being built—is it completed?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. It seems to be about completed.

Mr. ALVEY. It will be completed this year, by June.

Mr. JENSEN. Where was it built?

Mr. ALVEY. On the Saguenay River, in the Province of Quebec, a couple of hundred miles north of Montreal.

Dr. RAVER. It is a project which has almost as much firm power in it as the Grand Coulee Dam. That is quite a project to keep under blankets and nobody know about it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. On what theory, or perhaps I should ask if you know what reason or excuse is given why it has been kept a deep, dark secret according to the newspaper report, so that the taxpayers, the American people, and the Congress should know little or nothing about it?

Dr. RAVER. It is a competitive threat to our own power market after the war is over.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. As a post-war proposition, that Canadian Aluminum Co., which we hear is a subsidy of the Aluminum Co. of America, will have a great factory employing thousands of people in Canada with our gallant fighting men looking for jobs. And even though Canada is our ally and a friendly nation, unless there is some good reason for it, I give notice here that I am going to make a vigorous protest.

Mr. CARTER. Do you think that is a part of the good-neighbor policy, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That story, if correctly reported, is not my idea of a good neighbor or the good-neighbor policy.

Mr. CARTER. Is it not in line with the good-neighbor policy?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I do not think so.

Mr. CARTER. Do you know that we are financing a big steel mill also out of this country?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. That is in South America, is it not?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The situation is entirely different in South America, where the Nazis have been spreading anti-American propaganda for decades.

Mr. CARTER. Do you know that the taxpayers of this country have furnished money to every South and Central American country, and why discriminate against Canada, if we are going to do that. Canada is always very friendly to us. She even supplied us with liquor during prohibition.

Mr. JONES. If I understand, the full amount of money spent in South America is to be about $2,000,000,000.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The geographical situation is entirely different. This is right in competition with us; in South America we are trying to get them to produce things down there that we need. But this is power. We can furnish plenty of it, right here in this country.

Mr. MARLETT. It is also in competition with California power.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Absolutely.

Mr. JONES. Was this loan made to the Government of Canada, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. No; to the Aluminum Co. of Canada, according to the printed story.

Mr. JONES. For a power plant of their own?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes; that is my understanding.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Well, did not they try to prevent the Reynolds Co. from developing their own aluminum plant—the same group. Was not there some opposition by the Aluminum Co. of America against the Reynolds Co. in developing its plant, and that has been a known fact for a couple of years?

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] may be permitted to extend her own remarks in the RECORD and to include a communication from the War Department, also one from Colonel Hobby.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS]?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mrs. SMITH of Maine, on account of official business.

To Mr. SIKES, for 1 week, on account of important official business.

To Mr. BELL, for 3 weeks after May 28, 1943, on account of official business.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. KLEIN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 170. An act to confer jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of O. T. Travis;

H. R. 328. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior, because of military operations, to defer or waive payments under nonmineral leases of public lands in Alaska;

H. R. 535. An act for the relief of the legal guardian of Donna Pittel;

H. R. 777. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the hours of employment and safeguard the health of females employed in the District of Columbia," approved February 24, 1914;

H. R. 940. An act for the relief of Howard E. Dickison;

H. R. 1153. An act for the relief of Cordie Underwood and Wilbur Kea;

H. R. 1160. An act for the relief of Alva Burton Rickey;

H. R. 1468. An act for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Azer;

H. R. 1667. An act to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of Mount Vernon, Alexandria & Washington Railway Co., a corporation;

H. R. 2067. An act conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Middle District of Georgia to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of H. M. Reid & Co., of Macon, Ga.; and

H. R. 2115. An act to amend the District of Columbia Unemployment Compensation Act to provide for unemployment compensation in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. KLEIN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 170. An act to confer jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of O. T. Travis;

H. R. 328. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior, because of military operations, to defer or waive payments under nonmineral leases of public lands in Alaska;

H. R. 535. An act for the relief of the legal guardian of Donna Pittel;

H. R. 777. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the hours of employment and safeguard the health of females employed in the District of Columbia," approved February 25, 1914;

H. R. 940. An act for the relief of Howard E. Dickison;

H. R. 1153. An act for the relief of Cordie Underwood and Wilbur Kea;

H. R. 1160. An act for the relief of Alva Burton Rickey;

H. R. 1468. An act for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Azer;

H. R. 2115. An act to amend the District of Columbia Unemployment Compensation Act to provide for unemployment compensation in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. McMURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 56 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, May 28, 1943, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON THE CIVIL SERVICE

This committee will hold public hearings on investigation of civilian employment in governmental departments, Friday, May 28, 1943, at 10 o'clock a. m. in room 246, House Office Building.

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

There will be a meeting of the subcommittee on investigation of restrictions on brand names and newsprint of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, at 10 a. m., Friday, May 28, 1943.

Business to be considered: Public hearings pursuant to House Resolution 98 by Congressman HALLECK.

COMMITTEE OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS

There will be a meeting of the committee at 10 a. m. on Tuesday, June 1, 1943, for consideration of housing bills, in room 1304, New House Office Building.

COMMITTEE ON THE MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries will hold a public hearing on Thursday, June 10, 1943, at 10 o'clock a. m., on H. R. 2731, to facilitate the award and payment of just compensation for property requisitioned under the authority of section 902 (a) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, and for other purposes.

COMMITTEE ON FLOOD CONTROL

The Flood Control Committee will conduct hearings on flood-control reports submitted by the Chief of Engineers since the passage of the Flood Control Act of August 18, 1941, and on amendments to existing law. Flood-control projects for post-war construction will be among the most satisfactory public works, and the committee plans an adequate backlog of sound flood-control projects available for construction following the war.

1. Tuesday, June 1: Maj. Gen. Eugene Reybold, Chief of Engineers, will open the hearings with any statements and recommendations he desires to submit covering national flood control and the projects that should be included in the bill to be reported, especially as they are related to national defense and as they will be important following the existing war to provide sound flood-control projects and desirable public works. General Reybold is now on an airplane tour of inspection of the flood areas and will submit a first-hand report covering recent major floods along the Missouri, Arkansas, White, Mississippi, Illinois, Wabash, Ohio, and other rivers in the recent flood areas. He will be followed by Maj. Gen. Thomas M. Robins, Assistant Chief of Engineers, who has previously advised the Flood Control Committee during hearings and who will also appear before the committee and submit his views and discuss generally the projects that have been favorably reported since the hearings were conducted on H. R. 4911, Seventy-seventh Congress, first session, reported on June 9, 1941, which became the Flood Control Act of August 18, 1941. Col. George R. Goethals, Chief of the Flood Control Branch Office of Chief of Engineers, will attend the hearings and will furnish to the members of the committee in detail any and all available information respecting the said projects on which favorable reports have been submitted by the Chief of Engineers.

The district engineers and the division engineers have furnished to the Chief of Engineers data and information respecting major floods since August 18, 1941, and particularly with respect to recent major floods in the various drainage basins of the country, which will be submitted to the committee.

2. Wednesday, June 2: General Reybold, General Robins, Colonel Goethals, other representatives of the Office of Chief of Engineers, and proponents on projects for the New England region, including the Connecticut and Merrimac Rivers, and the Middle Atlantic region, including New York, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey.

3. Thursday, June 3: General Reybold, General Robins, Colonel Goethals, other representatives of the Office of Chief of Engineers, and proponents on projects in the upper and lower Ohio River and tributaries, and on projects of the South Atlantic region, including rivers flowing into the Atlantic Ocean and Gulf of Mexico east of the Mississippi River.

4. Friday, June 4: General Reybold, General Robins, Colonel Goethals, other representatives of the Office of Chief of Engineers, and proponents on projects along the Missouri River and tributaries and the upper Mississippi River and the Great Lakes region.

5. Tuesday, June 8: General Reybold, General Robins, Colonel Goethals, other representatives of the Office of Chief of Engineers, and proponents on projects in the lower Mississippi River and tributaries, including the Arkansas and White Rivers, and on rivers flowing into the Gulf west of the Mississippi River, and in the western Rocky Mountain region, including Texas and Colorado, and in the Pacific Northwest region, including the Willamette River and the Columbia River and tributaries.

6. Wednesday, June 9: General Reybold, General Robins, Colonel Goethals, other representatives of the Office of Chief of Engineers, and proponents on projects in the Los Angeles area and in the State of California, including the Sacramento, San Joaquin, and Kern River Valleys, and on projects in other regions and in other parts of the United States.

7. Thursday, June 10: Representatives of the Department of Agriculture and the Bureau of Reclamation, and other governmental agencies.

8. Friday, June 11: Senators and Representatives of Congress.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

440. A letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting a message from the Republic of Cuba with regard to the independence of Puerto Rico; to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

441. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Treasury Department for the fiscal years 1943 and 1944, amounting to $2,700,000 (H. Doc. No. 210); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

442. A letter from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting report on lists of papers, recommended to him for disposal by certain agencies of the Federal Government; to the Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk for printing and reference to the proper calendar, as follows:

Mr. BELL: Committee on Insular Affairs. House Joint Resolution 128. A joint resolution to authorize an appropriation for work relief in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, without amendment (Rept. No. 506). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. WHITTINGTON: Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. H. R. 2795. A bill to amend the Budget and Accounting Act, 1921, to provide for the more efficient utilization and disposition of Government property other than land or buildings and facilities or fixtures appurtenant thereto, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 507). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah: Committee on Roads. H. R. 2798. A bill to amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes", approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 508). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. SUMNERS of Texas:

Concurrent resolution providing that any commitments by the signatories to the International Food Conference does not bind the United States of America in any way to the decisions arrived at unless first approved by the Congress of the United States; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

MEMORIALS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, memorials were presented and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: Memorial of the legislature of the State of California, memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States to enact legislation with reference to persons entering the armed forces taking their option in national service life insurance or United States Government (converted) life insurance; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ANDREWS:

H. R. 2824. A bill for the relief of Alice Stamps and Henrietta E. Stamps; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. ANDERSON of California:
H. R. 2825. A bill for the relief of Sigfried Olsen doing business as Sigfried Olsen Shipping Co.; to the Committee on Claims.
By Mr. LAMBERTSON:
H. R. 2826. A bill for the relief of Mrs. Anna Runnebaum; to the Committee on Claims.
By Mr. O'BRIEN of New York:
H. R. 2827. A bill for the relief of Ida M. Rutherford; to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. BRYSON:
966. Petition of A. Moulton McNutt, Esq., and 320 citizens of Camden, N. J., urging enactment of House bill 2082, a measure to reduce absenteeism, conserve manpower, and speed production of materials necessary for the winning of the war, by prohibiting the manufacture, sale, or transportation of alcoholic liquors in the United States for the duration of the war; to the Committee on the Judiciary.
967. Also, petition of Orpha Turner and 25 citizens of Ithaca, Mich., urging enactment of House bill 2082, a measure to reduce absenteeism, conserve manpower, and speed production of materials necessary for the winning of the war, by prohibiting the manufacture, sale, or transportation of alcoholic liquors in the United States for the duration of the war; to the Committee on the Judiciary.
968. Also, petition of F. A. Natt and 23 citizens of Savanna, Ill., urging enactment of House bill 2082, a measure to reduce absenteeism, conserve manpower, and speed production of materials necessary for the winning of the war by prohibiting the manufacture, sale, or transportation of alcoholic liquors in the United States for the duration of the war; to the Committee on the Judiciary.
969. Also, petition of Clara Lawrence and 40 citizens of Marion, Ohio, urging enactment of House bill 2082, a measure to reduce absenteeism, conserve manpower, and speed production of materials necessary for the winning of the war, by prohibiting the manufacture, sale, or transportation of alcoholic liquors in the United States for the duration of the war; to the Committee on the Judiciary.
970. Also, petition of C. W. SENATE

FRIDAY, MAY 28, 1943

(Legislative day of Monday, May 24, 1943)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

God of all hope, we bless Thee for the cleansing ministry of memory and for the rich heritage of noble deeds. Look upon us in pity and mercy as our Nation, founded in Thy name, turns to its stirring past and to its warrior dead. In the flowering splendor of Maytime's garden, even as bugles are sounding to new battles for liberty's cause, prepare our hearts and minds for the sacramental journey to quiet cities of the dead where, under their tents of green, sleep those whose lives were offered as freedom's shield. We thank Thee for the thoughts which make tender our hearts as on the yearly day of remembrance hallowing the white stones and grassy mounds which mark their resting place, we come with reverent step as loving arms are filled with bright-hued blooms, emblems of the evergreens of gratitude and the forget-me-nots of love. Save us from decorating tombs and at the same time desecrating the costly heritage which it takes graves to guarantee.

As our day of memorial comes, with misty eyes and with sorrowing pride we see the blue stars in flags of service which day by day are turning to gold. In thought we leap the seas and walk amid new crosses rising from consecrated ground under alien skies. In this desperate struggle against a pagan creed and for a fairer world, steel our wills to endure to the end as the dear sons and daughters of our hearths and hearts ride off as valiant knights with waving plumes white as their steadfast purpose to battle to the death if need be against the powers of darkness.

"O risen Lord, O shepherd of our dead,
Whose cross has bought them and whose star hath led,
In glorious hope their proud and sorrowing land
Commits her children to Thy gracious hand."

In the dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, or presented, and referred as indicated:

By the VICE PRESIDENT:

A resolution of the Common Council of the City of Milwaukee, Wis., favoring the initiation of measures looking toward the post-war restoration of Great Lakes shipping and rehabilitation of Great Lakes commerce; to the Committee on Commerce.

A resolution of the Flatbush Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Brooklyn, N. Y., favoring the appointment of a permanent commission to study and define the peace aims of the United States; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A petition, numerously signed, of sundry citizens of Richmond and Greely, Kans., praying for the enactment of Senate bill 860, relating to the sale of alcoholic liquors to the members of the land and naval forces of the United States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CONTINUATION OF FARM PROGRAMS—PETITION OF PLEASANT VIEW FARMERS UNION LOCAL, ST. MARYS, KANS.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred a letter in the nature of a petition which I have received from the Pleasant View Farmers Union, St. Marys, Kans., expressing their interest in the continuation of the soil-conservation program, the Farm Security Administration, and other measures which would benefit agriculture.

There being no objection, the letter in the nature of a petition was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ST. MARYS, KANS., May 24, 1943.

SENATOR ARTHUR CAPPER,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR CAPPER: We, as a group of 40 Farmers Union members of Pleasant View Local, No. 1843, wish for continuation of soil conservation and Agricultural Adjustment Agency program, run by farmers themselves.

We also vote for continuation of the Farm Security Administration.

We also adopt the crop insurance made available to farmers, same as other laborers.

We ask for a fair price for our wheat and not parity.

Anything that you can do to help adopt these plans will be appreciated.

Respectfully yours,

PLEASANT VIEW FARMERS UNION LOCAL,
St. Marys, Kans.
ALBERT F. GRIESHABER, President.
CLARA GRIESHABER, Secretary.

RESOLUTION OF EXECUTIVE COUNCIL, AMERICAN BANKERS ASSOCIATION—WAR DAMAGE CORPORATION

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. President, I ask consent to present for appropriate reference a resolution adopted April 12 by the executive council of the American Bankers Association and request unanimous consent to have it included in the RECORD following my remarks.

This resolution expresses approval of the bill S. 1121, which would provide for the return of certain premiums paid the War Damage Corporation. I invite the attention of the Members of the Senate to this resolution.

There being no objection, the resolution was received, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the War Damage Corporation was created to provide insurance against losses of property resulting from enemy attack; and

Whereas the sale of such insurance by the War Damage Corporation since July 1, 1942, has already produced a large surplus; and

Whereas protection of property against war damage is a national responsibility; and

Whereas the War Damage Corporation should not be operated as a profit-making enterprise: Therefore be it

Resolved, That, in the opinion of the executive council of the American Bankers Association, the net earnings of the War Damage Corporation should ultimately revert to its policyholders, either by remission of premiums and/or a refund of any surplus remaining at the end of this war.

RESOLUTION OF ILLINOIS HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—CARE OF ILL AND WOUNDED SOLDIERS AND SAILORS

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. President, I also ask consent to present Resolution No. 59 adopted by the House of Representatives of the Sixty-third General Assembly of the State of Illinois, and request consent to have it included in the RECORD, under the rule, following my remarks.

This resolution deals with the proper care of the returning sick and wounded soldiers and sailors from the present war zones and following the end of this war. I invite the attention of the Members of the Senate to this resolution.

There being no objection, the resolution was received, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, under the rule, as follows:

House Resolution 59

Whereas during World War No. 1 the returning sick and wounded soldiers and sailors found us totally unprepared to furnish them proper hospitalization and treatment; and

Whereas those sick, helpless, and bewildered men were for a considerable length of time left to shift for themselves or were inadequately cared for; and

Whereas the number who will return from World War No. 2, broken in mind, spirit and body, needing medical service, treatment, and hospitalization will in all probability exceed the number who needed such services during the former World War; and

Whereas we now have an efficient Veterans' Administration which is making efficient use of all the means at its command; and

Whereas it will take time to properly locate, plan, equip, and staff specialized institutions of this nature so as to provide adequate care and treatment for all those in need; and

Whereas we as a Nation are duty bound to do everything in our power to relieve and rehabilitate all those injured while in our service: Therefore be it

Resolved, by the House of Representatives of the Sixty-third General Assembly of the State of Illinois, That in order to be assured that the close of World War No. 2 will not find our Nation unprepared to properly care for our sick and wounded, as was the case in World War No. 1, we hereby memorialize the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States and the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, that immediate steps be taken to prepare to meet our responsibilities in this matter; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this preamble and resolution be forwarded by the secretary of state to the Honorable HENRY A. WALLACE, Vice President of the United States and President of the Senate, the Honorable SAM RAYBURN, Speaker of the House of Representatives of Congress, to the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs and to each Member of Congress from the State of Illinois.

Adopted by the House May 19, 1943.

ELMER J. SCHNACHENBERG,
Speaker of the house of representatives.
R. P. RANDOLPH,
Clerk of the house of representatives.

EQUAL-RIGHTS AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION—REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, from the Committee on the Judiciary on behalf of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCFARLAND], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], and myself, I ask consent to report with amendments, Senate Joint Resolution 25, proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States granting equal rights to men and women, and I submit a report (No. 267) thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the report will be received, and the joint resolution will be placed on the calendar.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. MCNARY:

S. 1141. A bill authorizing the appointment and retirement of William G. Everson as a major general, United States Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HAWKES:

S. 1142. A bill for the relief of Parker McKee, Sr., and Louise McKee; to the Committee on Claims.

(Mr. BUSHFIELD (for himself, Mr. SMITH, and Mr. AIKEN) introduced Senate bill 1143, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. BYRD:

S. 1144. A bill for the relief of D. A. McElduff; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. MEAD:

S. 1145. A bill for the relief of the Postal Telegraph-Cable Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WAGNER:

S. 1146. A bill to amend section 31 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. PEPPER:

S. 1147. A bill authorizing the improvement of the waterway from Punta Rasa to Fort Pierce and Stuart, Fla.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. LODGE:

S. 1148. A bill to amend section 203 (b) (6) of part II of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. HAWKES:

S. J. Res. 63. Joint resolution requesting the President to proclaim February 11, 1944, as Edison Day, in commemoration of the birthday of Thomas Elva Edison; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PREVENTION OF SUBSIDY PAYMENTS TO PROCESSORS IN PRICE STABILIZATION

Mr. BUSHFIELD. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], and myself I ask consent to introduce a bill to prevent the payment of subsidies to processors in stabilizing prices, and for other purposes.

I request that the bill be appropriately referred and that an explanatory statement in connection therewith be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be received and appropriately referred, and the statement presented by the Senator from South Dakota will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 1143) to prevent the payment of subsidies to processors in stabilizing prices, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. BUSHFIELD (for himself, Mr. SMITH, and Mr. AIKEN) was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The statement presented by Mr. BUSHFIELD relating to the bill, on behalf of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN], and himself, is as follows:

The questionable wisdom of the proposal of the Office of Price Administration to roll back prices on butter, coffee, and meats and to pay a subsidy from the United States Treasury to the processors of these products caused the subcommittee on food of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to decide upon a definite attempt to prohibit such payments without specific authorization from Congress; hence this bill.

Testimony taken for several days before our committee from processors from many parts of the country convinces us that the producer might suffer heavy loss as a result of the proposed roll-back, because the subsidy could not or would not be passed on to him. It is an acknowledged fact that consumers as a class are earning more than ever before in our history. When we consider that the roll-back and subsidy on butter would save each individual consumer only about 65 cents a year, the resultant decrease in his cost of living seems inconsequential.

Moreover, we believe that the payment of general subsidies from the United States Treasury for the benefit of any group is wrong in principle and we hope Congress will promptly put a stop to what appears to us to be a step toward the development of such a system.

Secretary of Commerce Jesse Jones, appearing before our committee the other day, stated that the total subsidy would be about $450,000,000 a year. When asked by what authority he would pay out this huge sum, he said he would pay it under the order of the President and that no appropriation by Congress was necessary.

Thus the Congress has been told, in effect, that its attitude toward the payment of this money is immaterial; that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, of which Mr. Jones is the head, has the money, and that it would be paid out as indicated.

The committee believes that such payments should not be made without congressional authorization and, through this bill, we are asking the Congress to say so promptly. Failure to insist that subsidies of the type now contemplated by Office of Price Administration be paid only out of funds specifically appropriated for that purpose by Congress will be tantamount to a green light for the administration to go ahead with its attempt to bolster up and preserve inequities in the price structure by paying general subsidies whenever it sees fit.

AMENDMENT OF EMERGENCY FARM MORTGAGE ACT—CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, Senate bill 1078 refers to extension of the power of the Land Bank Commissioner, which power expires on the 30th of June. By mistake, the bill was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The Committee on Banking and Currency has jurisdiction of the subject. I have conferred with the chairmen of both committees, and it is agreeable to each of them that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be discharged from further consideration of the bill, and that it be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Therefore, Mr. President, I move that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1078) to amend section 32 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended, and that it be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT TO INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. CLARK of Idaho submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for the control of predatory animals and injurious rodents, from $740,000 to $1,000,000, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 2719, the Interior Department appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

ADDRESSES AND ARTICLES BY HON. HENRY A. WALLACE (S. DOC. NO. 59)

On motion of Mr. GILLETTE and by unanimous consent, it was, Ordered, That certain addresses and articles by Hon. HENRY A. WALLACE, Vice President of the United States, be printed as a Senate document.

CONTINUATION OF FARM PROGRAMS

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I desire to read into the RECORD at this point some telegrams I have received dealing with the matter of the F. S. A. and other farm agencies. The first telegram is from Crosby, N. Dak., and reads as follows:

CROSBY, N. DAK., May 25, 1943.
Senator WILLIAM LANGER,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

The Divide County Farmers Union urges you to do your utmost to restore the agriculture appropriation bill and try to get increase for the Farm Security Administration and incentive payments.

DIVIDE COUNTY FARMERS UNION,
IVAN ERICKSON, Secretary.

I read a telegram from Watford City, N. Dak., which reads as follows:

WATFORD CITY, N. DAK., May 14, 1943.
Senator WILLIAM LANGER,
Washington, D. C.:

We object strenuously to the divorcement of county and local committees from their duties under present rules for the operation of farm programs. We urge you to use your influence in preventing any change in the present set-up.

That is from the Association of Commerce of Watford City, N. Dak., a commercial club, made up entirely of businessmen. It is signed by Blaine Whipple, secretary.

Another telegram, which is from Beulah, N. Dak., reads as follows:

BEULAH, N. DAK., May 14, 1943.
Senator WILLIAM LANGER,
Washington, D. C.:

Please stand firm on the Agricultural Adjustment Administration program as it is today to help increase food production.

KNIFE RIVER FARMERS UNION LOCAL,
EDNA STROM, Secretary.

I have a telegram from Dickinson, in the western section of North Dakota, which reads as follows:

DICKINSON, N. DAK., May 17, 1943.
Hon. Senator WILLIAM LANGER,
Capitol Building, Washington, D. C.:

Urgently request your continued support urging maintenance on statute and operations Triple A Farm Security Administration and Soil Conservation Service. Without these farmers measures disaster might befall farmers this year should crop failure become imminent.

ST. PIOUS FARMERS UNION, LOCAL NO. 774.

Here is another telegram from Dickinson, N. Dak., which reads as follows:

DICKINSON, N. DAK., May 19, 1943.
Senator WILLIAM LANGER,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Stark County Farmers' Union, 1,500 members, are requesting you for the fullest support and improvement of the entire farm program.

BOARD OF STARK COUNTY FARMERS' UNION, SPENCER BOB, Chairman.

Here is another telegram from Wheelock, N. Dak., reading as follows:

WHEELOCK, N. DAK., May 21, 1943.
Senator WILLIAM LANGER,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

We trust you will now and in the future stand squarely behind the farm people of the State of North Dakota who elected you to your high office, and fight for all the necessary appropriations for a continuation of the Triple A and Farm Security Administration.

BROKLYN FARMERS' UNION, No. 364.
GEORGE MOEN, President.
Mrs. A. M. JOHNSON, Secretary.

Here is another telegram from the northwestern section of the State, which reads:

WHEELOCK, N. DAK., May 21, 1943.
Senator WILLIAM LANGER,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

We urge you to back the appropriation for Triple A, Farm Security Administration, and soil-conservation programs, and that the control of Triple A remain in hands of county and community committeemen. We ask that the Bank for Cooperatives remain in control of Farm Credit Administration. We also believe in nonrecourse loans and incentive payments for war crops.

VIEW FARMERS' UNION, LOCAL 371, HOMER LEEN, President.
OSCAR LARSON, Secretary.

Here is one from Ohall, N. Dak., which is close to the Canadian border. The telegram reads as follows:

OHALL, N. DAK., May 25, 1943.
Senator WILLIAM LANGER,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

We of the Farmers' Union, Renville County, demand control of the Triple A by elected committeemen, with adequate funds, incentive payments for short crops, and expanded nonrecourse F-2 loans for increase of farm production; also adequate funds for Soil Conservation and Farm Security Administration to operate on, with the farm-labor program and bank of cooperatives handled by the Farm Credit Administration.

RENVILLE COUNTY FARMERS' UNION,
GULLICKSON, Secretary.

Here is a telegram from the town of McGregor, N. Dak.

MCGREGOR, N. DAK., May 24, 1943.
Hon. WILLIAM LANGER,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

We ask your support for adequate funds for Farm Security Administration continuation of Agricultural Adjustment Agency payments for war crops parity payments on wheat.

SAUK VALLEY FARMERS UNION LOCAL.

I may add, Mr. President, that there is not a more patriotic group of farmers anywhere in the United States than those around the little town of McGregor, N. Dak. They had 9 continuous years of drought, but, instead of leaving the area, those farmers stayed there, relying upon the programs which they are begging to have continued. They stayed there during that drought, knowing that the Government, as they thought, was going to help them. It is because of that they are producing large war crops; they are paying their debts, paying what they owe to the Federal land bank and the mortgage company. If we only leave them alone they will work out their own salvation.

Here is a telegram from Ryder, N. Dak.

RYDER, N. DAK., May 24, 1943.
WILLIAM LANGER,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

We urge your support of the National Farmers Union in the fight on agricultural appropriation bill in asking: First, adequate appropriation for Triple A; second, opposition to putting control of Triple A into Extension Service; third, continuation of Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation nonrecourse loan; fourth, funds for incentive payments so that farmers are paid for risk of shifting to war crop production; fifth, $1,000,000,000 for Farm Security Administration; sixth, $400,000,000 for soil conservation; seventh, continue Bank of Cooperatives in Farm Credit Administration.

MCLEAN COUNTY FARMERS UNION,
WELDON L. HAUGEN, Secretary.

Here is a telegram from Petersburg, N. Dak., in the northeastern section of the State, a community that is almost solidly Scandinavian, made up of folk who came from Norway and Sweden 20, 30, 40, or 50 years ago, and who are among the most outstanding farmers of the State:

PETERSBURG, N. DAK., May 13, 1943.
Senator WILLIAM LANGER,
Washington, D. C.:

Farmers Union Local 168 voted unanimously with 74 voting to urge you to oppose with vote and influence any change in the present existing farm program. We want Agricultural Adjustment Agency as is. Federal Security Administration non-recourse loans for war crops. More experienced farm help with plenty farm machinery and repairs. We want to help win this war by producing necessary food and fiber.

LOUIS R. HILLEBRAND, President.

Here is a telegram from Havelock, N. Dak., in the southeastern section of the State:

HAVELOCK, N. DAK., May 25, 1943.
WILLIAM LANGER,
Senate Office Building:

Will appreciate the continuance of your good work on legislation favorable to Triple A, Federal Security Administration, and incentive payments.

HAVELOCK FARMERS UNION LOCAL 858.

Mr. President, I wish to say that I hope every Senator will make a study as to how the F. S. A. and the farm program generally are affecting all the Northwestern States. State after State would almost have gone into bankruptcy if it had not been for the fact that the Federal Government sent hundreds of millions of dollars into the States to help finance the farmers. When a farmer could not keep 20 cows, arrangements were made so that he could keep 10; when he could not keep 10, when the drought continued for 8, 9, or 10 years, arrangements were made so that a foundation herd could be retained. The Federal Government did a tremendous amount of good, and it is continuing to do so. I hope that the farm agencies will all be continued and that appropriations necessary to keep them functioning, as they have been functioning in the past, will be granted.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 495) to establish a Women's Army Auxiliary Corps for service in the Army of the United States, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 128) to authorize an appropriation for work relief in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 21), in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the address delivered before the joint meeting of the Members of the two Houses of Congress by the Prime Minister of Great Britain, the Right Honorable Winston Churchill, on Wednesday, May 19, 1943, be printed as a House document, and that 30,000 additional copies shall be printed for the House document room.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 128) to authorize an appropriation for work relief in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

PRINTING OF ADDRESS BEFORE CONGRESS OF PRIME MINISTER WINSTON CHURCHILL, OF GREAT BRITAIN

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate House Concurrent Resolution 21, which was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the address delivered before the joint meeting of the Members of the two Houses of Congress by the Prime Minister of Great Britain, the Right Honorable Winston Churchill, on Wednesday, May 19, 1943, be printed as a House document, and that 30,000 additional copies shall be printed for the House document room.

Mr. HAYDEN. I move that the Senate concur in the House concurrent resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 111) to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee on page 1, line 8, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 8, after the numerals "1943", it is proposed to insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That every foreign-trade agreement concluded in accordance with the provisions of said act, as amended, shall be subject to termination 6 months after the cessation of hostilities in the present war as fixed by proclamation of the President, pursuant to joint resolution of the Congress or by the President."

Mr. THOMAS of Utah obtained the floor.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have asked the Senator to yield to me for a moment in order to see if we cannot make an arrangement temporarily to lay aside the pending business, and take up House bill 2714, making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943, and for prior fiscal years, and for other purposes. I will state my reason for making such a request. We all know we have increased the overtime pay of a great many Government employees, and unless the urgent deficiency bill is passed and becomes law before next Tuesday, it will lead to the greatest confusion in the making of the payments; in fact they cannot be made.

It is very urgent that they should be made. There are only two possible controversial items in the bill, and I do not think they will lead to extended discussion. I think we can probably pass the appropriation bill in the course of an hour at the outside. I wonder if the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] would be willing to agree to the unanimous-consent request I now submit.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that House Joint Resolution 111 be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 2714, in an endeavor to pass it this morning. If consideration of the bill should lead to any delay, the Senator from Georgia, or the Senator from Utah, or any other Senator can ask for the regular order, and that, of course, would bring back House Joint Resolution 111 for consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, may I ask the Senator from Tennessee how long it will take to consider the appropriation bill?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not think it will take more than an hour. One can never tell, however. There are two items in it which will probably take several moments to explain, but I do not think they will lead to any extensive discussion. I believe the bill can be passed within an hour.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, with the understanding that Senators can call for the regular order and displace the appropriation bill if it becomes manifest that its consideration will involve long discussion, I would gladly accommodate the Senator from Tennessee, because I know the necessity for passing the appropriation bill. At the same time, the joint resolution to extend the Trade Agreements Act is in very much the same condition, and I will have to give notice that I shall ask for the regular order if discussion of the appropriation bill becomes protracted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will sustain the Senator from Georgia if he calls for the regular order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, in view of the statements made on the floor and conversations had about the matter, I have no objection to the proposed action.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee that House Joint Resolution 111 be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 2714?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2714) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943, and for prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will state the amendments of the committee.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Title I—General Appropriations—Legislative," on page 2, after line 2, to insert:

SENATE

Office of the Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper: For the payment of 21 pages for the Senate Chamber, at $4 per day each, for the period July 1, 1943, to December 31, 1943, both dates inclusive, $15,456.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 7, to insert:

Senate restaurants: For payment to the Architect of the Capitol in accordance with the act approved September 9, 1942 (Public Act 709, 77th Cong.), fiscal year 1943, $13,592.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "House of Representatives," on page 2, after line 21, to insert:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Executive Office of the President—Emergency Fund for the President", on page 3, line 16, after the figures "$25,000,000", to strike out "Provided, That no part of the funds continued available by this paragraph shall be allotted to or expended for the National Resources Planning Board or the Farm Security Administration or for any of the functions of either said Board or said Administration" and insert "Provided, That no part of the funds continued available by this paragraph shall be allotted to or expended for any of the functions of any agency of Government for which appropriations have been duly made by the Congress, or for the functions of any agency for which estimates have been submitted by the Budget and for which the Congress has failed to make appropriations: Provided further, That this limitation shall not apply to allotments or allocations made to the War Department or the Navy Department."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office for Emergency Management", on page 5, line 7, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$700,000" and insert "$834,000" and in line 8, after the word "binding" to strike out "$4,363,000" and insert "$4,597,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 8, to insert:

War Shipping Administration: Notwithstanding the provisions of section 203 of the First Supplemental National Defense Appropriation Act, 1943 (Public Law 678), the Office for Emergency Management, War Shipping Administration, may expend during the fiscal year 1943 not to exceed $294,430 for travel.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Independent Executive Agencies", on page 6, after line 1, to insert:

BITUMINOUS COAL CONSUMERS' COUNSEL

Salaries and expenses: For the Office of the Bituminous Coal Consumers' Counsel, fiscal year 1943, in carrying out the functions thereof as created by the Bituminous Coal Act of 1937, as amended (15 U. S. C. 849 and 852), as further amended by the act of April 24, 1943 (Public Law 40), and as further amended, to be supplemental to and merged with the appropriation under this head in the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1943, and to be available for the same objects of expenditure, $16,000, to continue available during the fiscal year 1944: Provided, That this appropriation shall not be available for obligation unless and until there shall have been enacted a further extension of said act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 13, to insert:

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

CONTINGENT AND MISCELLANEOUS EXPENSES

Postage: For an additional amount for postage for strictly official mail matter, including the rental of postage-meter equipment, fiscal year 1943, $4,000.

Judicial expenses: For an additional amount for judicial expenses, fiscal year 1943, including the objects specified under this head in the District of Columbia Appropriation Act, 1943, $1,675.

General advertising: For an additional amount for general advertising, authorized and required by law, and for tax and school notices and notices of changes in regulations, fiscal year 1941, $108.40.

Printing and binding: For an additional amount for printing and binding, fiscal year 1943, $8,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 4, to insert:

REFUND OF ERRONEOUS COLLECTIONS

Refund of erroneous collections: For an additional amount for refund of erroneous collections, fiscal year 1943, including the objects specified under this head in the District of Columbia Appropriation Act, 1943, $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 9, to insert:

PAYMENT TO JOSEPH SHARFSIN

For payment to Joseph Sharfsin, of the Philadelphia (Pa.) bar, in accordance with the provisions of the act of June 23, 1942 (Private Law 469), $3,472.39.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 13, to insert:

HEALTH DEPARTMENT

Tuberculosis sanatoria, expenses: For an additional amount for provisions, and so forth, fiscal year 1943, including the objects specified under this head in the District of Columbia Appropriation Act, 1943, $28,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 18, to insert:

COURTS

THE MUNICIPAL COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Salaries: For an additional amount for personal services, including pay of retired judges, fiscal year 1943, $5,464.14.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 10, to insert:

MILITIA

For an additional amount for personal services and other expenses, fiscal year 1941, including the objects specified under this head in the District of Columbia Appropriation Act, 1941, $453.12.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, after line 2, to insert:

SETTLEMENT OF CLAIMS AND SUITS

For the payment of claims in excess of $250, approved by the Commissioners in accordance with the act of February 11, 1929, as amended by the act approved June 5, 1930 (45 Stat. 1160; 46 Stat. 500), $2,152.54.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments dealing with judgments and audited claims be agreed to en bloc. The Government is obligated to pay them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the amendments dealing with judgments and audited claims were agreed to en bloc, as follows:

On page 11, after line 7, to insert:

JUDGMENTS

For the payment of final judgments, including costs, rendered against the District of Columbia, as set forth in Senate Document No. 44, together with such further sum as may be necessary to pay the interest at not exceeding 4 percent per annum on such judgments, as provided by law, from the date the same became due until the date of payment, $11,418.75.

On page 11, after line 15, to insert:

AUDITED CLAIMS

For the payment of the following claims, certified to be due by the accounting officers of the District of Columbia, under appropriations, the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 20, 1874 (31 U. S. C. 713), being for the service of the fiscal year 1940 and prior fiscal years:

Public schools, salaries, District of Columbia, 1940, community centers, $6.08;

General advertising, District of Columbia, 1940, $11.24;

Support of convicts, District of Columbia, 1940, $108.80;

Metropolitan Police expenses, District of Columbia, 1939, motor vehicles, $147.92;

Support of convicts, District of Columbia, 1939, $328.50;

Support of convicts, District of Columbia, 1938, $149.40;

Contingent and miscellaneous expenses, 1937, general advertising, $286;

In all, audited claims, $1,037.94.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Tennessee if there was any division in the committee with respect to any of the amendments to the bill?

Mr. McKELLAR. Not with respect to the amendments which are being considered now. The two controversial amendments are one which has already been agreed to at the bottom of page 3, and one on page 48, section 304, the last section but one of the bill. As I remember, those two amendments were the only really controversial amendments in the whole bill.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. The Senator referred to the amendment on page 3 as being a controversial amendment. My recollection is that the discussion in the committee was largely over the form or the draft rather than the purpose of the proposal. Am I correct in that respect?

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is correct. That led me into making a mistake of fact yesterday in discussing another amendment in another bill. I thought the action on that amendment in our committee was unanimous, but by examination of the record it was discovered that the amendment was agreed to by a vote of 11 to 9. Correction of that statement was made at the time. The amendment now referred to, as I remember, was approved by all members of the committee.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. What specifically is included in the increase made on page 5, line 7, of approximately $134,000 for printing and binding?

Mr. McKELLAR. That refers to an overnight printing service, for which an additional sum of money was found to be necessary.

Mr. AUSTIN. Does House bill 2714 comprehend printing and binding of reports of a historical nature concerning the last World War and the peace?

Mr. McKELLAR. This bill does not. That item will come up in the appropriation bill for the State Department, which is now before the committee. The hearings on the State Department bill have been completed. When that measure comes up the Senator will find contained therein the item to which he refers.

Mr. AUSTIN. I am interested in having that item allowed, if possible.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the next committee amendment.

The next amendment was, on page 12, after line 12, to insert:

TEMPORARY INCREASE IN COMPENSATION FOR CERTAIN EMPLOYEES OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

For additional amounts for appropriations for the fiscal year 1943 for the payment of increases in compensation authorized by the act of April 1, 1943 (Public Law 22, 78th Cong.), as follows:

For poundmaster, salaries, District of Columbia, 1943, $175;

Commission on Mental Health, District of Columbia, 1943, $525;

Public schools, salaries, District of Columbia, 1943: Administrative and supervisory, $11,373; attendance officers, $265; teachers and librarians, $470,700; in all, $482,338;

Recreation Board, salaries and expenses, District of Columbia, 1943, $14,305;

Metropolitan Police, salaries, District of Columbia, 1943: Pay and allowances, officers and members, $48,000;

Fire Department, salaries, District of Columbia, 1943: Pay of officers and members, $7,000;

Gallinger Municipal Hospital, salaries, District of Columbia, 1943, $36,000;

Probation system, courts, District of Columbia, 1943, $750;

In all, $589,093.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 11, to insert:

HIGHWAY FUND, GASOLINE TAX, AND MOTOR VEHICLE FEES

DEPARTMENT OF VEHICLES AND TRAFFIC

Expenses: For an additional amount, fiscal year 1941, for purchase, installation, and modification of electric traffic lights, signals and controls, and so forth, including the objects specified under this head in the District of Columbia Appropriation Act, 1941, $468.19.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, one page 13, after line 19, to insert:

REFUND OF PAVING ASSESSMENTS

Refund of paving assessments: For the refund in part of paving assessments paid by abutting property owners in connection with the restoration of abandoned street railway track areas, where portions of such assessments were subsequently paid by the street railway company, $7,426.65, payable from the special fund created by the act of April 23, 1924, as amended by the act of August 17, 1937.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 3, to insert:

WATER SERVICE

Washington aqueduct: For an additional amount for operation, fiscal year 1943, including the objects specified under this head in the District of Columbia Appropriation Act, 1943, $174,763, payable wholly from the revenues of the Water Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 9, to insert:

DIVISION OF EXPENSES

The foregoing sums for the District of Columbia, unless otherwise therein specifically provided, shall be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and the Treasury of the United States in the manner prescribed by the District of Columbia Appropriation Acts for the respective fiscal years for which such sums are provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Department of the Interior," on page 15, after line 1, to insert:

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY

BITUMINOUS COAL DIVISION

For the Bituminous Coal Division, fiscal year 1943, in carrying out the purposes of the Bituminous Coal Act of 1937, as amended (15 U. S. C. 828–849), as further amended by the act of April 24, 1943 (Public Law 40), and as further amended, to be supplemental to and merged with the appropriation under this head in the Interior Department Appropriation Act, 1943, and to be available for the same objects of expenditure, $800,000, to continue available during the fiscal year 1944: Provided, That this appropriation shall not be available for obligation unless and until there shall have been enacted a further extension of said act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, after line 15, to insert:

BUREAU OF INDIAN AFFAIRS

Maintenance, Wapato irrigation and drainage system, etc., Yakima Reservation, Wash. (receipt limitation): For operation and maintenance of the Wapato irrigation and drainage system and auxiliary units thereof, Yakima Indian Reservation, Wash., fiscal year 1943, $20,000, to be added to the $165,980 appropriated for this purpose in the Interior Department Appropriation Act, 1943 (56 Stat. 520).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Reclamation," on page 16, after line 15, to insert:

GEOLOGICAL SURVEY

To enable the Geological Survey to meet obligations incurred by it arising from cooperative work pending reimbursement from cooperating agencies in accordance with the provisions of the acts of February 27, 1925 (43 U. S. C. 39, 40); May 10, 1926, as amended (43 U. S. C. 48); June 17, 1935 (43 U. S. C. 49); March 4, 1915, as amended (31 U. S. C. 686); and July 2, 1943 (56 Stat. 537–539), fiscal year 1943, $400,000, which amount shall be placed to the credit of the 1943 appropriation account of the Geological Survey: Provided, That there shall be returned to the Treasury not later than 6 months after the close of the fiscal year 1943 out of reimbursements received from cooperating agencies an amount equal to the sum herein appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 5, to insert:

GOVERNMENT IN THE TERRITORIES

Salaries and expenses, Government of the Virgin Islands: For an additional amount for salaries and expenses, fiscal year 1943, including the objects specified for the appropriation for this purpose in the Interior Department Appropriation Act, 1943 (56 Stat. 560), $7,000.

Salaries and expenses, agricultural experiment station and vocational school, Virgin Islands: For an additional amount for salaries and expenses, fiscal year 1943, including the objects specified for the appropriation for this purpose in the Interior Department Appropriation Act, 1943 (56 Stat. 560), $2,100.

Defraying deficits in treasuries of municipal governments, Virgin Islands: For an additional amount, fiscal year 1943, for defraying the deficit in the treasury of the municipal government of St. Croix because of the excess of current expenses over current revenues for the fiscal year 1943 (56 Stat. 560), $45,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 18, to insert:

PUERTO RICAN HURRICANE RELIEF

The limitation of $19,950 upon the amount that may be expended for administrative expenses, Puerto Rican Hurricane Relief, contained in the Interior Department Appropriation Act, 1943, is hereby increased to $22,350.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, after line 19, to insert:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

(Out of the postal revenues)

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF INSPECTOR

Clerks, division headquarters: For an additional amount for compensation of 332 clerks at division headquarters and other posts of duty of post-office inspectors, fiscal year 1943, $8,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, after line 2, to insert:

OFFICE OF THE SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL

Star Route Service: For an additional amount for inland transportation by star routes (excepting service in Alaska), including temporary service to newly established post offices, fiscal year 1942, $14,000.

Railway Mail Service: For an additional amount for Railway Mail Service, salaries, fiscal year 1943, $5,375,000.

Railway postal clerks, travel allowance: For an additional amount for travel allowance to railway postal clerks and substitute railway postal clerks, fiscal year 1943, $375,000.

Railway Mail Service, traveling expenses: For an additional amount for Railway Mail Service, traveling expenses, fiscal year 1943, $3,000.

Domestic air-mail service: For an additional amount for the inland transportation of mail by aircraft, including the objects specified under this head in the Post Office Department Appropriation Act for the fiscal years which follow, respectively:

For 1941, $192,541;

For 1942, $327,891.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, after line 23, to insert:

OFFICE OF THE THIRD ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL

Indemnities, domestic mail: For an additional amount for payment of indemnities, including the objects specified under this head in the Post Office Department Appropriation Acts for the fiscal years which follow, respectively:

For 1942, $110,000;

For 1943, $660,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, after line 7, to insert:

WAR DEPARTMENT CIVIL FUNCTIONS

UNITED STATES SOLDIERS' HOME

For maintenance and operation of the United States Soldiers' Home, to be paid from the Soldiers' Home permanent fund, $44,800: Provided, That no part of the Soldiers' Home permanent fund shall be used for the payment of salaries including overtime in excess of amounts fixed by the Board of Commissioners for the Soldiers' Home.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title II—War overtime pay and other compensation increase," on page 27, at the end of line 15, to increase the appropriation for "Salaries, Freedmen's Hospital, Federal Security Agency," 1943, from $22,700 to $28,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, after line 6, to insert:

Foreign quarantine service, Public Health Service, 1943, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, at the end of line 25, to increase the total appropriation for the Federal Security Agency, from $2,162,700 to $2,178,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "War Department—Civil functions," on page 42, after line 9, to strike out:

Soldiers' Home permanent fund (trust fund), 1943, $44,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, at the end of line 16, to reduce the total appropriation for civil functions of the War Department from $359,400 to $314,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, at the end of line 25, to reduce the total appropriation under section 201, for additional amounts for appropriations for the fiscal year 1943 for the payment of increases in compensation authorized by law, from $121,899,751 to $121,870,951.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Title III—General provisions," on page 48, line 1, after the words "United States", to strike out the colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That for the purpose of this section, an affidavit signed by any such person shall be considered prima facie evidence that the requirements of this section with respect to his status have been complied with."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, after line 10, to strike out:

SEC. 304. No part of any appropriation, allocation, or fund (1) which is made available under or pursuant to this act, or (2) which is now, or which is hereafter made, available under or pursuant to any other act, to any department, agency, or instrumentality of the United States, shall be used to pay any part of the salary, or other compensation for the personal services, of Goodwin B. Watson, William E. Dodd, Jr., and Robert Morss Lovett: Provided, That this section shall not operate to deprive any such person of payment for leaves of absence or salary, or of any refund or reimbursement, which have accrued prior to the date of the enactment of this act: Provided further, That this section shall not operate to deprive any such person of payment for services performed as a member of a jury or as a member of the armed forces of the United States, nor any benefit, pension, or emolument resulting therefrom.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, let me ask if there was a division in the committee over the deletion of section 304.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, there were a great many expressions of opinion as to section 304; but the committee took the position that either last year or the year before a similar item was carried as to Goodwin V. Watson, and the committee sustained the item at that time, and the bill as reported to the Senate contained the provision. The Senate by a viva voce vote, I believe—I do not think there was a yea-and-nay vote—overruled the committee. Under the circumstances, the Senate having taken that position on a previous occasion, we felt it probably would take the same position in this instance; and so we struck out the item so that it could go to conference and be considered there. I shall ask the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], who is a member of both the subcommittee and the full committee, if my statement is not substantially correct?

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I think the Senator is, as usual, entirely correct. The item, as the Members of the Senate know, deals with a very controversial matter. It was the attitude of the Senate, when the problem was last before us, that we should not in such a way attempt to deal with the status of the three men involved. The Appropriations Committee has conformed its present action to the previously expressed view of the Senate. There has been, and there is, so much division in the other branch of Congress with respect to this matter that it would also seem advisable to the members of the Senate committee that this subject might perhaps well be pursued further and that further study might well be given to it in the conference committee. Whether any solution is possible, I do not know. I simply know that, for myself, I am opposed to the proposed method.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHITE. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let me ask whether any evidence was presented to the subcommittee of the Senate Appropriations Committee in connection with the matter.

Mr. WHITE. I was not a member of the subcommittee which considered the bill. My impression is—although the Senator from Tennessee can answer—that the subcommittee acted upon the past record which had been built up in the case and was very substantially influenced by the past action of the Senate itself with respect to it. I think I am correct, but I am not certain.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let me say to the Senator from Tennessee that I asked the Senator from Maine whether any evidence had been adduced before the Senate subcommittee in connection with the three men involved in the amendment on page 48.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, as I recall, the only evidence adduced was in behalf of striking out the provision and none was adduced for retaining it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Can the Senator advise me whether I have been correctly informed? It has been stated to me that the action of the House was predicated on the findings of the so-called Kerr committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have heard that, but there was no evidence of that kind before our committee.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The further statement has been made that the evidence taken by the Kerr committee was not available to the House. I wondered whether it had been made available to the Senate committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. It had not; and that was an additional reason why the committee, with practical, if not entire, unanimity, concluded to strike out the item and to give them an opportunity to make a showing later.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, a moment ago I said to the Senator from Wisconsin that, in my opinion, no new testimony was presented to the subcommittee on this matter, but that the subcommittee and the full committee acted on the past record of the Senate with respect to it.

Mr. McKELLAR. In addition to that, there were a number of witnesses before the subcommittee. Independent witnesses came down from New York and the Secretary of the Interior appeared before the committee and very vigorously opposed it, and probably other officials of the Government appeared. All the witnesses before our committee were in opposition to it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The only reason for my interruption of the Senator from Maine was that if the information which had been given to me was correct, namely, that the action was taken without the testimony or the evidence which had been the basis for the action of the House committee being presented to the House itself, it would seem to me a most unusual procedure. Certainly, a man or a group of men have the right to be confronted with the testimony upon which it is proposed that he or they be denied the right to his or their livelihood. Let me say further that I have grave question as to whether depriving a person of his position in this way does not violate in spirit, if not in letter, the provision in the Constitution which prohibits Congress from enacting a bill of attainder.

However, be that as it may, on the basis of the statements made to me, if the evidence on which the House text is predicated has not been made public, it would be, in addition, a most unfortunate precedent. Surely a man has a right to be confronted with the evidence against him in a court, committee, or forum, where he may refute it if he can.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I take it the Senator does not mean that what he is now saying is addressed to the action of the Senate committee.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. No.

Mr. WHITE. I wanted that to be made clear.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly; but the point is that I wished to ascertain, if I could, whether the information which had been given to me was correct, and whether any evidence had been made available to the Senate Appropriations Committee upon which any such action could be justified, waving aside for the moment the question of whether it is within the power of Congress to enact legislation of this character. I rose to ask the Senator the question because I was most anxious to know what the record showed in that regard. I confess that I have not had an opportunity to read it. I have been busy with other matters.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Without expressing any view as to what the Senate should do, it seems to me that the power of the Senate to do this, if it so desires, is clear. No man has a constitutional title to a job. Since it is within the power of Congress to appropriate for any purpose, or not to appropriate, Congress undoubtedly has the power. It may be a foolish exercise of the power.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, with all due respect to the legal attainments of the Senator from Texas, let me say that there are very able lawyers who take exactly the opposite view, and who hold that such action would be violative of the provisions of the Constitution. However, that is not unusual. I do not know how able lawyers could continue to earn a livelihood unless they were able to disagree on propositions of law.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator has anticipated me. I was about to observe that the fact that able lawyers disagree is what supports the legal profession.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is why they are able to eat. Nevertheless, after reading the arguments on both sides of the constitutional question, the Senator from Wisconsin has grave doubt whether Congress has the right to enact such legislation. In the present state of the record, I certainly hope that the Senate conferees will make an ardent fight for the Senate's amendment. I wished to have the RECORD show that the Senate has an understanding of the question and is aware of the action which it is taking in this regard.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 48, after line 10.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 3, to change the section number from 305 to 304.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That completes the committee amendments. The bill is before the Senate and open to further amendment. If there be no further amendments to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H. R. 2714) was read the third time and passed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, request a conference with the House of Representatives thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. McKELLAR, Mr. GLASS, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. TYDINGS, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. NYE, and Mr. LODGE conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I wish to thank the leaders on both sides, as well as the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], and other Senators who aided in the passage of this bill so that the urgent deficiency appropriations may be made available as soon as possible.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I desire to invite the attention of the able Senator from Tennessee in charge of the bill just passed to the amendment on pages 3 and 4 of the bill. I do so now, because, like the Senator from Tennessee, I desire to see the trade-agreements measure which is before the Senate taken up as soon as possible. Therefore I did not present this matter while the Senate was considering the bill a few moments ago. However, I hope that the Senator from Tennessee and the other members of the conference committee will take to conference and seriously consider what I have to say.

It seems to me that the amendment which has been agreed to may be so restrictive as to contradict the purposes for which the emergency fund was originally established. I seriously question that the language of the amendment as amended does not restrict the use of funds to the purposes for which Congress has heretofore made appropriation or authorization. It provides that such sums may not be spent by any agency for which Congress has made an appropriation, or by any agency for which estimates have been submitted by the Bureau of the Budget, and for which Congress has failed to make appropriations. It seems to me that it would restrict the funds to purposes for which Congress has made authorization, but for which no estimate of appropriation was ever submitted, or for which Congress has made no appropriation.

I honestly believe that the situation is somewhat confused. There may be considerable doubt as to the purposes for which the President's fund may now be used, or whether it may be used at all. The amendment would seem to require that the agency which is to spend the funds must be one for which no appropriation has been made, and thus would seem to include the Executive Office of the President, for which Congress has made appropriations. In other words, if my interpretation is correct, the President is given a fund which he himself may not spend, and which no agency may spend unless it is one for which no appropriation has been made or refused by the Congress.

I wished to put that statement into the RECORD at this time with the sincere hope and expectation that it may be considered in conference.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am very happy that the Senator has put the statement in the RECORD. It will be considered by the conferees. Of course, this amendment will put the whole question into conference.

Mr. LUCAS. That is correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. The amendment can be changed, or amended, or even stricken out in conference. The whole subject will be before the conferees. So I am sure that if the amendment would adversely affect anyone in the executive department, or any other department, the conferees will hear about it. The matter will certainly be brought to their attention and considered very carefully.

Mr. LUCAS. I appreciate the last statement made by the Senator. I am satisfied that it is only a question of the rearrangement of the language, and that the committee does not mean to do what I contend it has done. It may be that I am mistaken. However, I believe there is merit in what I have said, and that the question should be carefully considered by the conferees.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, according to the way the amendment reads, if an appropriation has been made by Congress, no money may be expended from the President's emergency fund for that purpose; or if a Budget estimate has been submitted, no money may be expended from the fund unless Congress should allow it. There are instances of Congress having authorized work to be done, for which no estimates have been submitted—as, for example, the Florida ship canal. As the amendment reads, it would be possible to use this fund to build the Florida ship canal. I think the question had better be looked into carefully in conference.

Mr. McKELLAR. That will certainly be done. The Senator from Arizona is one of the conferees, so I am sure no injustice will be done.

POST-WAR PLANNING

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, yesterday the Senate spent a great deal of time discussing the question of planning for post-war domestic problems. The disposition of the Government to create new agencies for planning for present emergencies or post-war objectives is too often an admission of the unwillingness of the present agencies and institutions to function, whether through lack of vision or of application. Such planning can best be done by those duly charged with the responsibility to do it.

In no field is this more true than with reference to the present war or the mechanics of the peace to follow. In this instance the failure of Congress to plan intelligently for the future is due to the paucity of information which comes to the Congress from those charged with the conduct of the war and with the policies between nations associated in the war. This indicates the desire of the executive department to conduct these tremendous tasks without the counsel of the Congress. It points clearly to the intent of the administration to write its own plan for peace without counseling with the Congress. Twenty-four years ago the Nation had an outstanding example of the dire results of such a policy in the failure to reconcile the unconsulted wish of the Congress in making the terms of peace. We ought to avoid another such experience.

The able junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] has offered a plan to bring about closer cooperation among the branches of our Government responsible for determining the peace. The plan is now under consideration in the Committee on Foreign Relations. I am taking this brief time from the business of the Senate to urge on the Committee of Foreign Relations the early consideration of the plan proposed by the able Senator from Wisconsin to bring unity of thought between the Executive and the Congress in this highly important task.

In the Washington Post of one day this week there appeared an editorial strongly urging consideration of this proposal. I ask that the editorial be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks, in further support of the request I have made.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TELLING CONGRESS

The enthusiasm with which Congress received Prime Minister Churchill last week was not wholly due to warmth of feeling for our British Allies or to admiration for a great statesman. In part, it reflected the hunger of Congressmen for news and background information about the war. This was the first opportunity the great majority of Senators and Representatives have had to get a first-hand report on the Tunisian campaign or the war in general in recent months.

When President Roosevelt returned from Casablanca, there was hope that he would report to Congress on the progress of the war and on such plans for future action as could be revealed without giving valuable information to the enemy. Instead the President's speech on his trip was made at a dinner given by the White House Correspondents' Association. Even when the great victory in north Africa was won, there was no report on the matter to Congress. Legislators had to await the arrival of Mr. Churchill from London to obtain an authoritative review of this notable achievement. Later Mr. Churchill also met in executive session with the Foreign Relations Committees of both Houses and answered questions about the war in the best House of Commons manner.

The effect of Mr. Churchill's candor and his consideration for the legislative branch is to turn the spotlight once more upon the dangerous lack of cooperation between the White House and Congress. Our legislators are expected to vote staggering sums for the war, to support every proposal advanced by the Commander in Chief, and to prepare for the restoration of peace without being kept informed as to how the battle is going. The liaison between the executive and the legislative branches is so poor that the latter looks hopefully to foreign visitors for information on which intelligent policies can be based.

This sort of separatism could be justified only on the theory that the administration is solely responsible for the conduct of the war and the making of peace when the guns have been silenced. But, of course, that responsibility is not wholly on the executive branch. White House policy must be supported at every turn by legislation which only Congress can enact. And the peace treaty will have to win the support of two-thirds of the Senate. In the circumstances full understanding and cooperation between the two are basic essentials of any sound formula for winning the war and the peace.

Why, then, has the Senate Foreign Relations Committee been so dilatory in reporting out the Wiley resolution calling for a Foreign Relations Advisory Council to act as a liaison between the Executive and legislative officials who share the duty of planning for a lasting peace? The President is unquestionably right in laying great store upon a meeting between himself, Mr. Churchill, and Marshal Stalin. But the only sound basis on which international cooperation in the post-war world can be laid is cooperation within our own Government in working out the objectives for which the United States will be prepared to stand. Negligible progress in that direction has been made, even though the White House and Capitol are but 2 miles apart.

Ten months before Pearl Harbor Senator WILEY introduced another resolution asking the Secretary of State to report in executive session of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on the threat of war in the Far East and our preparations to meet it. At that time the State Department knew that war in the Pacific was rapidly approaching. But the resolution was pigeonholed. The committee did not get the information sought. No adequate preparations to meet an attack were made. The United States was humiliated at Pearl Harbor and a great sacrifice of human life will be necessary to regain what we have lost in the Far East. No one can say with assurance how the situation would have been changed if the information in the hands of the State Department had been conveyed to key Members of Congress. This much, however, is certain: the withholding of such information makes it impossible for the representatives of the people to act intelligently in the face of a global crisis. The Senate cannot act too quickly to bridge this dangerous gap between executive and legislative action while the problems of the forthcoming peace are still in the discussion stage.

EXTENSION OF RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 111) to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I rise to invite attention to a most distressing situation which may have an important influence in slowing up the actual winning of the war.

We have before us the question of extending the reciprocal trade-agreement authority for another period of time. The academic bureaucrats who label themselves as experts, but who are not experts, have raised the false and deceitful hue and cry that the reenactment of these destructive and highly dangerous alleged reciprocal trade treaties is necessary and required as a war emergency, and as a measure to develop unity among ourselves and our allies.

This is a falsehood. The mute evidence of the destructiveness to American farmers and workers is a matter of record which is backed up by a preponderance of sworn testimony.

The American people, particularly our workers who toil in our factories and mines and our farmers who sweat and work long hours on the farms, have been grossly deceived by these alleged experts who have taken upon themselves the rights and prerogatives of the elected Members of Congress. These governmental bureaucrats are determined to make treaties. They have grand ideas of setting up a world to their own liking. They do not seem to care what it costs the workers and farmers of America. Over the years they have set up a secret super-government, within the Government, which has successfully pulled the wool over the eyes of the people, and these bureaucrats now feel that they control all political parties. They have convinced themselves that they can do as they please, because they think they can control or influence the judiciary, the administrative, and the legislative departments of Government.

Thus far, the people have endured this infamy with bovine complacency. The people have been deliberately confused by these wastrels of the people's money who have wormed their way into high places of nonelective Government policy-making positions. These dangerous bureaucrats have almost succeeded in setting class against class. They have deliberately defamed and belittled the legal profession, because it is largely represented in the legislative body, and constitutes the personnel of the courts. They have loaded the various divisions of the Federal Government with their sixth columnists, represented by young, callow college graduate fledglings, most of whom never worked a day with their hands, and who do not know what it means to earn an honest dollar by the sweat of their brows. I call upon every farmer to look over and study his local, State, and Federal tax bills, and see how many tax dollars he has had to pay for being deceived by these sixth columnist internationalists into thinking he is being benefited.

I call on the men and women who toil and labor in the mines, in the factories, in American industry, and on the American farms, to become curious and ask questions. We know that it is impossible to get something for nothing. We know that we must expend an honest effort to receive an honest reward. What has happened is that these bureaucrats have taken away from the people hard-earned wages by means of hidden, indirect, punitive, and direct taxes to a greater extent than they have given back to them alleged benefits from these treaties. They have made it appear that honest farmers are opposed to honest workers and toilers. They have skillfully organized a sentiment among our workers and farmers that because an American business or an American industry, under our American Constitution, expands and develops, and becomes big, it is something evil, which the workers and farmers should abhor and oppose in every manner.

They want to control our banks and financial institutions, and make office boys and girls out of the Members of the Nation's Congress. In a deceptive manner, they have developed a sentiment that politics is something unclean, untouchable, and horrible. Webster's Dictionary defines the word "politics" as the science of civil government. They are opposed to the practical application of the science of civil government by the people of this Republic. They are opposed to the orderly processes of civil government. That is why the Federal bureaucrats defame the word "politics." That is why Federal bureaucrats, who are appointed to their jobs, belittle the orderly operation of the system of checks and balances developed by the various American political parties since the creation of the Republic. That is why Federal bureaucrats want to take over the functions of the Congress and rule the Nation by directives, decrees, regulations, and dictatorial practices. That is why they flout and ignore the Congress. Much of the slander and most of the slurs which have been directed against the Nation's Congress have been promoted in a subversive manner by Federal bureaucrats.

They have bungled the food production system in America. Their false ideologies ordered the little pigs to be slaughtered, and our wheat and cotton to be plowed under, and they have driven farm workers to the crowded cities to compete with factory workers for their daily bread. They have set up and put into operation alleged reciprocal trade treaties which have totally bankrupted and destroyed many vegetable growers who are now urgently needed to provide food for the present war emergency. These Federal bureaucrats have by directives, decrees, regulations, and dictatorial practices curtailed the planting of fields for the production of foodstuff, thereby driving men and women out of the food-production industry, while they have permitted the alleged reciprocal trade treaties to build up vast vegetable growing organizations in Cuba and other foreign countries whose production comes into this country under conditions utterly destructive to our American vegetable grower. The shame of it all is that this vegetable-producing industry in Cuba was made possible by the infamous operation of the Cuban trade agreement which reduced the tariff on tomatoes and other vegetables to less than one-half the difference of the cost of production, and permitted favored American financial speculators to invest their funds in Cuban vegetable growing.

These destructive, alleged reciprocal trade treaties are just one outstanding evidence of what these bureaucrats are doing. They have become convinced that they are so powerful they can push the Nation's Congress around at will. They lied to the people and the Congress when they said they had to have the blank checks on the National Treasury for emergency purposes. They are lying now when they say they need these alleged reciprocal trade treaties for good neighbor purposes and to keep faith with our allies during this war.

This program of the reciprocal trade agreement authority is in complete disrepute with a great majority of the people of the United States. The farmers are practically in unity against its extension. If there is anything in this war emergency ghost, then we should not extend this authority, as the farmer with his program of contributing to the war effort by raising more food will be much perturbed by such action. If it is important that we have increased food production, then it should also be important that we contribute to the upbuilding of morale for those who raise the food. The farmer who produces sugar in the form of cane, corn, and sugar beets has been insulted by the reciprocal trade-agreement program. The result has been a shortage of sugar with the attendant rationing program, while sugar beet factories, cane fields of the South, beet fields in the West lie idle. There is no excuse for this sugar shortage except for crazy bureaucratic bungling. The same criticism may be directed against the treaty program as it relates itself to the flax grower and the wheat grower.

In order to keep our workers employed it is necessary that the farmers have purchasing power with which to buy the products of industry. Shall we reduce the buying power of the American farmer by reciprocal trade treaties which permit foreign, peon, squalid labor to compete with our American farmer on a tariff basis less than half the difference in cost of production?

The post-war program should include rural electrification of the American farms so that power will be available for irrigation of the sub-marginal lands of the Middle West and the burdens for the women folks made lighter in the homes.

These reciprocal trade agreements not only injure the American farmer, but they have been a serious detriment to American industry. One of the industries which has suffered much at the hands of the reciprocal trade agreement bureaucrat is the wool growing and the wool cloth manufacturing industry.

Wool growing and the manufacture of wool clothing is necessary in the national defense as well as in civil life. One lesson the present war is teaching us is that we cannot depend on our allies from overseas for our supplies of wool or wool clothing, but must preserve our own wool growing and wool manufacturers at all costs. This is imperative.

Mr. President, how has the manipulation of the trade agreements authority affected the import sources of domestic supply?

Duties have been reduced, not only on lower grades of wool coming from the Argentine, but duties on wool cloth have also been greatly and dangerously reduced in our agreement with Great Britain. That means also that duties on wool cloth were reduced to Italy and Japan, with whom we have no agreements, through operation of the most-favored-nation clause. In Great Britain, labor costs are approximately one-third of ours in America; in Italy they are one-fifth, and in Japan, less than one-tenth.

Great Britain has increased her exports of wool cloth to the United States in spite of the war. When peace comes, her exports to us will be a serious threat to our wool industry and our national employment. Such imports will force our wool growers to sell their wool in the world market at the world price which will eventually kill the growing of wool in America.

These bureaucrats are trying to force upon the American farmer a program which he utterly despises, and at the same time are asking him to contribute to the war effort by raising more food. While the damage is being done by unknown agents of the Government, yet the Congress of the United States is responsible for this misuse of the treaty-making power by delegating it in the manner provided by the statute which it is sought to extend in the pending joint resolution. We are preaching the "four freedoms" and saying to the world that every country should choose its form of Government and have the kind of laws it desires, and at the same time we are trying to force upon our own people something they condemn.

I do not care how good the administration may say the trade-agreement program is, the fact remains that the farmer and nearly all businessmen are utterly disgusted with it. Are we going, in the name of the war emergency, to force upon the farmer something he despises? Are we going to give the voters of America a demonstration of democratic government by jamming down their throats something they do not want? Are we going to depart from the principles of free government by disregarding the will of the people in order to satisfy a small group of bureaucrats, who have made trade agreements during the last 10 years without any regard to the wishes of the people?

Do these starry-eyed, inexperienced, self-styled experts intend to destroy our American industries in order to accomplish their economically unsound ideologies? I warn the Senate to look carefully into this horrible, behind-the-scenes, international activity, being carried on without permission of the people's elected representatives.

Who wants these trade agreements for use now? Not even the State Department. They desire to have this authority so that when we reach the time of the peace negotiations they will have this power for post-war planning. Are you in accord with the post-war planning program of having America become Santa Claus for the world so that bureaucrats may make the post-war treaties as they desire? Who knows now what contingencies will confront us when the war is won? Do you want to delegate to an unknown bureaucrat unlimited authority to make unlimited contracts after this war is over with nations that do not now exist?

If we extend this authority, and it is in existence when this war is over, I venture to say that we will have the greatest list of secret treaties that was ever known in world history.

Does Congress desire to delegate unlimited authority to crackpot bureaucrats to make treaties after the war? The war could end within 2 years, and then treaties will be made without our consent. Is it the intention of the United Nations to ask us to enter into some kind of agreement that Congress would not approve when this war is over? What other interest could they have in this proposed legislation? If we do not pass this extension of trade-agreement authority, the American Nation has the power to contract and treat with nations as fully as it would have with this extension. The only difference is, that if we do not pass it, the treaty-making power will be where the founding fathers placed it—with the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Why should the United Nations desire us to change our constitutional method of making treaties now? Do they feel that at the peace table they could get some advantage which they would not have without it? Do they have the effrontery to say that they feel that the President would make concessions and give away American resources what the Congress would not dare to do because it is responsible to the American people?

Are we now, in the passage of this joint resolution, trying to thwart the will of the people? Congress has been criticized for delegating its authority to unknown bureaucrats and we received a directive last November to recapture some of that delegated authority. Are we going to respond by spitting in the face of the voters?

Without arguing about the great opposition which exists in the minds of private business in general against the extension of this authority, I will ask you if you intend to insult the most vital industry in the present war effort, the farmer, by extending this authority, without drastic amendment? Will you dispute the fact that the farmers and stockmen are practically 100 percent opposed to this program? If you do, examine all the hearings which have been had before the Committee on Reciprocity Information since 1934, and you will see that practically every farm and stockman's organization in America has opposed every one of them. Members of Congress in great numbers have opposed many of these treaties.

When the Argentine trade agreement was proposed in 1939, many Members of this body and the House also appeared to protest against it. The bureaucrats who conduct the secret negotiations which terminate in these agreements knew that this power was hanging in the balance.

They rejected the Argentine agreement early in 1940. This was done so that the trade-agreement program would be saved for them to cater to foreign interests. They intended to make this Argentine trade agreement, but they knew if they made it in 1939, that would have been the last one they would ever have made. They rejected it early in 1940, and then when the resolution of extension was presented in February of 1940, they went before the Ways and Means Committee of the House and deliberately misstated their intentions as to the Argentine agreement. At the very time that Secretary Cordell Hull denied that there was any intention to renegotiate a trade agreement with Argentina, spokesmen of Argentina were asserting that such was the present intention. Attention of representatives of the State Department were called to the statements, but this simply brought further denials. However, the prophecy of Argentine statesmen came true, and just as soon as the resolution of extension was passed in 1940, the Argentine agreement was negotiated. This is outstanding evidence of bureaucratic chicanery.

At this point I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the testimony of some of our own colleagues. I shall read now from page 2433 of hearings before the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, volume III. I quote first from the statement of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON]:

Two years ago the power to make reciprocal trade agreements was extended by Congress for an additional period of 3 years.

On the first vote the Senate denied the extension. However, a quick recess was called and enough Senators induced to change their position to grant the extension by the slimmest kind of a margin.

I voted against the extension because the original policy to import only goods which we did not have but needed had been abandoned, and agriculture, in which my State is heavily interested, was being made to bear most of the burden of the program. If the question of the extension of the Reciprocal Trade Act were before the United States Senate today, it would be defeated unless safeguards for the protection of American agriculture were incorporated or the power to ratify trade agreements was restored to the United States Senate in accordance with the provisions of the Constitution.

I quote now from the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], page 2434:

Now, it seems to me that it must follow inevitably and without argument from that principle that we cannot lay a basis of trade which will develop mutual benefits for both parties to the trade unless we are exchanging what we have for what we have not.

Can it be said that agriculture is one of those industries which is benefited from an excess of protectionism? I do not think that can be contended for a moment. Excess protectionism is imposed upon the country by interests whose efforts to obtain special privileges in their disregard for the general economic well-being threaten the every foundation of our democracy.

Now, gentlemen of the committee, I contend that it is self-evident that agriculture is not one of the special interests which threaten the basis of our democracy. Agriculture has been suffering. Agriculture is not one of the industries that has exploited the people. Agriculture is the industry which has been exploited, and it seems to me that there can be no question whatsoever that all the power and influence of this Government in Congress and in the executive departments, in the State Department, in the Tariff Commission, and in this committee, should be exercised to uphold and to defend agriculture and not to throw the markets of America open to excess surpluses of agricultural products from other countries.

Then the distinguished senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] testified as follows, as appears on page 2434:

I voted for the trade-agreements law when it was passed, but I have not been happy ever since about that vote. When the date of expiration comes along I hope we will not have cause to repent even more strongly than some of us have already repented at times in the past.

Now, Mr. Chairman, without expiating and extending on these details, I think I voice the expression of a great majority of both Houses of Congress. Oh, but they say Congress hasn't got anything to do with this now. They have put in a bureau to take charge of that. I have high respect for Secretary Hull. I served with him in the House 10 years, and 2 years in the Senate. He has made a great Secretary of State, but at the same time we do not propose to have these trade agreements used as a club to hammer agriculture into insensibility when it is just beginning now to come to life a little bit.

Last year we spent $700,000,000 out of the Treasury to try to do something for agriculture to give it better prices. Now it is proposed to come along and reduce the rates on agriculture so they can bring more products from abroad into the United States, more cattle, more flax, more wool, more other products that are competitive with the products of the American farmer.

Now, let me refer to the testimony of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH]. Reading from page 2434 again we find the Senator from New Mexico testifying as follows:

Throughout all my support of the trade-agreement theory, I have always argued and contended that agricultural products—that is, competitive products—should not be included. I have said that there would be no occasion for anyone to fear that any trade agreement would be entered into which would bring agricultural products into our own country in competition with our own farmers, cattle raisers, sheepmen, and all engaged in agriculture. I believe that. I said that in some campaigns. I defended some of the things which have already been done in trade agreements and I want to say that I still believe in the trade-agreement policy. I think it is a policy which must be maintained.

Nevertheless, I am confronted with this situation, that if trade agreements are entered into which bring into the country agricultural products in competition with the products of our own country, then my whole philosophy is destroyed. The very thing that I have preached and argued is taking place. The thing which I said would not happen is taking place.

I do not want to reverse my position. I do not want to have to go back to my own State and tell the cattlemen and sheepmen that I have been mistaken all these years, and that we are now bringing into this country products to compete with them, the thing I said would not happen.

The hearings also contain a statement made by the Honorable John J. Dempsey, then a Representative in Congress, and now Governor of the State of New Mexico.

Mr. President, we are promised now that this authority will not be used during the present emergency, and that it is needed only to meet the post-war necessities. Is the promise of the bureaucrat any more to be believed now than in 1940? If it is said that it is, on what premise is the assertion based? Can we predicate that assertion also on the present war emergency? The excuse serves the bureaucrat for every purpose he desires to promote. Do you believe, Mr. President, that those who deceived us once would be any less inclined to deceive us now during war?

If there is no intention to negotiate treaties during the present emergency, then why do we need the authority at all? When the war is over, the people will want their chosen representatives to have something to say about the terms of world peace, and the extent to which the resources of the American Nation are to be distributed to the world free of charge. Why should this be prevented by present post-war arrangements? The American people want their chosen representatives to determine whether to furnish a quart of milk to Hottentots who never drank milk, or give away our agricultural resources to foreign nations who can use their spare time to build armaments while we feed them free of charge.

The American people want their chosen representatives to make the treaties which shall determine how long their boys will remain abroad as a United Nations police force for the rest of the world, at our expense, through the payment of exorbitant taxes. The American voters do not want us to delegate authority now or in the future that will permit service-exempted draft-dodging bureaucrats to determine the policies of this Nation which may cause us to guarantee the "four freedoms" to peoples who may not want them, any more than we choose their form of government. We do not want any other country to guarantee us our form of government. Why should we ask any other country to give up its form of government and take ours? Are we to delegate authority now for smart-alecky bureaucrats to contract to send our boys in the armed forces on such a mission? Or shall we place it in the power of crackpot bureaucrats to contract as a part of a trade agreement, to keep our boys in the Eastern Hemisphere to enforce such trade agreements, in order to guarantee the "four freedoms"?

Three years ago, in 1939, one of the distinguished Members of the Senate, in appearing against the Argentine trade agreement, made the following statement which is to be found at pages 27–28 of the stenographic record of that hearing before the Committee on Reciprocity Information and Independent Interdepartmental Agency:

I voted for the trade-agreement law when it was passed, but I have not been happy ever since about that vote. When the date of expiration comes along, I hope we will not have cause to repent even more strongly than some of us have already repented at times in the past.

The extension to which the Senator referred was the one just ahead, in 1940. Statements of similar import were made by several other Senators.

The remainder of the story is that these lying, irresponsible, deceiving, characterless bureaucrats listened to these distinguished Senators in December 1939, and then late in 1940, after the trade-agreement authority was extended in April 1940, made the exact agreement with Argentine, which they had rejected at these Senators' request in 1939. Do we want to delegate another 2 years of unlimited power to the same agency?

In view of what I have already said, I say to the Senator now that the past administration of the reciprocal trade agreement authority has not been entirely honest. The tactics used upon former occasions to secure its extension have not been frank. This time the war emergency is used as an excuse, not as a reason; it constitutes no reason. There is not one Member of this body who is willing now to permit the treaty of peace which will follow this war to be made by unknown, crackpot, irresponsible, deceiving bureaucrats. The Ways and Means Committee of the House asked to have the names of the persons who negotiate trade agreements made known to it, but the executive department refused on the ground it would submit them to political pressure. It would have submitted them to congressional annihilation.

If we authorize these alleged reciprocal trade treaties, which definitely tear down the high American standard of living, which will weaken and soften our Nation, we will automatically pave the way for World War No. 3.

There are but few Members of this body who are now willing to delegate to these unknown bureaucrats the power to ship a quart of milk a day to every Hottentot in the world as a part of the postwar world plan. If that is not the use intended to be made of this authority, tell us what it is. It is admitted now that it would be bad policy under existing world conditions to negotiate trade agreements. Then why extend this authority? If we grant a bureaucrat any power he will use it. It is like a boy playing with a firearm; give him a gun and he will play with it under all conditions. The Mexican trade agreement was promulgated in January of 1942, after Pearl Harbor. It reduced tariff rates on tomatoes to 1½ cents per pound, when the statistics furnished by the United States Tariff Commission show that it costs the Mexican grower 3 cents less to produce and place on the Chicago and New York markets, than it costs the American farmer to produce and place fresh tomatoes on the same Chicago and New York market. Is this good for the morale of American vegetable growers? When that is true, it is asinine to compel the American farmer to compete with cheap, peon, squalid, low-standard-of-living labor in his own market, even if the foreign producers do not market a considerable amount. It is a dirty disadvantage that should not be forced upon the American farmer.

If these crack pot bureaucrats would do such a thing in the present emergency, that is, consummate the Mexican agreement 1 month after Pearl Harbor, what guarantee have we that they will not negotiate one with Germany if the opportunity presents itself? If they are willing to force the American farmer to compete with low-standard-of-living peons in Mexico, in order to get cheap vegetables at the expense of the American farmer, who will say that after the war they will not let in cheap clothes from Germany made under squalid labor conditions there, or permit the Japanese rice farmer living on 10 cents a day to annihilate the American rice farmer?

The idea of free trade economy applied through new trade agreement ideology by crackpot, irresponsible bureaucrats has resulted in just as ridiculous things as that during all the last 10 years. The bureaucrats are now planning a postwar Utopia; freedom of access to natural resources, a quart of milk a day, chicken a day, go where you please, without regard to immigration laws, and what have you. Does the Senate want to put into their hands the power to level the tariff protection which has compensated American labor, American farmers' and American businessmen for the difference in cost of production which has resulted from our decent American standard of living? Or does the Senate prefer the new ideology of leveling the standard of living of the world so that all countries can have free access to what we have developed while they fiddled or prepared for war?

These crackpot, social-minded charity workers are now promoting their crackpot ideology through the International Food Conference. Do we know what business is being transacted there, or what recommendations will be made? This secret conference bears many of the attributes of the secret negotiations of trade agreements. Is a secret program now being formulated to be put into practice by unknown crackpot ideologists who are in or hover near this International Food Conference? Do we want to continue a secret treaty organization to give effect to the crackpot ideas that may come out of this conference?

Mr. President, in my judgment, it is time to end these secret international treaties which have always created jealousies among nations.

Treaties should be made in the manner provided by the Constitution, and then we would not have secret triple alliances which developed into the Axis Powers, or its counterpart the Triple Entente, equally as dangerous and disturbing to world peace. We as a nation have always condemned secret national treaties, yet now we are asked through this resolution to turn over to crackpot demogogic bureaucrats the power to involve us in such secret agreements. And this at the most dangerous and critical time in world history, and when it is highly desirable that international treaties be open, honest, and aboveboard.

Our farmers and workers are getting mad. They will not stand for such legislative or administrative chicanery. The handwriting is on the wall. Are we the representatives of the people, or have we turned over the people's birthright to the bureaucrats, crackpots, incompetent administrative draft dodgers, alleged foreign trade experts, and starry-eyed callow dilletantes?

The Senate's vote on these alleged reciprocal-trade treaties will tell the story to those outraged Americans.

The issue before the United States Senate now is well defined. If it is the desire of the Senate to keep faith with the American farmer and laborer, the resolution should be amended so as to provide for Congressional approval of trade agreements before they become effective. If it is not so amended, it should be defeated, as its past history has shown it to be a dangerous delegation of congressional prerogative. The greatest criticism now directed against Congress is that there has been improper delegation of its authority under the Constitution. I ask my colleagues to support such an amendment as a safeguard to the interests of our constituents.

Mr. President, I see sitting before me today some Senators who are engaged in business, some of whom have been at the head of large, fine business institutions. I wish to call to their attention a letter written to every Senator by Walter W. Cenerazzo, president and business agent of the Waltham Watchworkers Union No. 72, of Waltham, Mass. In my judgment, every farmer in the entire Northwest will agree to what that gentleman, representing the workers in that large manufacturing concern, says.

The letter was sent to every Member of the Senate on the 22d day of May 1943. It reads as follows:

WALTHAM WATCH WORKERS UNION NO. 72,
Waltham, Mass., May 22, 1943.

DEAR SENATOR: This brief is being sent to you for your information. It was presented to the Senate Finance Committee but was omitted from the unrevised editions of the printed committee hearings because of objections of officials of the Department of Commerce under Executive Order 9103 issued by the War Department to the figures on imports for the years 1941 and 1942 which were contained in the table on page 8 of this brief. These figures have been censored from the original copy submitted and will not appear in the brief as printed in the revised edition of the Senate Finance Committee hearings.

As it is doubtful whether or not the revised committee hearings will be printed in time for debate, our organization is taking this opportunity of presenting the facts to you as incorporated in the brief.

I ask the Senate to note particularly this statement:

We deem it highly unusual that a Government agency should have the right to censor figures which are in our possession and which are used other places in this brief, and we deem it important that you should know of this action. Whether or not this Department has the right to do this we do not know, but we leave it to your judgment whether or not this type of censorship is to be continued. The officials of the Commerce Department insist that under Executive Order 9103 the War Department has issued an order through the Director of the Budget that detail export and import figures for the last quarter of 1941 and for the year 1942 are confidential and that these figures may not be published in a Government publication in table form.

I ask the Senate, Why?

The letter concludes, as follows:

We trust you will give this brief your utmost consideration so that you will understand the problem that is facing the 2,300 men and women who are members of our organization.

Respectfully,

WALTER W. CENERAZZO,
President and Business Agent.

Mr. President, because of the very great importance of the question which is before the Senate, I shall read a portion of the brief:

This brief is presented on behalf of 2,300 American workmen who are now working 100 percent on the production of vital time mechanisms for the defense of the United States and our allies. In behalf of 2,300 American workers who have had 293 of their midst, or some 12 percent of our number, left to serve in the armed forces of our country—293 men and women who are serving our country seeking to destroy Hitler and the other Axis enemies of the American people. Two thousand three hundred men and women, members of Watch Workers Union, No. 72, of the International Jewelry Workers Union, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, respectfully protest to the elected representatives of the United States, members of the Senate Finance Committee, the continuation of reciprocal trade agreements which make it possible for the American public to furnish the finance, in part at least, for Hitler to make war on our people.

The Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, page A2232, reveals that the Director of Economic Warfare, Hon. Milo Perkins, based on what he stated were reliable reports, states "that the brass and steel used in Swiss watches are derived from current imports from Germany" (into Switzerland).

The importation of Swiss watches and watch movements into American markets is made possible only by the Axis permitting Swiss watches and watch movements to pass through its lines, which, since the inception of the present World War, have surrounded Switzerland.

This most unusual condition and sequence of events is known to and made possible through the acquiescence of State Department officials to these startling facts, who, in their mad desire to promote foreign trade, even though such particular foreign trade deprives many thousands of American workers of their job opportunities, entered into an alleged reciprocal-trade treaty with Switzerland.

Fifty million dollars for Hitler.

It is our sincere belief, based on what we consider reliable reports, that certain influential American distributors of Swiss watches and watch movements have transferred to Hitler, since January 1940 some fifty millions of American dollars to help Hitler finance his war against the United States and our allies. This money was sent to pay for products of Swiss watches which could be exported from Switzerland and only through Hitler's military lines.

This outrageous condition, so far as we know, is only justified by our Government officials because of our entry into an alleged reciprocal trade treaty with Switzerland.

No jobs available for our returning heroes.

Our workers, Americans all, are dependent for our livelihood on the employment opportunities which exist through the operation of those few American plants engaged in the manufacture of watches.

Two hundred and ninety-three men, formerly employed in only one of the three existing American watch-manufacturing plants (a comparable number have also left from the other two watch-making plants) now in the armed forces of their country, serving in Africa, in the South Pacific, in Iceland, and elsewhere, were assured when they answered their country's call, that their jobs awaited them on their return after having contributed, if they lived, to our winning of the war.

When, and after, they return, unless the pending reciprocal trade treaty legislation is substantially and properly amended, these soldiers, sailors, and marines—heroes all—will find their former jobs have been transferred to watchworkers in Switzerland.

LEGISLATIVE PROTECTION ASKED FOR

Our workers, realizing fully that not only their wage and working conditions (the most advanced in the world so far as exist in the manufacturing of watches) but also their opportunity for a livelihood is at stake, appeal to the Members of the United States Senate for amendments to the pending legislation which will protect their job opportunities.

We ask that the pending reciprocal trade-treaty legislation be amended as follows:

(a) That no tariff rate reductions be authorized or continued in effect which permits the entry into American markets of competitive products of foreign workers at less than American costs of production;

(b) that in view of the chaotic and unsettled world conditions, which we believe will exist at the cessation of hostilities, all trade treaties should be terminated at least 6 months following the cessation of hostilities;

(c) to eliminate the trend toward totalitarianism in our own country that the elected representative of the people, namely, those constituting the United States Senate and the United States House of Representatives, attach to the pending reciprocal trade-treaty legislation language which will permit of the elected representatives of the American people resuming the responsibilities which the Constitution invests in them;

(d) that all trade treaties or the extension of any existing trade treaty be submitted to and voted upon by the Congress of the United States within 90 days following its completion and such trade treaty shall not become effective unless approved by the Congress of the United States.

Congress should not be rubber stamps for bureaucrats.

The American workers are not at all impressed with the false alarms sent forth through the press and the radio by Washington bureaucrats who would have us believe that any change in the present law would be an affront to our allies.

We believe the elected representatives of the American people can and should assume and carry out the responsibilities they were elected to carry out, one of which responsibilities is to live up to the requirements of the Constitution of the United States.

Surely, it is not too much to ask that our means of livelihood be protected.

FORTY-TWO THOUSAND AMERICANS' JOBS TRANSFERRED TO SWITZERLAND

History repeats itself. Within 6 months after the cessation of hostilities, with all Government orders for the making of timing instruments on which we are now employed canceled, with American markets stocked up with products of watch workers of Switzerland, and with many millions of American workers and returned heroes looking for work the idle promises of the Washington bureaucrats will be of but little value.

Prior to the outbreak of the present global war there were only 3 American watch factories in operation of the 60 in operation some years ago. Most of the others had been scrapped simply because the products of these American factories could not compete in the American markets with the products of the low wage paid watch workers of Switzerland.

In wartimes our industry thrives because Uncle Sam needs our products and demands unlimited production for the use of our armed forces. Our workers are continually working in excess of regular hours at the request of the Army and Navy. During these wartimes, World War No. 1 and now World War No. 2, the importers and distributors of Swiss watches make heavy inroads into the business of the American watch companies. The United States Government says to the American watch workers: "You cannot produce for civilian use as we need your output for American defense." We agree the United States Government is correct in so doing, but, on the other hand, the Swiss watch industry is given free reign to ship into the United States an unlimited amount of watches, at total landed costs which are less than our cost of production.

The State Department officials, prior to their entry into the alleged trade treaty with Switzerland, which, in 1942, resulted in the transferring of the job opportunities of some 42,000 American watch workers to workers in Switzerland, were fully aware of the sweatshop, child labor, and other substandard labor conditions which exist among the watch workers of Switzerland.

In addition, these same State Department officials were fully aware of the existence in Switzerland, especially as it pertains to the manufacture and export of watches and watch movements of a watch trust or a watch cartel, which was controlled in turn and subsidized by the state itself.

The following is taken from a publication, Digests of Trade Data—Concessions Granted by the United States in the Trade Agreement With Switzerland, issued by the United States Tariff Commission:

"SWISS PRODUCTION AND TRADE

"Switzerland is the world's largest producer of jeweled watch movements and maintains an extensive world trade. During the past two centuries Switzerland has developed a specialized skill in the manufacture of jeweled watch movements, and for a long time this industry has catered to a world market. Although exports of machinery and of textiles from Switzerland exceed exports of watch movements, the watch industry, including the various supplying trades, employs more people than either the textile or machinery industries.

"In 1929 there were between 1,200 and 1,400 enterprises in the watch industry, employing 63,675 persons. For the season 1932–33 this number was estimated at 53,700. (These figures include those engaged in the manufacture of watch parts in small household enterprises and probably employees engaged in the production of watch cases, watch jewels, etc.). It was estimated that in 1929 the number of persons in Switzerland dependent upon the watch industry for their support was 400,000, or one-tenth of Switzerland's total population. Of the 1,200 to 1,400 enterprises in the watch industry in 1929, it was estimated that some 500 were assembly firms, 70 were manufacturing firms producing complete watches, while some 600 to 800 small enterprises occupied themselves with the production of individual parts.

"Organization of the Swiss watch industry: The Swiss watch industry is very complex, consisting of manufacturers of complete movements, manufacturers of individual parts, assemblers of complete movements from parts made by other manufacturers, manufacturers of watch cases, etc. Before the war these various manufacturers were organized along functional and regional lines, most of these organizations being grouped loosely under the semiofficial Swiss Watch Chamber of Commerce. During the years immediately following the war currency depreciated in many other countries and the erection of tariff bariers against imports of finished movements in many of Switzerland's best export markets stimulated the migration of the Swiss industry to foreign countries. These barriers were raised chiefly against the completed movements, while efforts were made to stimulate the importation of parts for assembly. At the same time Swiss watch manufacturers were induced to come to these various countries to establish local watch industries.

"These developments proceeded at a rate such as to arouse considerable fear in the minds of many Swiss industrialists as to the future of the Swiss watch industry, and led to greater organization of the Swiss industry to prevent the expansion of this movement and to control various practices which were lowering the prestige of the Swiss watch abroad. As a result, most of the manufacturers in the various lines of the Swiss watch and clock industry now are members of trade associations which are grouped together under three major industrial organizations, and these three groups in turn are united for purposes of common policy by a series of working agreements or conventions. The three organizations comprise the makers of complete watches (both manufacturers and assemblers), the producers of incomplete movements, and the manufacturers of parts and accessories, respectively. Through the organizations, with assistance from interested banks, some measure of success was achieved in controlling the exportation of unfinished movements and parts for assembly abroad and in raising the average quality of the Swiss watches exported. However, their efforts were to a large degree frustrated by the noncooperation of a number of independent firms.

"During 1931 there was considerable agitation in Switzerland for governmental intervention in support of the organized Swiss industry in its efforts to control the independents who persisted in practices which tended to threaten the industry. Although it was not until 1934 that the Government actually accorded the degree of intervention desired, it lent its support and credit in 1931 to the organization of the Société de l'Horlogerie Suisse, S. A., generally known as the superholding company. The object of this company was to acquire majority control of the old organization of the producers of incomplete movements and to buy up control of various independent plants making either essential parts or incomplete movements which in 1931 were not members of the organized Swiss watch industry. This company was capitalized at 50,000,000 francs. Of this amount 20,000,000 were subscribed by the banks in the watchmaking communities and 20,000,000 by the industrialists and the various cooperating organizations. Six millions of francs were subscribed by the Government by the purchase of 6,000 shares in the new organization, while 7,500,000 were lent the company by the Government free of interest, redeemable by annual installments after 1934. This superholding company achieved a greater measure of control over the complex Swiss watch industry than had been attained previously, but it was still unable to control a small number of factories. On March 12, 1934, the Government finally took direct and positive action, issuing a decree (a) prohibiting the opening of new enterprises in the watchmaking industry, or enlargement, transformation, or transfer of existing enterprises without the authorization of the department of public economy, and (b) forbidding the exportation of watch parts without an export permit issued by the Swiss Watch Chamber. In 1933, export duties had been enacted to discourage the exportation of watchmaking machinery.

"In 1934 there was organized an association of watch producers engaged in exporting to the United States. There is little information regarding the organization and functions of this association. Its objects are reported to be the elimination of some of the more undesirable features of competition among Swiss concerns for United States business.

"Further measures of control in Switzerland over the exportation of watches and watch movements are provided in the 'Declaration' of the Government of Switzerland which forms a part of the United States-Switzerland trade agreement. These control measures are being taken 'with a view to cooperating with the Government of the United States of America in its efforts to suppress the smuggling of watches and watch movements.'

"Swiss exports: Switzerland does not publish statistics regarding production of watches and watch movements. However, inasmuch as about 95 percent of Swiss production is exported, Swiss exports of these products give a very good indication of production. It will be noted that total production of cased watches and finished movements ranged from 16,000,000 to 20,000,000 movements in the period 1925–30, but declined to approximately 8,000,000 in 1932 and recovered to more than 12,000,000 in 1934."

Since 1934, according to reliable sources, there have been imported to the United States the following watches and watch movements, and as many as 42,000 Americans' jobs transferred to Switzerland in one year alone.

Year	Number of watches and watch movements imported	American watch workers' man-hours transferred to workers in foreign countries, principally Switzerland	Number of workers' years employment transferred to workers in foreign countries	Foreign declared value of watches imported

[1] The figures for the years 1941 and 1942 were submitted in the original brief to the Senate Finance Committee, but due to the appearance of this table the printing of this entire brief was delayed by objection of officials of the Department of Commerce under Executive Order 9103 issued by the War Department until such time as the figures were deleted from the table, therefore causing this brief not to appear in the unrevised editions of the Senate Finance Committee hearings on this subject. We have been told that this censored edition of the brief will appear in the revised edition of the printed Senate Finance Committee hearings.

The American watch worker produces 1 watch in approximately 12 hours. From the years 1938 to 1942, inclusive, the combined output of the 3 American watch factories was an average of 1,405,000 watches per year, and they had an average of 6,800 employees per year. Personally, I do not know, but I doubt if our total added exports, secured through our entry into the trade treaty with Switzerland, will equal this demonstrated loss of American man-hours of employment in this 1 industry alone.

HITLER-SWISS WATCHES ALONE AVAILABLE

Just consider this outstanding fact: In 1942 there were imported into the United States 5,691,000 watches and watch movements. If American labor had produced these watches, there would have been 42,000 more persons employed for 1,600 hours per year and we would have had that many more available persons working on war materials for which the United Nations are sorely pressed.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LANGER. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I am glad the Senator is reading the brief which, I understand, comes from the Waltham, Mass., Watch Workers Union.

Mr. LANGER. That is correct.

Mr. LODGE. The agent of the union is Mr. Walter W. Cenerazzo, who is a good friend of mine. I should like to ask the Senator whether or not it is true that this business in Switzerland is conducted, and must be conducted, with at least the tacit approval of the German Government?

Mr. LANGER. It is. There can be no doubt of it.

Mr. LODGE. Consequently, the facts and figures to which the Senator alludes are undoubtedly well known in the countries of our enemies.

Mr. LANGER. That is true. The brief goes into that question. Quoting further from the brief:

Four times more watches were imported than were produced in the United States. The consumption or consumer demand for these watches is not that great. The answer is the Swiss watch importer, knowing that America's factories would be placed on war work, has built up a reserve stock here to sell to the American consumer during and after the present war.

The American jeweler who is trying to stay in business has to buy watches from whom he can, so he stocks up with foreign-made merchandise which costs him just as much as a fine American-made watch.

You can't blame him for trying to stay in business, but after the war we have the post-war problem of what to do with the increased personnel who have been trained for watch making during the war period. There will be no back log of orders; the consumer demand will have been satisfied. During the war when people have an excess purchasing power they will buy the things they need. They can't buy automobiles; they can't buy many items, but they can buy Swiss watches. Those industries are protected for the post-war period, but how about the people that I represent? How about the people who work for the other watch companies? They have done their bit for their country. Waltham employees were one of the first to have attained 100 percent participation in the pay-roll savings plan for the purchase of War bonds. 293 men out of less than 1,000 from the Waltham Watch Workers Union are in the armed forces. They are coming back, after having served their country to—what? To a job, yes, to a laid-off job.

This answers the inquiry of the Senator from Massachusetts:

GULLIBLE AMERICAN PUBLIC

In the meantime, Switzerland, surrounded by Axis, on the one side by Italy, on another side by Vichy France, on the other by Germany, is able to export into the United States, under a trade treaty with our enemy, watches and watch movements. In exchange for these watches and watch movements, Switzerland is given millions of American dollars. Hitler receives his share of these dollars. The consuming American public is thus helping finance Hitler's war against us through the purchase of these 5,691,000 watches which were imported into the United States during 1942. Many of these watches are cased in the United States. They are sold under trade names, nationally advertised names. The American public buys watches called "Miss America," "American Maid," "Miss Liberty," and "Croix de Guerre of American Achievement"—Swiss watches being palmed off as American made.

These watches are assembled of products of Swiss workers. Where does Switzerland get the raw materials for these watches during wartime? How are they so safely escorted through Axis territory to reach America, we would like to know? This question of Swiss competition has been gone into very thoroughly in the past by far more able men than I, men who made a study of this because their financial interests were at stake.

This committee recommended legislation to prevent the smuggling of watches and watch movements, mainly from Switzerland. The Congress enacted this legislation into law. This is known as the Walsh-McCormack law.

At the hearings in 1934 briefs were filed, attorneys were hired to present to the Committee for Reciprocity Information facts which were vital to our industry. These facts were ignored and treaties negotiated and signed, notwithstanding the warning which was given at that time by Mr. T. Albert Potter, president of the Elgin National Watch Co. I quote Mr. Potter from testimony given by him on December 17, 1934:

"Remember, these fine craftsmen in Europe are not only makers of watches but many of them, even today as adjuncts to watch factories, are actively engaged in the making of parts for foreign munitions factories."

After 4 years of reciprocal trade treaties, and, assumedly after careful consideration, the executive council of the American Federation of Labor adopted the following on reciprocal trade treaties.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be incorporated at this point in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the provisions of reciprocal-trade treaties negotiated by the State Department with foreign nations affect very vitally both the economic conditions of American workers and unemployment and there are many organizations, representing thousands of workers, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, which are seriously affected by these trade treaties and for that reason are deeply interested in their provisions, and

Whereas the economic and industrial interests of these workers demand that the American Federation of Labor exercise all efforts possible to prevent the importation of goods from foreign countries, under the provisions of reciprocal-trade treaties, where lower wages, longer hours, and lower standards prevail than exist in competing industries within the United States: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the executive council of the American Federation of Labor expresses its opposition to reciprocal-trade treaties which discriminate against American workers. We are opposed to reciprocal-trade treaties' provisions which provide for importation of goods and merchandise which because of low labor costs abroad, are sold at a lower price than the same goods and merchandise produced by workers in the United States, where wages and conditions of labor are established on a higher standard than those which prevail abroad; be it further

Resolved, That a committee representing the American Federation of Labor be accorded the privilege of presenting labor's point of view relating to the provisions of reciprocal-trade agreements affecting labor before said agreements are negotiated and ratified.

Mr. LANGER. I continue reading from the brief.

You will note that the executive council expressed opposition to reciprocal trade treaties which discriminate against American workers. Under the terms of opposition cited in the resolution, unanimously adopted by the executive council of the American Federation of Labor on reciprocal trade treaties, such reciprocal trade treaties are seemingly impossible of accomplishment.

Had the appeal of the executive council of the American Federation of Labor been heeded and the jobs of American workers not transferred to workers in foreign countries through our entry into alleged reciprocal trade treaties, there is reason to believe that they would not have considered it necessary to make the following demands on the resolutions committee of the major political parties in 1940:

"PROTECTION OF WAGE AND WORKING STANDARDS

"To protect and safeguard the employment opportunities of America's wage earnings against unfair competition of the products of workers of low wage and depressed standards and conditions of employment of foreign countries, and, with which we are bound to be faced at the end of the present European and Asiatic wars, and, in order to hold secure the advanced industrial relations and employment standards secured by America's workers through legislative enactments and collective agreements against competition from products of workers in countries of lower standards, it is essential that adequate and proper legislation be had to obtain these ends. We urge the adoption of this policy and procedure."

The position of our organization is based upon this platform: That we believe in "live and let live." Any country with which we have a trade treaty should be able to ship their products into this country on equal terms. No more, no less, do we ask. If the cost of a Swiss watch landed in this country is the same as an American-made watch, our problem is solved. We know our product is superior. We know the American public will choose correctly.

This is not a political problem. This is an economic problem which will seriously face three communities after this war—Lancaster, Pa.; Elgin, Ill.; and Waltham, Mass. Hamilton today has 2,100 employees, Elgin over 5,000, Waltham 2,600. Where do they go from here? Only the Congress of the United States can determine that. Trade treaties should have either congressional approval or Senate ratification, then the interests of an industry small in size but vital in nature, such as ours, can be protected.

Labor sought restrictive immigration legislation to protect American jobs and the American way of life. American labor is not antisocial. We sought and we still insist on restrictive immigration laws to protect our jobs. However, what protection do we have when, in 1942 alone, the jobs of 42,064 American workers in this one industry alone were transferred to workers in foreign countries?

The position of the American Federation of Labor on immigration is as follows:

"IMMIGRATION

"In order to protect the welfare and the standards of living of the American workers, organized labor has favored from the beginning a restricted and controlled national immigration policy. Upheavals brought about by war conditions abroad demand the exercise of unremitting vigilance in the enforcement of these controls. We urge the adoption of a declaration in favor of the continuation of the Nation's restricted immigration policy and the progressive application of these principles as dictated by changing conditions."

Our position on the imports of competitive foreign-made products is the same.

We might as well speak for every industry in America whose products are in competition with those imported from foreign lands.

The brief continues as follows:

We see no advantage in barring the entry of the immigrant, and at the same time permitting entry of the product of the immigrant at total landed costs which are less than American costs of production.

We are here today pleading with you not for an advantage, not for profit, but for job security. Today we hear advocated security from the cradle to the grave. We ask only for the opportunity to work under a profit system. We ask only that this Congress, the chosen Representatives of the American people, keep within their hands the power to approve these trade treaties. We ask that this committee, the chosen representatives of the people, insist that no article, whether farm commodity, industrial, or what have you, when competitive with American-made products commercially available, be allowed to land in this country for one cent less than competitive American-made products produced in this country.

Is there any good reason why American lives should be endangered, why American savings be invested in War bonds and savings stamps, and at the same time we permit millions of American dollars, through the sale of Swiss watches be placed where the mad dog Hitler and his group can grasp them? Is there any good reason why products of workers in Switzerland should continue to control 50 to 80 percent of the American watch market?

We hear of post-war plans. Why should we, through trade treaties, insure the transfer of our jobs in the production of watches to workers in foreign countries?

Isn't this fair? Isn't it a fair request for American workmen to make of their Government? The answer is obvious. We appreciate the opportunity of presenting our case, a case for the existence of our job opportunities.

There are some 10,000 American workers now employed in the remaining American watch factories producing very, very essential timing instruments for the use of our armed forces. At the cessation of hostilities we assume we will be producing American-made watches, if there is a sufficient demand or market for the products of our labor.

But, with the importations of Swiss watches and watch movements increasing yearly, some 100 percent from 1939 to 1942 alone, it is probable that the market for American-made watches will no longer exist, as the low-wage paid products of the workers of Switzerland, which have been permitted to be exported to the United States through Hitler's military lines, only because much of the proceeds, in the form of American dollars, would be used by Hitler to finance Hitler's war against the United States and our allies.

Mr. President, that gives a concrete example of what has occurred to 20,000 workers in America. It is a concrete example of what the bureaucrats have done in making a trade treaty with Switzerland. It would be almost criminal to permit these bureaucrats to continue making trade agreements unless the Congress is consulted and has the power to ratify them.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LANGER. I yield.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Senator's philosophy is that a trade agreement is in truth and fact a trade treaty, and that consideration of and action upon it falls within the duties imposed by the Constitution upon the Congress.

Mr. LANGER. The statement of the Senator is exactly correct.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah obtained the floor.

Mr. GEORGE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FERGUSON in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, when one wishes to present a background of history in connection with the discussion of the subject of the tariff, he is practically obliged to discuss the history of his country, because since the adoption of the Constitution in 1787, soon after which, in 1789, the first tariff act was passed, our country has passed through a tariff evolution, and the tariff has been the theme of probably more political discussion and political battles than any other single question in our history.

I think that at this time we should refresh our minds with a bit of tariff history, and that we should be thoughtful about that history, because in the evolution of tariff techniques we have at last come to a time, the first time since the McKinley Tariff Act was passed more than 50 years ago, when the people of the United States have not at the next election repudiated the tariff act passed by the previous Congress. That, Mr. President, should give us food for thought, and should particularly give food for thought to those who want to return to the old tariff-making methods, tariff making handled by Congress as a purely legislative matter.

Mr. President, I ought to point out some exceptions in connection with tariff making to the general statement I have made. The McKinley Tariff Act was passed on October 1, 1890, and at the next election those who supported the McKinley Tariff Act were defeated, and the administration changed. The people made that change, only to be disappointed by the enactment of the Wilson-Gorman Act on August 27, 1894, a tariff act which should have followed the instructions of the people given in the previous election. The Wilson-Gorman Act was also repudiated by the people, and there was a change of administration, and another party came into power.

The Dingley Tariff Act of 1897 was not repudiated at the next election, because a war intervened, and the conditions in the country resulting from the war brought about a situation which caused the tariff to cease to be a paramount issue. But again, as soon as the Congress began reenacting tariff laws in the old way, with the enactment of the Payne-Aldrich Act of 1909, the party in power lost control of the Congress at the next opportunity the voters had to elect Members of the Congress.

The situation with respect to the Underwood Act was the same as that in connection with the Dingley Act. The Underwood Act was not repudiated by the people, to be sure, but a war intervened following the enactment of that act, so a real test was not afforded.

Then came the Fordney-McCumber Tariff Act. The sponsors of that act were both defeated at the election following the enactment of the act.

Mr. President, we must never lose sight of the fact that following the enactment of the Hawley-Smoot Act not only were its authors repudiated but the party of which they were members was repudiated in a way in which the American people had never before punished a political party in power.

As we continue examining the record with respect to tariff laws, and when we speak about the history of the tariff, we discover that in its history and development we have at last worked out a technique which has received the support of the American people, and which is today receiving their support, a technique which the American people wish to see continued, and which should be continued without amendment, so that this better method, this better technique of adjustment, may become one of our governmental habits.

Much has been said lately about the reciprocal trade treaties in respect to the peace after the war, and in regard to their effect upon the making and the control of that peace. I do not entertain an exaggerated notion about the importance of reciprocal trade agreements in the making of peace. I do not think such agreements are of paramount importance. I think there are other factors very much greater and very much more important. However, I wish to point out the fact that in international relations when there comes an era of depreciated currencies, chaos in international affairs, subsidies, dumping, and all the other elements which follow in the wake of controlled currency and totalitarian economics—the bartering system, all the types of national competition which we shall have to meet, but which we shall not be in a position to combat if the world organizes against us, except by using the same techniques as used by others, which we will not use and cannot use because we cannot stoop to that level of international trade—I say when we know from the experience after the last war what we shall have to face because of the resurgence again of peaceful trade and ambition and competition, with disorder in practically all countries as the aftermath of a great war and the aftermath of a great defeat, we shall find that the greatest thing the United States can do for the world and for itself will be to be able to put forth a restraining hand, for that which makes for stability in the world will in very fact contribute to a better and a lasting peace.

Mr. President, in regard to post-war planning and what we are doing in relation to it, I can only repeat what I have said before on the floor of the Senate, that the time to settle differences between allies is while we are at war and while we are interested in one another, and that every difference we settle between ourselves while we are in the war makes the peace that much easier. We should never get into our minds the thought that in a state of war we have one world and that the next day, when the peace comes, we have another world. It is the same world. Of course it is true, and everyone who has read the old Greek classics knows it to be true, and it has become proverbial as a part of the literature of mankind that men unite for war and destruction, but divide for peace and construction. That was wailed back in the days of Greek drama, and it has proved to be true.

When we note those things, Mr. President, it seems to me we should take every opportunity we can to make sure that when there is one element of stability it should be developed, not only for our own sake but for the sake of the world, and it should not be destroyed.

Mr. President, much has been said and will be said, and later in my address I expect to refer to it again, to the effect that by the joint resolution we are attempting to put some kind of curb upon the executive department of our Government because we assume that the President has too much power and is gaining too much additional power.

Mr. President, Congress has not given up its power in regard to reciprocal trade agreements. Congress can repeal the original act. Congress never legislated for all time. The present Congress cannot bind the next Congress. No type of amendment will in any way make it more difficult or less certain that if Congress makes up its mind and if the people make up their minds to bring this tariff technique to an end, they can bring it to an end. But in regard to the power of the President, other tariff acts have given the President very much greater power than the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act has given him. If we are frightened of our President, we should look back at history. We should remember that the reciprocal trade agreements have never frightened the people of the United States to the extent that one single case has gone to the Supreme Court. Yet the flexible tariff arrangement and need for a Tariff Commission came in the evolution and growth of the tariff, and caused misgivings on the part of the American people.

For 9 years we have had this act before us. Twice before it has been reviewed, in addition to the original action by the Congress of the United States. The American people have had an opportunity to judge of that which has been done. They have judged of it, and they have called it good. Since they have called it good, the technique should be continued.

Mr. President, as to the concept of recognizing tariff control—for that is what a tariff act is; it is a control of foreign commerce—throughout the history of the United States the fact of the control of commerce has been predominant in the reasoning of the cases about the tariff which have gone to the Supreme Court. Tariff for revenue only has never been anything but a slogan, which sometimes has been effective, but in practice and in the making of law in actuality never was effective. The tariff has its origin and its end in the control of foreign commerce, and that is the only way in which it should be interpreted. Since it is interpreted in that way and since it is a control of trade, to what fairer, better, or more desirable way can we turn than the way of negotiation and the building up of agreements with foreign nations in such a way that the agreements can be mutually helpful to the countries which enter into them, and can be controlled in such a way that neither country will be hurt by them? Incidentally, under the reciprocal trade agreements the whole world receives benefits by the liberal or the unconditional use of the most-favored-nation-clause technique.

If after 9 years, when we have had changing conditions, it develops that we have proved a technique which is advantageous to ourselves and which has brought about good feeling on the part of other nations toward us, it seems to me that it is something to which we ought to say "Amen," and ought to continue.

There is another point which arises constantly, and that is the viewpoint which considers the international trade agreements as treaties. Mr. President, I do not consider such agreements as treaties. I do not think they are treaties. Furthermore, I do not want them to be considered as treaties. I should not like to see the time in the United States when an agreement between the United States and Cuba, for example, in regard to control of trade, would become the supreme law of the land. I think we must not lose sight of the fact that while there is a provision in our Constitution in regard to the ratification of treaties, we have not insisted upon using that provision. We have not decided that that is the only way by which we can bring about the equivalent of treaty understanding with nations. We have used other techniques. For us to turn our backs upon them means that we turn our backs upon history.

It will be remembered that back in Polk's time three great international questions faced the Nation—the Oregon question, the Texas question, and the ambition or desire to annex California. President Polk used the technique of coming to the Senate and asking what Washington asked, which should be asked occasionally. He did not come to the Senate for "advice and consent" in the negotiation of an arrangement with Great Britain in regard to the Oregon Territory. He came to the Senate and asked for advice, and the question of the continuation of negotiations was discussed on the floor of the Senate; and a proper technique, out of the ordinary technique of our constitutional arrangement, was used, to the tremendous advantage of our country.

Mr. President, I do not like to see our Constitution bound in its possibilities. We would never have had peace with Germany after the last war if we had had to go through the ratification of the treaty. The Senate refused to ratify the treaty and peace came by joint resolution. If I remember correctly, the annexation of Texas came not by treaty arrangement but by joint resolution.

For more than 100 years the Supreme Court of the United States has recognized the fact that agreements, treaties, and conventions are different things. From the inception of our present constitutional government the Congress, the courts, and the Executive have recognized that there are several types of international agreements, which are not treaties in the constitutional sense. This, of course, is understood by all Senators. I do not wish to enter into an argument about it, because it would be like arguing a case in court, where neither attorney ever convinces the other, and the decision is left to a third party. These distinctions were well pointed out by Chief Justice Taney in Holmes v. Jennison (1840) (14 Pet. 540, 571):

> The words "agreement" and "compact" cannot be * * * held to mean the same thing as the word "treaty."

A treaty was defined as—

> A compact made with a view to the public welfare by the superior power, either for perpetuity or for a considerable time.

The Court further said that—

> The compacts which have temporary matters for their object are called agreements, conventions, and pactions.

Everyone knows that there is a 3-year limit upon the trade treaties, and that they are considered as agreements. The technique which we have allowed to develop follows that line.

It seems almost sure that the writers of the act of 1934 actually had before them this decision, because they put in the time limitation to meet the opinion of a great Supreme Court Justice. This decision may aptly be applied to the Trade Agreements Act, which has been enacted as an emergency measure and which requires that agreements be subject to termination not more than 3 years after they take effect.

That there are compacts not possessing the dignity of a treaty in the constitutional sense which may be authorized by Congress and negotiated and proclaimed by the President was recognized by the Supreme Court in the case of B. Altman & Co. v. United States (224 U. S. 583, 601), involving an agreement made under the authority of section 3 of the Tariff Act of 1897. And in the case of United States v. Curtis-Wright ((1936) 299 U. S. 304), which was cited by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Supreme Court made it clear that the Federal Government has as an essential part of its sovereignty "the power to make such international agreements as do not constitute treaties in the constitutional sense."

In Field v. Clerk ((1892) 143 U. S. 649, 694), the contention was made that section 3 of the Tariff Act of 1890 delegated to the President treaty-making power. The Court disposed of this point by holding that the trade agreements authorized by the act were not treaties requiring ratifications.

In that act we have the background for our reciprocal trade technique of today. It was objected to on the ground that the President was given too much power, but the Supreme Court said "No."

The contention of alleged delegation of legislative authority, which has been mentioned several times, may be summed up by citing legal authority.

It has been charged that prior to the enactment of the Trade Agreements Act there were no precedents for changing import duties by Executive action pursuant to international agreement. This position is predicted upon confusion of differences in detail with differences in principle.

The Dingley Tariff Act of 1897, section 3, recognized the appropriateness of changing tariff duties by Executive proclamation pursuant to international agreement entered into under congressional authority. The fact that this law was limited to specified articles, whereas the Trade Agreements Act is not so limited, is a matter of detail rather than of principle. Section 315 of the Tariff Act of 1922 authorized the President to select the articles upon which duties were to be changed. The fact that the initial proceedings under the flexible tariff concerned a cost investigation rather than a trade-agreement negotiation is likewise a difference only in detail and not in principle. Combining the two laws, section 3 of the Dingley Act and the flexible tariff provision, we clearly have precedents for changing duties by Executive agreement and selecting the articles upon which changes are to be made.

The contention has been presented that the case of Field against Clark is no precedent for the Trade Agreements Act. It must be remembered, however, that under the act of 1890 the President did have discretion to find that duties were imposed by foreign countries which were reciprocally unequal and unreasonable, and under the Trade Agreements Act the President is authorized to find that the duties of the United States and of foreign countries are unduly burdening the foreign trade of the United States. Here, again, the difference is one of detail and not of principle.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I should like to invite the attention of the Senator to the fact that in the very terms of the Dingley Tariff Act, passed in 1897, the Congress completely answered the argument which the Senator is now making. The Tariff Act of 1890—the so-called McKinley Act—contained section 3 to which the Senator has correctly alluded, which authorizes the President, upon the finding of a fact of discrimination against the commerce of the United States by certain countries, to reduce the tariffs upon certain specific articles to certain specific rates fixed by Congress. Seven years later, when the Dingley Act was under consideration, the same power was again renewed in section 3. However, at that time Congress desired to provide for reciprocal trade negotiations between the Government of the United States and all other governments, and it so provided in section 4. But in section 4 it decreed that such compacts, agreements, or arrangements—whatever term we may wish to apply to them—should be regarded as treaties, and should come to the Senate for ratification. So I submit that an examination of the facts reveals that the Congress which enacted the Dingley Act in 1897 saw a distinction between the granting of power to the President, upon the finding of a fact, to put into effect a tariff rate which the Congress itself had named, and the power which is now contained in the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act to enter into negotiations with all the world to fix tariff rates.

It seems to me that the question which must be answered is, if the Congress felt in 1897 that there was a distinction between these two separate grants of power, what has transpired since then to make a change?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Of course, the argument made by the Senator from Wyoming was presented to the court, and the court did not consider the point.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I wish the Senator would point out where the argument was made.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. The court did not consider that point, but the court did point out the fact, as I have stated, that there is a great difference between a formal treaty and a compact.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Of course, there is a difference between compacts and treaties; no one contends otherwise. The issue here is that an effort is being made to expand the agreement, or the compact, to embrace treaties. There is a distinction, and those who are supporting the technique by which the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act has been defended and extended are supporting the technique which is making an Executive agreement take the place of a treaty. When the proper time comes, I shall be very glad to read to the Senator the language of Mr. Wallace McClure, of the State Department. He has published a well-thought-out work on Executive agreements, in which he specifically makes the point that the Executive agreement can supplant the treaty-making power. If that can be done by an act of Congress without a constitutional amendment, then there is nothing in the Constitution which cannot be wiped out by act of Congress.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Wyoming for keeping the discussion on that plane.

The fact that during the past 9 years the Court has not been asked to pass upon this question, the fact that treaties, or agreements, have been negotiated, entered into, and have become a part of our custom, and the fact that in the great general evolution of this idea we have not turned our backs upon it, all seem to me to be an argument—in spite of the argument to the contrary—which can be made in favor of the technique as we have followed it through.

The ruling of the Supreme Court in Panama Refining Co. v. Ryan (293 U. S. 388) has been presented as authority for requiring a definite standard to be followed by the Executive in carrying out the legislative will. In the Curtiss-Wright Case (299 U. S. 304), the Panama Refining Co. case was relied on as support for the contention that the arms embargo law was invalid as a delegation of legislative power; but the Supreme Court rejected the contention, holding that in delegating power to control foreign affairs Congress was not limited to the same degree of exactness as in domestic affairs. On page 320 the following language appears:

> It is quite apparent that if, in the maintenance of our international relations, embarrassment—perhaps serious embarrassment—is to be avoided and success for our aims achieved, congressional legislation which is to be made effective through negotiation and inquiry within the international field must often accord to the President a degree of discretion and freedom from statutory restriction which would not be admissible were domestic affairs alone involved.

That the Tariff Act is primarily a regulation of foreign commerce and only, incidentally, a revenue measure, is a point which I have already made, and a point which I think we should keep constantly in mind. It seems to me we should never forget, Mr. President, that the United States customs tariff has been historically a means of commercial trade rather than primarily a source of revenue. That is the first point I have sought to make so far; and that it has been necessary in its historical development, to place in the Executive increased executive control of the tariff.

Those are the practical aspects of the situation, Mr. President, and I have given the reasons why we have advanced in our tariff history to the place where we find ourselves today.

Mr. President, the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act should be extended. The Congress and the President have already approved the act three times, in the original act of 1934, and the two 3-year extensions, in 1937 and 1940. In my opinion—and it is only my opinion—the Congress should now make this legislation permanent. Of course, that is not what the pending joint resolution provides for, so I am going outside of the sphere of the resolution in saying that, in the history of the evolution of the tariff, we have arrived at the place where we ought to make the legislation permanent.

Mr. President, the record made by the administration during the past 9 years in negotiating reciprocal agreements has proved this method of dealing with the tariff and international trade problems to be fair and practical. It is also, even during the war, a workable method of handling some current foreign trade problems and will be needed to solve the new and complex conditions of industries and international trade that will certainly exist at the end of the war.

This method should in time, and the sooner the better, become a permanent part of United States foreign trade policy. It ought not to be a political question any longer. This way of handling some of our foreign trade problems has come to stay, because it is worth keeping.

The reciprocal trade agreement is a good instrument, and should not be discarded merely because some of us may not agree with every act of the administration under the law. We do not discard hoes for weeding gardens merely because we occasionally hit a tomato or beet plant when we aim at a weed. What we do instead is to be more careful with the hoe—develop more skill in its use as we gain experience. That is what we ought to do with the Trade Agreements Act. We ought to perfect our use of it to the end that it will more effectively promote the general welfare and prosperity, not only of our country but of the world.

RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS ARE NATURAL OUTGROWTH OF UNITED STATES TARIFF EXPERIENCE AND OF WORLD ECONOMIC CONDITIONS PREVAILING IN 1934

Mr. President, the reciprocal trade-agreement method of dealing with the tariff problems is a natural outgrowth of our historical treatment of the tariff and of conditions extant in 1934, when the act was first passed by Congress.

From the first Tariff Act of 1789 our policy has been one of protection of essential domestic industries. True, the Republicans have voted higher rates and greater protection to more industries than the Democrats, but all our tariff acts, from the first to the last, even when we said they were primarily for revenue only, have carried considerable protection to many industries, though it might in some cases, especially under the Democratic administrations, have been more or less incidental. We have come to think of this tariff treatment as the American method, and up to recent years it has not been a bad method for our country to employ to regulate our foreign trade. It has proved on the whole to have been a justifiable and fairly satisfactory method of regulating our foreign trade to meet the needs of our new and growing industries and the competition of our foreign rivals. Here I may say, Mr. President, that the tariff grew up in the United States under rather stable international monetary systems that no longer exist.

The act of 1789 was passed immediately after the close of the war for our freedom from Great Britain. If we had had no such war, we would not have had the same urgent need for our own domestic manufacturing industries. We might not have mistrusted Great Britain and her willingness to supply us continually with our needs for certain manufactures, and because we would have continued to trust her and continued to get our requirements regularly from her, we might have made our first Federal revenue law, not a protective tariff law, but one calculated to bring in just the amount of revenue needed by the United States with the least possible injury to and interference with business and trade. But the facts are that we had had a great war, we had been compelled to manufacture our own supplies of certain needed commodities or else go without them, and those infant industries were in existence at the close of the Revolutionary War. Immediately after the war, we were not willing to put implicit trust in obtaining our future needs from Great Britain or from any other foreign source. Consequently, we passed a law in 1789 that protected some of these infant industries. That first act started this country out on our American method of regulating our foreign trade by tariffs.

Much the same ground has been fought over at the passage of every tariff act since that time. The same old arguments are made of whether to stimulate and protect domestic industries essential for the defense of the Nation in war, whether to encourage and maintain infant industries; if so, what industries; what, if any, new industries to encourage and foster by the tariff device for regulating foreign competition; how much, if any, foreign competition to permit, and so forth, have been questions before the American voting public in a more or less perennial debate ever since that first tariff act was passed.

Looking back over our history it is plain and the record is clear that each Tariff Act has had some fairly good reasons for its coming into being at the time of its passage by the Congress. Of course, many mistakes were made, when rates were fixed too high and made to protect industries which should never have been protected. Many of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle, in the light of history, will now readily admit that to be so. But at the time, by arguing from false premises, by mistaken judgments, by erroneous appraisement of facts, or for other reasons, they justified themselves and did a pretty good job of selling the voters on their protective-tariff policy right up to 1930, when the mistake of mistakes in the tariff law was made.

We had the power then, in 1933, to wipe out in one fell swoop all the "iniquitous" high tariffs of the Smoot-Hawley Act and to put on the statutes a law enacted for the sole purpose of obtaining the revenue needed from customs duties and omitting any and all rates to regulate our foreign commerce. Why did we not do it?

There are many reasons why we did not do it, and they are good and sufficient reasons, too.

The whole world was in a state of depression. All nations were struggling with the problems created by millions of unemployed. Each country was trying to put its men and women back to work. All countries were regulating and restricting imports to maintain high domestic production so as to keep farmers and laborers employed on their own farms and in local factories. At the same time each nation was attempting to maintain or increase exports, some countries even subsidizing them, in order to keep up or to increase opportunities for employment of its own citizens. Their leaders were not in the frame of mind, nor were they in a position at that time, to accept any large increase in imports.

The United States was struggling with the same gigantic displacement problems. Under such conditions as existed in 1933 when the Democratic Party became the majority party and took over the Government, it would have been the sheerest folly to have abolished all our protective tariffs. Imports would have swelled beyond compare, our own unemployment would have increased, and all our problems incident to such unemployment would have been aggravated.

Our exports could not have increased immediately to balance the augmented imports. Foreign countries were regulating trade by all kinds of barriers, if not absolutely preventing imports, and subsidizing exports to help solve their unemployment; and Germany, Italy, and Japan were completely controlling imports and exports in order to prepare for war which they knew would result in a blockade of their foreign trade. They were making themselves as self-sufficient as possible and building stock piles of essentials for the future emergency. Under such conditions it would have been futile to reduce our tariffs unilaterally.

On the other hand, there was presented the possibility of bringing back reasonable soundness to international trade, to win for our reductions in tariff rates reciprocal reductions of foreign tariffs against our exports and thus to reestablish international exchange of goods on a basis of approximately equal advantage to all trade-agreement countries. In this way we would not leave the rest of the world locked up in tight trade compartments while we wandered around the globe begging for markets, but we would unlock some at least of these closely guarded and barricaded foreign markets to the products of the United States, in exchange for opening up our own vast market a little more liberally to the products of other countries.

These are in brief the reason why the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act was passed in 1934 instead of a general downward tariff revision. The act was renewed in 1937 and in 1940 because on its merits as employed by the administration it had won the recognition that it was a sound, constructive, and workable method of handling the very knotty, complex, and continuous economic problem of regulating our foreign trade to the commercial advantage of our great Nation and to the promotion of friendly relations with the other nations of the world. The experience of the past 9 years has proved the usefulness of these trade agreements to the economy of the United States and to the establishment and maintenance of good relationships with our neighbors—the rest of the countries of the earth.

As suggested earlier, this reciprocal trade agreements method of adjusting or regulating our foreign trade naturally grew out of our tariff experience, especially the experience with the so-called flexible tariff provisions of the Tariff Acts of 1922 and 1930. The trade-agreements method simply corrects some of the weaknesses, cumbersomeness, and the unilateral nature of those procedures for adjusting rates of duty; and where reductions are made by this new method, the United States gets something in exchange from other countries, while under the flexible provisions of the earlier acts no such concessions whatever from foreign countries were won or could be won for this country because they were not even provided for in those earlier acts. Certainly when the trade agreements act was passed in 1934 we needed such a tool to pry open some of the almost air-tight foreign markets for our exports; and we will also need it, perhaps even more urgently, after this war is over.

ACT IS CONSTITUTIONAL—THAT QUESTION NEEDS NO FURTHER DISCUSSION

Mr. President, I desire next to discuss a question which has not been considered for some time, the question of the constitutionality of reciprocal trade agreements.

The flexible provisions of the Tariff Act of 1922 were declared constitutional by the unanimous decision of the Supreme Court on April 9, 1928, in Hampton & Co. v. United States (276 U. S. 394). There is nothing so new or strange in the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act as to make it unconstitutional. We may take it for granted that at this late date, if and when the question comes before the Supreme Court, that tribunal will declare the act constitutional.

There is no need here and now of again arguing whether or not the trade agreement act and method of regulating our foreign trade is constitutional. That question is now largely academic. Congress has during our history passed so many acts giving the President the power to regulate our foreign trade and commerce and has specified at different times what should be the basis of his changes in customs duties, if, as, and when he finds such action to be in the best interests of the country, that further to debate the constitutionality of such procedure as used in these trade agreements is to waste time on futile considerations The reciprocal trade agreements are to our advantage and are desirable for the welfare and peaceful well-being of the United States or they are not. On that basis let us decide whether we want to continue them in operation and to negotiate more of them in the future.

I am a strong supporter of our Constitution, but I see no sense in prolonging an attempt to destroy useful legislation, so long in operation to the advantage of our country and of the world, by merely technical, inflexible, and outmoded interpretations of certain phrases of the Constitution, especially when for so many years a majority of our citizens and of our courts, including the Supreme Court, have taken the view that these acts are permissible, when our Constitution is properly and liberally construed, even if they may not be specially provided for in it. Anyway, the arguments on that question have been so thoroughly gone into before when this matter was under consideration in 1934, 1937, and 1940, and have been so carefully reported in the hearings of the committees and in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at those times that I shall not waste the time of the Senate by going into it again. I am convinced beyond a shadow of doubt that the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act is specifically constitutional under the commerce clause of the Constitution and that the question needs no further discussion in this or any other session of Congress.

EXTENSION IS NEEDED NOW TO REASSURE OUR ALLIES OF UNITED STATES COOPERATION AFTER THE WAR

Mr. President, the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act should be extended now and maintained as the policy of this country to reassure our allies in the war that at the end of the war we will not desert them, withdraw from commercial cooperation behind a high tariff and quotas wall, and leave the other nations of the earth in international selfish individualism and geographical isolation.

This great American Nation must lead the way and use its powerful influence to establish international cooperation, economically as well as politically after the war. This role of leadership in the field of international economic cooperation which rests upon this country because of its size, population, and industrial and military power, no less than upon its spiritual leadership of ideas and ideals of democracy, simply demands that we do our best to reestablish sane, healthful, wholesome, and profitable trade between the many nations of the earth.

These trade agreements are good instruments for the exercise of a great beneficial influence on the trade of the United States with the outside world after the war and for influencing the foreign trade policies of the other countries to promote a prosperous trade among themselves as well as between them and the United States. In this way the standards of living in all countries may be raised and the friction caused by international trade barriers may be removed to a large extent at least. By extending the Trade Agreements Act our present allies will be reassured and encouraged to continue in battle to the victory for which we are all fighting, confident that we shall continue interest in them and them in us, after the war is won, so that the peace also may be won.

UNITED STATES POLICY IS TO TREAT ALL COUNTRIES ALIKE

Mr. President, I desire to consider the question of the most-favored-nation policy in our treaties and to indicate what that technique has done for us and for the world. The adoption of the most-favored-nation policy in our treaties with other countries, now incorporated in all agreements under this Reciprocal Trade Act, was first generally adopted and applied by our Government in the Harding administration when Charles Evans Hughes was Secretary of State.

It is interesting to note that this technique is no longer questioned, a fact which it is rather difficult to realize when we remember how earnestly it was debated when the idea of the most-favored-nation treatment was first presented.

No question about the constitutionality of the most favored nation policy has been raised. Nor can this question be made a political issue because both major political parties have adopted it and applied it in our treaties and trade agreements with other countries. This is the established policy of the United States, and it is a wise policy and greatly to the advantage of this country. It will undoubtedly continue to be our policy, for it has great merit. We shall continue to try to obtain most-favored-nation treatment from all other countries and in exchange we shall grant it to all other countries that do not discriminate against United States trade.

Without such a policy of treating all nations alike, the world would be divided into rival trading groups, friendly and unfriendly. Those being treated as well as any other nation in trade with us would be friendly and those not enjoying such relations would be unfriendly. A similar situation would prevail in the case of every other nation. If each and every country tried to make special and exclusive bilateral trading arrangements, regulating specifically all trade in each item between each such two trading countries, world trade relationships would soon be so complex and so limited and so many irritating elements would be involved that any reasonable degree of freedom of exchange of goods and services to obtain the benefits of natural geographical advantages and specialization would be impossible. The free and equal access of all nations to essential raw materials and foodstuffs would also be a myth and unobtainable.

Mr. President, I am wondering if the Atlantic Charter could have been as bold in its declaration in regard to open and free access to raw materials if it had not been for the experience of our country during the last 9 years with reciprocal trade agreements. I believe that that experience has contributed to a world doctrine to such an extent that our great allies can declare, as, indeed, they have declared, that the doctrine itself is for the benefit of the whole world.

The wide exchange of the world's goods and services which will promote international friendships, high standards of living, and prosperity for all countries can come only when nations stop this selfish, bickering discrimination against each other and refrain from forming rival, competing, unfriendly groups of nations for the exploitation of the trade they control to their own particular advantage and to the detriment of other nations.

It would most certainly be to the decided advantage of the United States, which has the next to the largest, if not the largest, foreign trade of any nation in the world, if we could win by reciprocal trade agreements, or by any other equitable procedure, trade treatment by each and every foreign country, equal to the best treatment that each and every foreign country respectively grants to any third country. We would in consequence enjoy freedom from discriminations against our exports to each and every country of the world and also freedom from discriminations by them against their respective exports to the United States. That is a part of what this country is aiming at in negotiating these reciprocal trade agreements. We not only grant most-favored-nation treatment in our market, but we get most-favored-nation treatment in the countries with which we have made such agreements.

Our total exports are generally greater than our total imports. Consequently in quid pro quo trades we stand to obtain a net gain, value for value. But because the United States has such a paramount interest in world trade and in keeping it on a reasonable, friendly, and fair basis and free from direction by military, naval, cartel, financial, or other pressures, we stand to gain far more from such a most-favored-nation status extant generally throughout the world than can be measured by just the balance of commodity exchanges. Such world trade conditions would help to make the world a better place in which to live and the United States is greatly interested in doing that very thing.

Having said this much about the general background, character, legal status, and purposes of this act, let us examine briefly what has been accomplished under its operation for the past 9 years.

AGREEMENTS MADE AND IN PROCESS

The administration has completed 29 agreements with 25 countries under the act. There have been an original and two supplemental agreements with both Cuba and Canada. The agreement with Nicaragua became effective October 1, 1936, but on March 10, 1938, the duty concessions and certain other provisions of the agreement ceased to be in force. The operation of the agreement with Czechoslovakia, effective April 16, 1936, was suspended as of April 22, 1939, because of German occupation of that country. Consequently, there are reciprocal trade agreements in effect at present with 24 countries, including Nicaragua, which treaty has not been entirely voided. Also announcement has been made of intention to negotiate agreements with three other countries and hearings have been held on the proposed United States concessions and our demands for concessions from the other countries. These three are with Iceland, Bolivia, and Iran.

It is true, of course, that we have not been able to make trade agreements with all countries. But we have explored the whole field. We even sent men to Germany, Italy, and Japan and tried to come to some satisfactory agreements with them. But we were no more successful with them in negotiating reciprocal trade agreements than we were in preventing them from starting this great war. They were not willing to meet us on a fair and just basis. On the other hand many other countries that are in a position to do so have been keenly interested in making quid pro quo trade arrangements with us. The agreements now in effect with 24 countries and the 3 in process prove this point beyond a doubt. The complete list is as follows:

PRESENT POLICY DOES NOT GIVE AWAY CONCESSIONS FOR NOTHING

Some persons, however, argue against generalizing to all countries our concessions granted in a reciprocal-trade agreement with one country, because we thus give away something to these other countries and get nothing in return. It must be remembered that when we grant most-favored-nation treatment we also get it in return from the country with which the treaty is made, and consequently we may actually in any particular case get more from that one country than we give. We may, too, get less, dependent on our actual trade with the particular country involved and also dependent upon her trade with other countries and what her comparative treatment of our trade has been in the past before this reciprocal agreement was consummated.

On this point of giving something for nothing to third, fourth, and fifth countries, let us recall that the general policy and practice of our Government is to grant concessions only on articles of which the country with which we are negotiating is the principal supplier, the principal source of our imports. In that way other countries which supply minor imports may get some benefit, at least temporarily, without at once granting our exports a quid pro quo benefit in their markets. If we do not subsequently make an agreement with such countries and if they do not discriminate against our products sufficiently to warrant denying them this equal treatment, they may continue to enjoy this gratuitous concession. If and when we subsequently negotiate an agreement with such countries, we surely and most certainly remind them of our previous concessions from which they have benefited gratuitously, and we usually, if not always, obtain satisfactory compensating concessions from them.

On the other hand, if we have already a most-favored-nation treaty with such other countries we also obtain gratuitously from them any concessions which they may make to third, fourth, and fifth countries. Because we do actually have such treaties with most countries of the world, dating back even before the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act was passed, we probably as a result of such treaties obtain from those third, fourth, and fifth countries concessions equal in value to, if not greater than, any we give away gratuitously by our policy. This would be true especially of countries which were actively liberalizing their trade agreements as the United States is doing under our present policy and of countries with which we had an export balance.

PRESENT POLICY DOES NOT GIVE AWAY UNITED STATES BARGAINING POWER

The other point of this argument is to the effect that when we so generalize our concessions to all countries by granting to them these concessions gratis and without demanding from each and every one of such countries standing to benefit from such United States concessions an offsetting, equal, or a quid pro quo concession before we let them enjoy the equal treatment of the country with which we have consummated an agreement, we lose our bargaining power with those countries with whom we may not yet have made agreements. The same answer given above applies equally against this contention and for the same reasons there is not much truth in the argument. However, it is a plausible argument that there may be something to it in theory, but there is not much to it in actual practice as shown by the facts. These trade agreements can stand on the accomplishments of the administration as shown by the record. The record of course is not perfect, but it is a good one. Let us examine in summary just a few of the facts.

The Tariff Commission has been one of the principal sources of factual data aiding the State Department in the trade-agreements program and has made available to us some valuable and illuminating information showing what has been accomplished to date. One such study is based on carefully analyzed data about 160 of the most important commodities in our foreign trade on which the United States granted concessions in trade agreements, representing 90 percent, by value, of all imports on which rates have been reduced. For 130 of such commodities, representing 91 percent of the imports of the group, the agreements granting the reduced duties were made with the countries that were the principal suppliers. With regard to 13 commodities, which accounted for 3 percent of the imports of the group, agreements were made with the second largest supplier. With regard to 10 of the 160 commodities, the agreement country ranked third, fourth, or lower as a supplier. And with regard to 7 of the 160 commodities, concessions were granted in agreements with countries from which no imports whatever were received in the United States in 1939, the base year for the study.

The above facts show that in practice the administration has stuck close to its policy of granting concessions to countries that are the principal suppliers, but that there have been some exceptions to the rule in order to meet special conditions and accomplish what seemed to be favorable results warranting departure from the usual practice. For example, in the agreement with Argentina, effective November 15, 1941, a reduction was granted on canned tomatoes and tomato paste. Italy was the principal source of imports in 1939 and none came from Argentina. But during 1942 few, if any, came from Italy or Argentina, and Canada became a principal source of imports and we already had a reciprocal agreement with Canada.

Another illustration is ferromanganese—30 percent or more manganese—containing not less than 4 percent carbon. Canada in 1929-33 was the principal source of imports, in 1934-35, Norway was first and Canada second as suppliers. Canada was also a larger potential source than any other country. A reduced duty was granted in the agreement with Canada, January 1, 1936, but in 1939 Canada was not a supplier of any imports to this country. The Netherlands then ranked first as a source, Norway second, Czechoslovakia third, and Poland and Danzig fourth. During the war we need all the ferromanganese we can get from any and every source. When this duty was reduced in 1936 it was thought that the concession would do no harm and it might get us a little of this much needed ferromanganese. And as a matter of fact in 1942 Canada again and the United Kingdom were our principal, if not our sole sources of imports, although the concession was automatically granted to all countries when it was originally granted to Canada in 1936.

Let us now take a general view of results. On the basis of value in 1939, 79 percent of the imports subject to reduced duties in all trade agreements—not including Peru, Mexico, and Uruguay—came from countries to which the concessions were granted; excluding Cuba the proportion is 74 percent. Imports of dutiable products having rates bound against increase came largely from nonagreement countries, but this was due almost entirely to the binding of the rate on burlaps in the United Kingdom agreement with imports valued at $24,000,000 from British India, a nonagreement country. Sixty-nine percent of the imports bound free of duty were received from the countries in agreements with which the bindings were made.

These facts show that in few, if any, cases has generalization of concessions granted something for nothing, and in few, if any, has the United States lost bargaining power. Nothing really has been given away or lost. First-rate powers which have honorable and forthright foreign policies do not take advantage of our generosity. We have lost no bargaining power with such countries. On the whole we have gained in good will by our fair, open, and honest dealing much more than we have lost. This, in the long run, will result in much greater trade for the United States than would the stingy, bickering, haggling policy involved in the strictly limited bilateral agreements policy advocated by some opponents of the present program. As a matter of fact, the United States is greatly admired and highly respected by all the other nations of the world because of this administration's policies in negotiating these reciprocal trade agreements.

FARMERS NOT HURT BY TRADE AGREEMENTS

Despite much talk about the administration "having sold the United States farmers down the river" in the trade agreements negotiated, one will search in vain for evidence of such an effect. On the contrary, farmers in general have been benefited by the administration of this act.

While foreign markets for our great surplus crops of cotton, wheat, tobacco, and so on have not been greatly expanded because of peculiar pre-war world conditions and the existing war economies of foreign countries, yet the extension of foreign markets for our manufactured products has extended industrial employment and increased purchasing power in this country and thus expanded our home market for our domestic farm products. This effect of foreign trade is quite apparent now when war conditions have turned our former great surpluses into present deficits.

The American farmers have also gained from the trade agreements the same as all other consumers because the lower tariffs have reduced the prices of imported goods and because the resulting increased competition has also reduced the prices of domestic articles the farmers purchase and forced greater efficiency of domestic manufacture, thus keeping down the farmer's costs of production and his and the city and industrial worker's costs of living.

Some specialized groups of farmers, such as the flaxseed growers of the Northwest and of California, may think they might be injured after the war if the reduced duty on flaxseed in the Argentine agreement were continued when the war is over, but that remains to be seen. Anyway, that agreement terminates November 15, 1944, or before the end of the war, or "until the thirtieth day following a proclamation by the President of the United States of America, after consultation with the Argentine Government, that the existing abnormal situation in respect of the trade in flaxseed has terminated," and no harm will be done under the present rate of duty during the war. The security of our domestic producers, if necessary, may be provided in any new agreement by a quota on imports. In general, our farmers have benefited by the agreements.

UNITED STATES SUGAR-BEET AND SUGARCANE GROWERS NOT INJURED

We now and then hear grumblings from the sugar-beet and sugarcane growers or the sugar manufacturers or refiners about the injury they have sustained or may suffer, but the evidence shows that not only have they not been injured by the reduction in the duty on sugar in the agreement with Cuba but that the sugar industry has prospered greatly during the past 9 years under the sugar program of the administration. It is true that the duty has been reduced, but with the quota system adopted in the Jones-Costigan Sugar Act and as it has been administered by the Government, imports have been kept within such limits as to secure for our farmers a good price for their beets and cane and for the domestic manufacturers and refiners a profitable margin on the average on the sugar they produced. Few, if any, 9-year periods of the industry's history in this country have been more profitable than the period during the existence of the Cuban trade agreement.

Good prices paid farmers for sugar beets

The average returns to United States farmers for growing sugar beets during the 1942 crop season is estimated to be slightly more than $9 per ton, compared with an average of $6.75 per ton for the 1938, 1939, and 1940 crops. These average prices include both payments by beet-sugar processors and conditional benefit payments by the Government.

It is estimated that the comparable price the United States beet growers will get for the 1943 crop will be about $11 per ton. This includes a subsidy of $1.50 per ton which will be paid by the Government for beets grown this year in addition to the conditional benefit payments under the farm program and the amount paid by the processors.

Good profits earned by beet-sugar companies in the United States

In a statement printed by the Securities and Exchange Commission—Advance Release No. 3, December 1942—it is shown that the average net profit as a percent of sales for six of the largest beet-sugar companies was 7.7 percent for the fiscal year ending in 1941, and 9 percent for the fiscal year ending in 1942. The range was from a loss of 2.4 percent to a gain of 11.2 percent in 1941 and from a low of 5.9 percent to 11.6 percent for 1942.

The report of the United States Tariff Commission on the costs of production of beet sugar, table 5–A, page 55, shows that the ratio of profit to investment for 10 of the largest beet-sugar companies was 14.5 percent on the average for 1940 and 13.4 percent on the average for 1941. These profits, however, are calculated without deducting income taxes paid. The net profit after income taxes were deducted would be less.

REDUCTION IN DUTY ON CATTLE HAS INJURED DOMESTIC PRODUCERS VERY LITTLE, IF ANY

There has been considerable unjust criticism among farmers of the trade agreements with Canada and Mexico because of the reductions in the duties on cattle granted by the United States in those agreements. In the first Canadian agreement effective January 1, 1936, the duty was reduced from 3 cents a pound to 2 cents on heavy cattle weighing 700 pounds or more each, and in the second Canadian agreement, effective January 1, 1939, it was further reduced to 1.5 cents per pound. Farmers claim that this resulted in lower prices being paid for domestic heavy stockers and feeders and fat cattle, especially on the St. Paul market where most imported Canadian cattle are marketed and consequently that these concessions injured the United States farmers who market their cattle in St. Paul.

Both the farmers' representatives and the State Department, respectively, quote prices at St. Paul to show that the farmers were injured and to prove that they were not injured. I am willing to believe that prices in that particular market might have been slightly lower because of the imports from Canada. But even so, is it asking too much of our farmers to ask them to meet a little competition from their Canadian neighboring farmers in order to maintain the splendid good neighbor policy between Canada and the United States?

And, in addition, the United States limited the number of such cattle that could be imported in any one year to 155,799 head in the first agreement and to a maximum of 225,000 head per calendar year in the second agreement and to not over 60,000 head per calendar quarter year. These limitations on the number that could be brought in from all sources, principally Canada, at the reduced rates, made it certain that the injury to the Western cattle producers would be limited and within the bounds of a reasonable quid pro quo exchange for the concessions won from Canada in these agreements.

Furthermore, the United States cattle feeders of the Middle West profited by the slightly lower prices and the availability of the Canadian cattle which they purchased for their feed lots on this side of the border.

Now, during the war, we would be glad to get these or any number of cattle from Canada to help piece out our supplies of beef, but Canada no longer permits exports to this country because of her own great need for beef.

The duty on cattle weighing 200 pounds or more each, but less than 700 pounds, was reduced in the Mexican agreement, effective January 30, 1943, from 2.5 cents a pound to 1.5 cents per pound. No tariff quota is now applicable, but the agreement with Mexico provides for a quota to become effective at a future date, at which time the quantity entitled to entry at the reduced rate will be limited to 110,000 head per calendar quarter year and to 400,000 per calendar year.

This concession granted when our beef supplies are short and domestic production inadequate and prices of beef very high cannot possibly injure domestic cattle raisers and even if they should claim that they would have received even higher prices if the duty had not been reduced, the great need for beef in this country during the war and our short supply would certainly justify the concession from every point of view.

When all factors are considered, neither these farmers nor other growers of the United States have suffered any substantial injury by the concessions granted in the trade agreements. The same may be said of the mining and manufacturing interests of this country—they have suffered no substantial injury because of the concessions granted on imports of their products. Conversely, all have been benefited by the concessions we have won from other countries. Their exports have been freed from paying excessive taxes. They may have benefited by the cheaper imports or lower prices necessary to obtain essential supplies, or only from the general good will and more friendly relations of our neighboring countries and others enjoying trade with us. All have shared in the more prosperous foreign trade promoted by the trade agreements and in the better relations with other countries established when reciprocal trade agreements are in operation.

AMENDMENTS SHOULD NOT BE ADOPTED

Amendments proposed by opponents of the trade agreements should not be adopted. They would either cripple the program or destroy it. Adoption of amendments such as the one limiting concessions by this country to noncompetitive products, or only to those agricultural products that are sold here for prices above parity, or to those products whose costs of production in the United States are low enough so that the present tariff more than equalizes the difference in their costs and costs in the foreign country with which we are negotiating, would so cripple the trade-agreement program that it would not be of sufficient use to warrant continuing it. And to require the approval of both Houses of Congress before an agreement may become effective would practically preclude the use of the trade agreements as an instrument, if our past history with such procedure can be relied upon. The record shows such agreements never have been approved, and it seems likely they never would be. To require their approval by the Senate, while quite unnecessary from the constitutional point of view, would also stultify the program and void it to the extent of almost, if not entirely, destroying it. It would throw the old tariff fight right back here in the Senate, which, in reality, would destroy the trade-agreement program and return it to the logrolling control of the special interests of the local units rather than the general public interests now dictating the program.

Furthermore, to add such burdensome limitations on any administration trying to deal with foreign countries is to destroy the program as a practical way of adjusting trade, because the representatives of the foreign countries would have no confidence that agreements could be made, and even if they thought they could be made, they would conclude that no concessions could be obtained by them that would be worth while. Consequently they would not be interested in attempting to negotiate agreements with us. Their views must be taken into consideration in these agreements as well as ours. It takes both sides to make an agreement. Unless foreign countries obtain concessions which they think worth while, they will not try to conclude an agreement. Agreements must be reciprocal.

TRADE AGREEMENTS NEEDED DURING WAR

The trade agreements are needed now because of rapidly developing shortages of many commodities essential in our war economy while failure to extend the act might limit the flexibility essential to meet our present needs. For example, the feeds now in great demand for expansion of our beef, dairy, poultry, and other livestock products might be had from Canada, Australia, or Argentina, if shipping were available and duties reduced on the imports and our import quota restrictions removed on good wheat. Of course, one difficulty is shortage of shipping and that is outside of trade agreement influence, and another is the quota fixed by the President on wheat imports under the agricultural program. But if it were made possible to import at lower duties wheat from Canada, Australia, and Argentina, when shipping does become available as it well might, our feed shortage might be greatly alleviated to the benefit of our program for adequate human food products of animal origin for ourselves and our allies. Furthermore, extension of the act may be an aid in keeping prices within the ceilings set and thus keeping down costs of living and thus help in the control of inflation. In other ways also the war program might be helped by adjusting tariffs on our imports in exchange for reciprocal lowering of other countries' duties on our exports.

Mr. TUNNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I am glad to yield.

Mr. TUNNELL. I have not heard all the discussion, but I understand from the Senator's statement that the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act has been a law for 9 years, having been passed in 1934 and extended in 1937 and 1940. Is that correct?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. The Senator is correct.

Mr. TUNNELL. I understand from the report of the committee that 27 countries have entered into agreements with the United States under the act.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. That is correct, and I have placed in the RECORD a list of the trade agreements, so that it will be available to the Senate.

Mr. TUNNELL. I understood from the Senator's statement that in no case has any question as to the validity of these agreements been taken to the Supreme Court of the United States in all that period.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I know of no case arising under the act which has been carried to the Supreme Court.

Mr. TUNNELL. Does the Senator know of any particular reason why there should now be question raised as to the validity of agreements, or as to the length of time the agreements should stand?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. The Senator from Utah does not know of any reason at all. When there is an act which has gained such universal good will among our own people, and which has caused the nations of the earth not only to respond to what we might call a good-neighbor policy, but actually to appreciate what we have done, and when the reciprocal trade agreements have been so much appreciated in the world, it seems to be that to change the policy at this time, when we are fighting to make it possible for all nations to have access to the goods of the world in the most desirable way, would be the most backward step we could take.

Mr. TUNNELL. I thank the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I might add a word about other questions—the Danaher amendment, for example, which would make of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act a war act. The Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act is primarily a peace act, and should be construed as a peace act and as an act of good will.

Mr. President, after all is said and done we must adopt broad and enlightened trade policies for this, the greatest trading Nation on earth. We have gained a military leadership; we have gained a political leadership, we have gained a position in international relations the like of which no other nation has ever gained in the history of the world. Everywhere the United States is looked to and thought of as the hope of the whole earth. In the parts of the world which our enemies have overrun and now control we all know that the populations would have given up hope long ago had it not been for the strength and character of the United States, and the reverence they have for our country.

We must deal fairly and even generously with the other nations of the world to win and keep their friendship and good will. We need their support or at least their cooperation now during the war and after the war ends and to establish and maintain the only kind of peace that has any chance of enduring. Renewing this Trade Agreements Act will contribute one mechanism that shows some prospects of helping to shape world trade and to direct it into a constructive element toward friendly, cooperative international relations. It ought to be given new life and the administration encouraged to go forward in its constructive program so that when the war ends we may go right ahead making agreements for constructive direction of our own trade and the trade of the world so that our views and their views may be harmonized on just and fair objectives for world trade and cooperation. These trade agreements cannot do everything necessary to restore world sanity but they may be administered as a program pointing in the right direction and consequently they should be given our approval and the people of this great country should help to direct us in our foreign policy by adopting a broad and constructive point of view on these great international problems.

Mr. President, I would make a plea to my fellow Senators. We are at war. When I stood on the floor of the Senate years ago, sponsoring the Selective Service Act, I happened to make the statement that our country was actually in peril. I was charged with being a warmonger when I made that statement, and as pointing out a condition which did not exist. I was put in the place of an aggressor because I said that it was time for the United States to prepare, time for the United States to realize the conditions which were prevalent in the world, and the ambition of certain nations to ruin that for which we stand. I did not go so far as to predict an attack upon the United States, because I had too much faith in the world's recognition of the fact that we were strong, and able to take care of ourselves. But I did point out that we were in peril, and I was charged, for so stating, with being one of those who wanted to encourage war and to make war more certain.

Mr. President, in this plea I of course am making an appeal for peace, but the making of peace is very much more difficult than the making of war. War is simple. All a country has to do is to reach its enemy, defeat him and crush him. It is a single objective. But peace is complex in the extreme. There can never be peace by fiat. Peace will never be brought to the world merely by some one declaring "Let us have peace." It has to come step by step, it has to come act by act; and in the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act we have one technique, not a major technique, but one wherein we bind close to us certain nations in the world, and it is well to have them bound to us.

Mr. President, there has arisen a certain criticism—and it comes out in this discussion—to the effect that the President has been given too much power. I have already shown that, so far as tariffs are concerned, under the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act the President is not granted the great powers which have been granted by other tariff acts. But is not this the time when we should uphold the hand of our Commander in Chief, when we should grant him power? We do grant him power. Is it not a time when we should think of the fact that the test of the worth of any constitution is in its ability to protect the people from hazards and from war? I am happy beyond words to point out that America's Constitution is again standing the test of war. America is stronger in war than she is in peace.

Mr. President, I simply wish to add that I no longer have to predict that we are facing peril. Everyone knows we are in peril and that we are going to remain in peril for some time. Everyone who knows the methods of war practiced by our enemies realizes that the advantages are not all on our side to this day. Colonel House, I believe it was, after the last war laid down the doctrine that the nations of the world are divided into two parts, the haves and the have-nots. We must all realize that in the last 2 years America has ceased to be a have nation and has become a have-not nation. That change in our position, Mr. President, means that we must do nothing now to make it harder for us, a have-not nation, to gain access to all the friendly trade we can secure.

My final plea, Mr. President, is a plea far beyond and above all other pleas. Now that we are fighting a war my plea to all is to hold up the arms of our Commander in Chief. Do not legislate in such a way that our Commander in Chief will have to fight at a disadvantage to himself, and to our own disadvantage. I ask everyone when thinking about the powers of the President, the powers of the Congress, and the powers of the judiciary, to remember that after all there is but one Government. We do not have three governments. If the three coordinate branches of the Government cannot unite in sustaining the defense of the American people, our Government will come to naught. This is no time to change by one whit the great power which our President has. Let us uphold his power. Let us give him power so that we shall be assured in every way not only of victory in the war, but of the type of peace which means the perpetuation of American ideals throughout the world and American institutions here at home.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. Mr. President, in the year 1934 the Congress passed a Reciprocal Trade Agreement Act, whereby it was provided:

SEC. 350. (a) For the purpose of expanding foreign markets for the products of the United States by regulating the admission of foreign goods into the United States in accordance with the characteristics and needs of various branches of American production so that foreign markets will be made available to those branches of American production which require and are capable of developing such outlets by affording corresponding market opportunities for foreign products in the United States, the President, whenever he finds as a fact that any existing duties or other import restrictions of the United States or any foreign country are unduly burdening and restricting the foreign trade of the United States and that the purpose above declared will be promoted by the means hereinafter specified, is authorized from time to time—

(1) To enter into foreign-trade agreements with foreign governments or instrumentalities thereof; and

(2) To proclaim such modifications of existing duties and other import restrictions, or such additional import restrictions, or such continuance, and for such minimum periods, of existing customs or excise treatment of any article covered by foreign trade agreement that the President has entered into hereunder. No proclamation shall be made increasing or decreasing by more than 50 percentum any existing rate of duty or transferring any article between the dutiable and the free lists. The proclaimed duties and other import restrictions shall apply to articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of all foreign countries whether imported directly or indirectly: Provided, That the President may suspend the application to articles the growth, produce, or manufacture of any country because of its discriminatory treatment of American commerce or because of other acts or policies which in his opinion tend to defeat the purposes set forth in this section; and the proclaimed duties and other import restrictions shall be in effect from and after such time as is specified on the proclamation. The President may at any time terminate any such proclamation in whole or in part.

This act provided for its own expiration at the end of 3 years. However, without positive action on the part of the President or of the Congress, which would require a two-thirds vote of both Houses, trade agreements authorized under this law may run on forever, irrespective of the termination date in the law itself.

That law was again before the Congress in the summer of 1937, and was renewed for another 3-year period. In 1940 still another renewal was granted for 3 years.

We are now asked to renew it again for 3 years, without restrictions. The House of Representatives reduced the length of life of the act to 2 years, and the Finance Committee of the Senate submits an amendment which now is before us, providing in effect for termination of any trade agreement 6 months after the cessation of hostilities in the present war. In years gone by, the original of this act has been debated fully, intelligently, and ably. I shall not, therefore, take the time of this session for a full and complete discussion of this proposal as though it were new legislation before this body for the first time.

Under the provisions of this law, trade agreements have been entered into with some 30 nations. None of those agreements have been approved or ratified by the Senate or by the Congress. The entire power of fixing, within a range of 100 percent, the duties between the nations signatory to those trade agreements has been delegated by the Congress to the President. Under the provisions of the pending joint resolution, duties may be lowered as much as 50 percent or raised as much as 50 percent. To the President is given the sole power of selecting the articles or goods upon which duties may be raised or lowered. Congress has delegated within that limitation the entire constitutional power of tariff legislation.

I came to the Senate as a representative of a farm State. In South Dakota we have few manufactures and few industries outside of those connected with farming and the processing of farm products. South Dakota is deeply concerned with the condition of the market for its products. We in this Chamber may talk learnedly about the statesmanship of tariff legislation and the good-neighbor policy, but I say categorically to the Members of this body that Mr. John Q. Citizen is interested primarily in how this law or the administration of it will affect him. Is the act beneficial to him or detrimental to him? Is it going to protect his business or damage it? Is it going to penalize him or give him assistance?

I do not mean to say or imply that the people of my State are not interested in world politics. They are intensely so. I do not mean to say that they are not as high-minded and as forward-thinking as are some of the statesmen on Capitol Hill. They are. But the first law of Nature, whether in civilized nations or among savages, is self-preservation, and we in South Dakota want to know what this proposed law is going to do to us and to the other American citizens.

The markets of the world are closed today. No merchandise is shipped out of this country today except that belonging to the Government, so the question of world markets is not presently at issue, but we hope that condition will not continue long. What we in South Dakota and what those in all other agricultural States are deeply concerned about is what is going to happen to the market for our cattle, our sheep, our hogs, wheat, corn, and dairy products. Those are the products of the soil from which we make our living. Those are the products that mean existence or starvation to us. Our first measure of consideration is to see that those products or the markets therefor are protected. If those markets are taken away from us by nations who are able to out-trade us, or through the effects of idealistic dreaming, then we are opposed to this kind of legislation.

The American market is our market; and, insofar as it is necessary to protect our own people, I stand unqualifiedly upon that statement. American markets for American products. Much as the dreamers and planners in this Capital City would have it otherwise, the market price of the products about which I am talking is governed by the law of supply and demand. And while that law may be temporarily upset by attempts of price fixing and rationing, in the end it will prevail, to the complete discredit of those who advocate otherwise.

Let me try to illustrate by a concrete example. I have upon my farm 100 hogs which are ready for market. It would not profit me to put any more corn into them. Every day they remain in the feed lot upon the farm there is a hazard of loss. The market is ready for them. The consumers want fresh pork. I am ready to sell. On the same day on which I deliver my 100 hogs to the market, under the provisions of this trade-agreement law some foreign country or countries are invited to dump upon the market upon which I sell my 100 hogs an equivalent number of hogs. The inevitable effect of that dumping upon my market is that the price which I receive for my hogs goes down; and all the oratory and all the statements of good-neighbor policy to the contrary will not make my loss or my dislike or my anger any less, because some planner tells me I must do my good deed for today and cheerfully accept whatever the market brings. This illustration may be applied to my cattle, sheep, corn, or wheat. It does not make any difference what the product is; the result is the same, and I lose money by this dumping of foreign farm products upon the American market. Nor will it make me any happier as a farm producer to tell me that a trade has been made with Canada whereby Canada will take our automobiles, our stoves, or our refrigerators in return for Canadian cattle, wheat, or whatever the product may be.

Let me illustrate it in another way: The principal livestock markets of the Middle West are Chicago, St. Paul, Sioux City, Omaha, Denver, and Kansas City. Every producer watches the total receipts at those markets. If he is fortunate enough to plan the arrival of his carload or trainload of cattle at the market of his choice on a day of light receipts, he receives a better price and is able to make a better sale than when his cattle arrive on the same day as a large shipment from Canada or any other locality. A glutted market is the name applied to days of heavy shipment, and every time it occurs it means loss to the shippers.

That, Senators, is exactly what the trade agreements do. That is exactly what our agreement with Canada does, and the agreement with Canada gives the same privilege to every other nation in the world to dump its products upon my market. Instead of Canada alone stealing my market, these trade agreements throw the market open to the world. This is not reciprocity. Reciprocity means in anybody's language that the benefits are reciprocal or equal and that I get as much benefit as does the Canadian citizen. This is just downright darn foolishness.

Every head of cattle, every hog, every sheep, every bushel of grain brought into the American market takes just that much away from me and every other producer. Every Canadian steer that is sold upon the Minneapolis or Chicago market takes away from me a market for my steer, and as a result I get less money for it.

The reciprocal trade-agreement-program objective is the recovery of export markets. In many cases foreign markets have been lost by unfair or discriminatory tariff barriers erected against our goods by certain foreign nations. Although we have in the neighborhood of 30 of these agreements in effect today, I have been unable to ascertain a single case in which the President, acting under the authority of this law, has required those foreign countries to abolish their unfair and discriminatory barriers against us.

Assistant Secretary of State Grady says:

> Even more serious than tariffs and trade barriers, and far more threatening with respect to the future of world industrial development, is the virtual destruction during the last 4 years of the structure of international prices because of the gross discriminations, preferential trading agreements, and the arbitrary control of trade through import quotas, exchange allocation, and the like.

That statement was made on May 20, 1935.

According to the United States Tariff Commission Reports, since January 1, 1935, 822 bilateral agreements and 559 supplementary bilateral agreements have been entered into between foreign nations with which we have trade agreements, and many of the bilateral agreements are discriminations against our trade. So far as I have been able to ascertain, the President has refused to use his power to protect American commerce against such discrimination, save in one instance only.

In the 1939 Report of the Secretary of Commerce is this statement:

> Obstacles to foreign intercourse became perhaps even more numerous and complex during the past year than in preceding years. Imports from the United States are frequently on a different footing from shipments originating in other countries, notably in instances in which clearing and compensation agreements are in effect or in which bilateral trade results in an excess of exports from this country.
> The situation has been rendered the more confusing during recent times by the formation of trade areas and currency blocs to which access from outside areas is completely or partially closed by the use of extraordinary control devices.

Candidate Roosevelt said in Sioux City, Iowa, on September 29, 1932:

> We may not have the astuteness in some forms of international diplomacy that our more experienced European friends have, but when it comes to good old-fashioned barter and trade—whether it be goods or tariff—my money is on the American. There cannot and shall not be any foreign dictation of our tariff policies.

I am perfectly willing to agree with the President that we are lacking in astuteness in our dealings with certain other Nations; but I think that lack of astuteness continues right on through these trade agreements, because America has been "traded out of her socks."

Every one of the countries with which our presently existing trade agreements are in effect agreed in those contracts not to engage in further discriminatory practices toward the United States; and yet, on March 1, 1939, according to the United States Tariff Commission Report, trade-agreement countries were parties to 98 exclusive agreements with other countries, from which the United States received no benefits. Thus a perfect network of these agreements has been built up by the other nations of the world precluding us from their markets, and with one exception the President has failed to terminate a single one of our trade agreements.

As an illustration of what I mean, let me invite attention to the United Kingdom, or Great Britain. Under a bilateral agreement with Turkey, the British Government agreed to purchase from Turkey in 1940 tobacco valued at 20,000,000 Turkish pounds, or 10 times the greatest amount ever used by the British manufacturers in a single year. At the same time, Great Britain announced that she would discontinue buying American tobacco, which amounted to a conservative estimate of $50,000,000 to American tobacco producers.

Nor is that all. Great Britain refused to allocate exchange for the purchase of American apples, pears, or automobiles. That was before she saw the pearly gates opening upon a lend-lease heaven.

On March 15, 1940, Great Britain announced that she would stop buying canned fruit from the United States, and on the 25th of the same month she announced that she would materially curtail her purchase of American cotton.

On October 18, 1939, she completed an agreement with Argentina for the purchase of 200,000 metric tons of Argentine beef. That is not what I would call a good-neighbor policy.

We have frequently been told by proponents of the trade-agreement program that beneficial results have come to America because of this program.

On March 8, 1940, the President made this statement:

> I can tell you this: Our reciprocal-trade program has brought results—results not only in better markets for our industrial goods, but in better markets for our farm goods—results which are mathematically proved in terms of pounds and bushels and dollars and cents.

Unfortunately for the President's contention the facts do not bear out his statement.

Here is the record—percentage of net exports of domestic production of agricultural products, taking the 5-year average for 1926–30, inclusive, and the year 1938 after the trade agreements had been in force for 4 years:

Commodity	Average 1926–30 percent	1938 [1] percent
Cotton, including linters [2]	54.0	28.1
Wheat, including flour	18.3	11.4
Corn, including meal	.7	2.6
Oats, including meal	.8	.4
Rye, including flour	29.5	1.4
Barley, including flour and malt	11.7	3.3
Rice, in terms of rough	23.5	19.0
Tobacco, unmanufactured	33.8	28.8
Pork, including lard	3.4	.8
Lard, including neutral	31.6	13.7

[2] Crop years, August to July.

Thus, it appears that instead of benefiting American agriculture, the trade-agreement program has actually damaged it. The market value of agricultural exports from the years 1932–39 declined nearly 10 percent.

In his message to Congress on March 2, 1934, the President said with reference to the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act:

> Important branches of our agriculture, such as cotton, tobacco, hog products, rice, cereal, and fruit raising will find expanded opportunities in foreign markets.

Those of our States growing cotton should be interested in the record of cotton under these trade agreements. In the crop years 1932 and 1933, 45.3 percent of all foreign-mill consumption was American cotton. After this marvelous program of the State Department had been in effect 4 years, the foreign mill consumption of American cotton had dropped from 45.3 percent to 21 percent, or less than half of what it was when the program started.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BUSHFIELD. I yield.

Mr. EASTLAND. I understood the Senator to state that under the program the foreign-mill consumption of American cotton had declined.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. That is correct.

Mr. EASTLAND. Does the Senator realize that that was caused by an attempt to place the price of American cotton above the world price, and that because of that attempt foreign industrial nations purchased foreign-grown cotton instead of American-grown cotton, because they could buy the foreign-grown cotton more cheaply? The trade agreements had nothing to do with it.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. I realize that at that time we had a Secretary of Agriculture who said that we did not want any foreign markets.

Mr. EASTLAND. Nevertheless, it is a fact that the decline was due to an attempt to hold the domestic price of American cotton above the world price level.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. Nevertheless, the amount of cotton we were selling abroad declined by more than half, whatever the reason was.

American agriculture has lost every round of the fight for foreign business, largely because of the failure of this country to protect itself. Our ancestors may have been Yankee traders but if they had done no better job than the present crop of Yankee traders, they would have lost their clipper ships to the heathens of China and India.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BUSHFIELD. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. Will the Senator repeat for me the amount of cotton consumed in American factories?

Mr. BUSHFIELD. I do not have those figures. My figures are for the amount of cotton consumed in foreign mills. It declined from 45.3 percent to 21 percent.

The Secretary of State is making a fight for the renewal of this authority unhampered by limiting amendments. He has warned Congress that the trade-pact extension bill as amended by the Senate Finance Committee "would serve notice to the world that the United States was headed straight back to the narrowest policy of economic isolation."

The facts in the case do not warrant such a statement, and I object to having the State Department or any other bureau of this Government set up straw men for the purpose of knocking them down. Let us stick to the facts and stop imagining terrible things that are going to happen in the future when there is no foundation for such imaginings. The Secretary—and I have every respect and personal regard for him—has repeatedly stated during the existence of these trade pacts, when a renewal was in process of being put through Congress, that they were necessary to help preserve the peace. Certainly these trade agreements did not prevent the present war, nor will they prevent future wars.

I have talked with the distinguished Secretary of State on two occasions. I have asked him three times to tell me why a requirement that the Congress have the ratification or approval of these trade pacts made any difference. I am still waiting for his answer. He did not answer the question, and has not answered it to this day. He did not answer it during the time I was in his office.

Nearly every one of the 30 nations with whom we have trade agreements requires approval or ratification of the agreements by its legislative bodies before they are binding; and yet, according to the proponents of this extension, for America to require the same thing would be to jeopardize the peace of the world.

Mr. Stalin is quoted as saying to our Government very definitely what it is he wants when this war is over.

Mr. Churchill said very definitely that he was not acting as Premier of Great Britain to liquidate the British Empire.

Who is there among all the bureaucrats and statesmen in Washington to say to the world that the American producer must be protected? The only answer which I have been able to get from the distinguished Secretary of State, either by reading his statements or by personal questioning, is that he says such limitations requiring ratification will not work, but no one has undertaken to explain why they will not work. If they work for Britain, France, Russia, and all the South American countries, certainly they can and will work for the United States of America.

I do not believe the amendment reported by the Senate Finance Committee goes far enough. Either the amendment submitted by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] or the one submitted by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] is far preferable to what the committee has reported.

The President stated at Butte, Mont., in 1932 that—

> A man's sincerity is measured by his acts rather than his words.

Let us be sincere and practical in dealing with this subject. We have grown into the habit of giving America away to every Tom, Dick, and Harry in the world who asks for it. Let us think of America for just a little while.

Referring further to America, I call the attention of the Senate to the testimony of Dr. John L. Coulter before the Ways and Means Committee given on April 20, 1943, in which he shows, in a careful and full analysis of this matter, that, excluding the countries whose trade has been interrupted by war and revolution, our exports to trade-agreement countries from 1938–40 were substantially less than they were with countries with which no trade agreements have been concluded.

The argument that failure to extend this act will be interpreted by other nations as evidence of policy of noncooperation is, in my opinion, pure bunk. Congress must decide whether the renewal of trade-agreements authority is essential to retain the good will of other nations, and nothing in the record, nothing in the history of our relations with other nations, indicates the slightest reason for believing that a limitation upon this act will cause friction with any of them.

There are those who say that if we attempt to put limitations upon the act, we will go back to the old way of making tariffs. To me that method is preferable to selling America down the river, which prevails under these trade agreements. But I must disagree with that statement. That, Mr. President, is not the issue at all in this debate. The making of a tariff is not in this picture. The tariff under which we are operating today was passed in 1930, and, although the New Deal Party has been in complete control of the Congress and the national administration for 10 years, no attempt has been made by that party to revise the Tariff Act of 1930, except as it has been revised through the side door of trade agreements.

The word reciprocity was long ago deleted from the law by the State Department. We have had no reciprocity for 10 years, because the advantage has been all on one side—the other fellow's side.

Reciprocity itself and reciprocal trade agreements are nothing new. They have been in effect in various ways in this country ever since the first President. It has been an announced and an established policy of the Republican Party since its birth. I doubt if there is any Senator in this Chamber who does not approve of reciprocity. But the question whether we approve or disapprove of reciprocity and reciprocal trade agreements is not an issue in this debate. The only question is whether or not the Congress shall recapture the power given to it by the Constitution to pass upon such agreements.

Much has been said in previous years to the effect that a reciprocal trade agreement is a treaty. Whether it is or not, I think we should bear in mind that there is a difference between a treaty and a trade agreement.

In the case of a treaty, it is an agreement with a foreign country, negotiated by the President or the State Department. After it is complete, it is submitted for ratification to the Senate.

A trade agreement, on the other hand, is based upon legislation already enacted by the Congress. The presently existing tariff law of this country, which I believe is known as the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act, is the law upon which this trade-agreement authority rests. The Congress passed the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act fixing certain duties upon certain articles of goods entering this country. It has been in full force and effect for many years. Neither the Democratic Party nor the Republican Party have seen fit to attempt to change that tariff act. Under the Trade Agreement Act provisions the authority granted to the President is to lower or raise the duties upon certain articles of goods coming into this country from foreign countries by not more than 50 percent in exchange for similar concessions from the particular foreign country.

There is nothing new in this legislation except in the form of this particular bill. From the days of George Washington down to the present, the Congress has repeatedly passed directive acts for the guidance of the executive branch of the Government in tariff legislation. In every one of them, however, we find a distinct difference from that contained in this act. That the act of 1934 is unconstitutional as a delegation of legislative power, is not open to serious debate.

But let us look at the historic record.

Congress passed and President Adams approved the act of 1798 suspending commercial intercourse between the United States and France and its dependencies and providing that if the Government of France before the next session of Congress shall clearly disavow and shall be found to refrain from the aggressions, depredations, and hostilities which have been and are by them encouraged and maintained against the vessels and other property of the United States, and against their national rights and sovereignty, in violation of the faith of treaties and the laws of nations, and shall thereby acknowledge the just claims of the United States, it shall be lawful for the President to limit and discontinue the prohibitions and restraints hereby enacted and declared.

The nonintercourse act of March 1, 1809, forbidding the importation, after May 20, of goods, wares, or merchandise from any port in Great Britain or France, provided that the President be, and he hereby is, authorized, in case either France or Great Britain shall so revoke or modify her edicts that they shall cease to violate the neutral commerce of the United States, to declare the same by proclamation, after which the trade suspended by that act can be renewed by the nation so doing.

An act approved June 4, 1794, while George Washington was President, authorized the President while Congress was not in session, "and whenever in his opinion the public safety shall so require, to lay an embargo on all ships and vessels in the United States or upon the ships and vessels of any foreign nations."

By the act of April 18, 1806, it was made unlawful to import into this country from Great Britain, Ireland, or any of the British colonies, articles such as leather, silk, hemp, flax, tin or brass, woolen clothes whose invoice price exceeded 5 shillings sterling per square yard, woolen hosiery, manufactures of glass, silver, and plated wares, nails, spikes, ready-made clothing, millinery, beer, ale, porter, pictures, and prints. In this act the President was given authority to suspend the operation of the act if in his judgment the public interest should require it.

In March 1815, under President Madison, the Congress passed a law providing that so much of the laws imposing duties upon the tonnage of ships and vessels and upon goods, wares and merchandise imported into the United States might be repealed by Presidential order under certain conditions.

In 1817 Congress prohibited the importation of plaster of paris when any other country prohibited the shipment of this commodity in United States vessels, and gave to the President authority to suspend such act by proclamation when reciprocity was granted to this country.

In 1824, the Congress passed an act wherein it was provided that, upon satisfactory evidence being given to the President by the government of any foreign nation that no discriminating duties of tonnage or impost were imposed or levied within the ports of such nation upon vessels of the United States or upon merchandise shipped therein, the President was authorized to issue a proclamation declaring that the foreign discriminating duties within the United States were suspended.

Similar sections were embodied in the acts of 1828, 1829, 1830, 1836, 1847, 1850, 1858, 1863, 1866, 1867, 1869, 1871, 1872, 1880, and 1884.

It will thus be seen, Mr. President, that the policy of reciprocity has been a long-established policy in this country, recognized by Congress and acted upon by the President.

The Tariff Act of 1922 enacted a similar clause, although at that time it was called the flexible tariff provision, and was known as section 315 of the 1922 Tariff Act. Under that act, the President was given authority to do many of the things provided in the 1934 act. But not until the act of 1934 has the Congress attempted to delegate to the President legislative power. That is the distinction between the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act and all the other acts that preceded it.

Under the act of 1934, Senators, the President may either lower or raise the rate of duty by 1 percent, by 10 percent, by 20 percent, by 50 percent. The President may select any figure that his fancy may dictate up to 50 percent, and in that manner, Senators, he is given the power to legislate tariff duties for this country. It is not an administrative duty thus delegated; it is a legislative discretion delegated to him under the act.

In support of that contention I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the case of Marshall Field Co. v. Clark (143 U. S. 649). This case arose out of an act of Congress in 1890. The provision of the act in question reads as follows:

> That with a view to secure reciprocal trade with countries producing the following articles, and for this purpose, on and after the first day of January 1892, whenever, and so often as the President shall be satisfied that the government of any country producing and exporting sugars, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, imposes duties upon the agricultural or other products of the United States, which in view of the free introduction of such sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides into the United States, he may deem to be reciprocally unequal and unreasonable, he shall have the power and it shall be his duty to suspend, by proclamation the provision of this act.

Other tariff enactments, from the very beginning of this country, gave the President power to act administratively, either to abrogate or put off the tariffs which the Congress had enacted, but none of them, until 1934, ever gave him the power to decide the amount of the tariff and the articles covered by the tariff.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BUSHFIELD. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does not the Senator agree that in the act of 1934, which was renewed in 1937 and 1940, various specific limitations were laid down for the President of the United States?

Mr. BUSHFIELD. Within 100 percent, yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Not within 100 percent, but within 50 percent. He can change the rates only 50 percent. So far as the limitation as to the amount is concerned, it is exactly the same as the provision contained in the Smoot-Hawley law. The act also lays down certain other standards as to what the President must find before he can enter into one of these agreements, very much more specific and very much more limited than was contained in the very act to which the Senator referred, which was upheld in the case of Marshall Field Co. against Clark.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. The limitation imposed by the act of 1934 provides that the President may lower the tariff duties by 50 percent or raise them by 50 percent, within his discretion.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That was the discretion granted in the Smoot-Hawley Act, except in somewhat different terms, was it not?

Mr. BUSHFIELD. That is very true.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Except that in this case the President takes into consideration the benefit of the foreign trade of the United States, whereas in the other case he could only act after a finding by the Tariff Commission, within very narrow limits. The limits were certainly as specific in the act of 1934 as in the Smoot-Hawley Act, and I think the Senator must agree to that if he compares the two acts.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. I have compared them minutely for several days. The limits are within 50 percent, up or down.

It will be seen that the act we are now considering does not go anywhere near as far as the act of 1934. The majority opinion of the court in the case last cited, written by Justice Harlan, held it was not a delegation of legislative power to the President, but in the majority opinion is this statement:

That Congress cannot delegate legislative power to the President is a principle universally recognized as vital to the integrity and maintenance of the system of government ordained by the Constitution.

The majority held this act of 1890 was not unconstitutional, because no discretion was given to the President, as we find in the act of 1934. He could either suspend the duties or not, but he could not determine what the duties should be.

The court, quoting Judge Ramey, of the Supreme Court of Ohio, says:

"The true distinction is between the delegation of power to make the law, which necessarily involves a discretion as to what it shall be, and conferring authority or discretion as to its execution, to be exercised under and in pursuance of the law. The first cannot be done; to the latter no valid objection can be made" (Cincinnati, Wilmington, etc. Railroad v. Commissioners, 1 Ohio St. 88). In Moers v. City of Reading (21 Penn. St. 188, 202) the language of the court was: "Half the statutes on our books are in the alternative, depending on the discretion of some person or persons to whom is confided the duty of determining whether the proper occasion exists for executing them. But it cannot be said that the exercise of such discretion is the making of the law." So, in Locke's Appeal (72 Penn. St. 491, 498): "To assert that a law is less than a law, because it is made to depend on a future event or act, is to rob the legislature of the power to act wisely for the public welfare whenever a law is passed relating to a state of affairs not yet developed, or to things future and impossible to fully know." The proper distinction the court said was this: "The legislature cannot delegate its power to make a law; but it can make a law to delegate a power to determine some fact or state of things upon which the law makes, or intends to make, its own action depend. To deny this would be to stop the wheels of government. There are many things upon which wise and useful legislation must depend which cannot be known to the lawmaking power and must, therefore, be a subject of inquiry and determination outside of the halls of legislation.

Chief Justice Fuller and Justice Lamar wrote a strong dissenting opinion to this majority opinion:

But the proposition maintained in the opinion that the third section, known as the reciprocity provision, is valid and constitutional legislation does not command our assent, and we desire to state very briefly the ground of our dissent from it. We think that this particular provision is repugnant to the first section of the first article of the Constitution of the United States, which provides that "all legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives." That no part of this legislative power can be delegated by Congress to any other department of the Government, executive or judicial, is an axiom in constitutional law, and is universally recognized as a principle essential to the integrity and maintenance of the system of government ordained by the Constitution. The legislative power must remain in the organ where it is lodged by that instrument. We think that the section in question does delegate legislative power to the executive department, and also commits to that department matters belonging to the treaty-making power, in violation of paragraph 2 of the second section of article II of the Constitution.

We do not think that legislation of this character is sustained by any decision of this Court, or by precedents in congressional legislation numerous enough to be properly considered as the practice of the Government.

These enactments, in our opinion, transferred no legislative power to the President. The legislation was purely contingent. It provided for an ascertainment by the President of an event in the future, an event defined in the act and directed to be evidenced by his proclamation. It also prescribed the consequences which were to follow upon that proclamation. Such proclamation was wholly in the nature of an executive act, a prescribed mode of ascertainment, which involved no exercise by the President of what belonged to the lawmaking power. The supreme will of Congress would have been enforced whether the event provided for had or had not happened, either in the continuance of the restrictions, on the one hand, or on the other, in their suspension.

But the purpose and effect of the section now under consideration are radically different. It does not, as was provided in the statutes of 1809 and 1810, entrust the President with the ascertainment of a fact therein defined upon which the law is to go into operation. It goes further than that, and deputes to the President the power to suspend another section in the same act whenever "he may deem" the action of any foreign nation producing and exporting the articles named in that section to be "reciprocally unequal and unreasonable"; and it further deputes to him the power to continue that suspension and to impose revenue duties on the articles named "for such time as he may deem just." This certainly extends to the Executive the exercise of those discretionary powers which the Constitution has vested in the lawmaking department. It unquestionably vests in the President the power to regulate our commerce with all foreign nations which produce sugar, tea, coffee, molasses, hides, or any of such articles; and to impose revenue duties upon them for a length of time limited solely by his discretion, whenever he deems the revenue system or policy of any nation in which those articles are produced reciprocally unequal and unreasonable in its operation upon the products of this country.

These features of this section are, in our opinion, in palpable violation of the Constitution of the United States, and serve to distinguish it from the legislative precedents which are relied upon to sustain it, as the practice of the Government. None of these legislative precedents, save the one above referred to, have, as yet, undergone review by this Court or been sustained by its decision. And if there be any congressional legislation which may be construed as delegating to the President the power to suspend any law exempting any importations from duty, or to reimpose revenue duties on them, upon his own judgment as to what constitutes in the revenue policy of other countries a fair and reasonable reciprocity, such legislative precedents cannot avail as authority against a clear and undoubted principle of the Constitution.

Mr. President, I oppose the extension of this act in its present form for three reasons:

First. It is unconstitutional, and the Supreme Court has never overruled or altered the case of Marshall Field against Clark. It is still the law;

Second. If this act is renewed without limitations it will result in a definite injury to the American farmer; and Third. The most-favored-nation clause is a vicious provision, which will in time destroy the farm producers of the United States.

We all hope we are approaching a decision in the present war. A peace treaty will follow. I am opposed, as was so ably presented by the Senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] the other day, to turning over to any individual the full power and authority of this Government, to trade away the rights and privileges and property of American citizens without ratification by the representatives of the people.

The power to make these agreements without the ratification of Congress constitutes the blue chips in the poker game of international power politics.

In the formation of a peace treaty the protection of the civilian population is more important than imposing terms upon the defeated enemy. If our rights as American citizens are given away or traded away by the President for the glamor or the exalted personal glory of world ruler, the American people will have been sadly cheated. Those who deal in world politics become so intoxicated with the glamor and adulation given them that the rights of the people are apt to be forgotten.

Today, we have the amazing spectacle in our supposedly free America of the denial to the press of this country and to the Members of Congress of the privilege and right of attending the International Conference on Food, now being held within 100 miles of this Capitol. Secrecy, manipulation behind the scenes, undisclosed negotiations of which the American people know nothing are the reasons why we demand the right to pass upon this administration's deals made with other nations.

Secretary Hull has demanded that this Trade Agreement Act be renewed without limitations, because he contends that any other action will be notice to the world that the United States will be heading straight back to the policies of economic isolation.

Mr. Hull assured the people on three different occasions that the enactment of his legislation would keep us out of war. His predictions failed so miserably that we are not to be blamed if we are somewhat skeptical today.

The American people are watching this debate today to determine whether or not the Congress has the courage and farsightedness to demand control over this great power. Sooner or later we must serve notice upon the world that foreign commitments made by the President are not binding until and unless they have the approval of the Congress. This is our opportunity to give that notice. Let us notify the world by our action here today that commitments made by this administration are only binding when ratified by Congress.

Mr. President, let us put an end to this one-man government. Let us reassure the American people that Congress is on watch. Let us notify the world that the Congress is the representative of the American people. Let us remember that we were sent here to see that America is preserved for Americans.

In conclusion, what is the picture? Enactment into law of the pending joint resolution will not prevent war. That has been completely demonstrated in our present tragic foreign war.

It will benefit only foreign nations to the positive detriment of American producers.

It will not create a good-neighbor feeling with other nations, as has been proven by the actions of those other nations in negotiating 98 bilateral treaties to our detriment while our own trade agreements were in force.

Our action must be such that it will serve notice on other nations that commitments by the Executive of this country are not binding until ratified by the Congress.

And last of all, but most important of all, the measure is unconstitutional, because it is a plain delegation of legislative power to the President and should be killed.

PERSECUTION OF THE JEWS

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, and my colleagues of the Senate, on Sunday, May 23, the people of the United States paid homage to some of our valiant fighting men, the American Jewish heroes. We honored them not because their bravery exceeds that of Americans of other faiths, but because they are an inseparable part of our courageous American forces who are fighting the scourge of totalitarian oppression.

Where else in the world, Mr. President, could such a group be so honored? Not in Nazi Germany and the occupied countries where the pagan philosophy of Adolf Hitler has found evil expression in both Jewish and Christian persecution. Not in the Nazi satellite countries which are doing their best to ape the sadistic Nazi program.

No, Mr. President. Thank God, in these free United States we can hold up our heads and pay honor where honor is due. We can express our gratitude to the men—all the men—who are sharing in the hardships of this war and contributing to the glory of our victory. Freedom of gratitude and freedom to express that gratitude is a part of America's heritage.

Senators will recall the action of Barney Ross, the fighting Jewish Marine who, returning from Guadalcanal, stepped down from the gangplank and kissed the ground. He said:

> This I vowed to do if I ever saw American soil again.

Barney Ross is typical of the thousands of Jews in our armed forces who are fighting for America. So was Sgt. Meyer Levin, who, together with Capt. Colin P. Kelly, Jr., sank the first Japanese battleship in this war and who later gave his life for his country.

We are proud and grateful to have had a team like Kelly and Levin fighting for us.

Indeed, the Kellys and Levins in our history have helped to make America the land that it is. They shed their blood in the Revolutionary War, helped extend our frontiers, built up our trade and commerce, and contributed to our music and literature and art and drama.

Who was it that our country dispatched with secret documents to Benjamin Franklin in Paris during the Revolutionary War? A Jew, Col. David Salisbury Franks. Who was it that repeatedly staved off mutiny in the Colonial Army by turning over his entire fortune to pay the Revolutionary forces? A Polish-born Jew, Haym Salomon.

The Jew has stood by this country in vicissitude and in triumph. When the War of 1812 threatened our sea lanes, a Jewish hero, Commander John Ordroneaux, saved his ship from the British by running to the powder magazine with a lighted match and warning his crew that he would blow up the vessel if they retreated.

Many Jewish volunteers shed their blood in the Civil War. Seven won the highest award for bravery that this country offers—the Congressional Medal. Throughout the South the word "front-hall" became synonymous for valor because of the exploits of a Jewish soldier, Max Frauenthal.

The story is the same for every war in America's history. A Jew, Col. Joseph Heller, was the first volunteer in the Spanish-American War, and a Jew was the first man to fall in the attack at Manila.

The deeds of the Jewish boys in the Seventy-seventh Division and the "lost battalion" of the last war are still fresh in our memories. Gen. John J. Pershing stated that the 250,000 Jews who served in the Army during the last World War had no superiors for bravery in action, devotion to duty, and unhesitating sacrifice.

Mr. President and my colleagues, is it any wonder that this country recognizes its debt of gratitude to its Jewish heroes?

The part that Jewish servicemen are playing in this war is a matter of public record. Let me recall for you a part of that record?

The first boy to lose his life from Newark, N. J., was Private Louis Schleifer; the first from Delaware was Sergeant Harry Fineman; Connecticut's first casualty was Kenneth Harold Messenger; the first body to be returned to the United States for burial from the Pacific battle zone was that of Marine Sergeant Herbert Keilson; the first fatality from Minneapolis was Ensign Ira Weil Jeffrey, who received a posthumous award for valor; the first known fatality among the membership of the American Bar Association was Ensign Robert L. Leopold. The first close personal friend of mine to give his life in this war was Capt. Jacob Joseph of New York City who fell on Guadalcanal.

Lt. Roy Bright piloted the first plane to land on Wake Island just prior to the outbreak of the war, and has since been awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross and the Silver Star for gallantry in action. Sgt. Chester Davis was in the first American air raid on Nazi-held Europe. Lt. Col. A. H. Rosenberg led the first American troops into Algiers.

Chaplain Alexander Goode was the first Jewish chaplain to lose his life, when he and three other chaplains aboard a torpedoed ship gave their life preservers to members of the crew.

Wherever the American flag has gone, Jewish soldiers have followed. They are fighting on every battlefield of this war. They were at Pearl Harbor when it was attacked so treacherously by the Japanese. They were fighting in the foxholes of Bataan and Corregidor. A Jew, David Goodman, was one of the "expendables" who helped bring General MacArthur out of Corregidor. Another Jew, Irving Strobing, stuck to his wireless post, tapping out the last brave words of a hopeless fight, and gave his stirring message to the world.

Jewish servicemen followed the spread of war into the Pacific and on to the far-flung battle fronts of the Aleutian Islands, China, Russia, and the Mediterranean. They are fighting over Europe and in north Africa.

It is not possible now to tell the whole story of Jewish participation in this war. It is still in the making—in the heat and dust of land battle, on the high seas, through the long stretches of the air.

It is no wonder, however, that Rear Admiral John F. Shafroth, commander of the United States naval forces in the southeast Pacific, was recently moved to say to his Jewish fighting men, "Your people, your country, and your Navy are proud of you."

Mr. President, it is no coincidence that a few weeks ago the Christian churches set aside a day of compassion for the Jews in Europe. For every Christian knows that an attack on the Jews is also an attack on Christianity, on religion, and on civilization as a whole.

Both Protestant and Catholic church leaders in this country have raised their voices time and time again in protest against the cruelties inflicted upon Jews in Nazi-occupied Europe.

Let me read you in part the declaration adopted by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America at their last biennial meeting in December. That document stated:

> The reports which are reaching us concerning the incredible cruelties toward the Jews in Nazi-occupied countries, particularly Poland, stir the Christian people of America to the deepest sympathy and indignation.
> It is impossible to avoid a conclusion that something like a policy of deliberate extermination of the Jews in Europe is being carried out. The violence and inhumanity which Nazi leaders have publicly avowed toward all Jews are apparently now coming to a climax in virtual massacre. We are resolved to do our full part in establishing conditions in which such treatment of the Jews will end.

Here is another ringing indictment of Hitler's anti-Jewish policy. It was made at the beginning of this year by the Church Peace Union. After expressing its horror and indignation at the cruelties now being visited upon all the people now subject to Nazi tyranny, the Church Peace Union said:

> We join all civilized men in a demand that in the post-war world there be established a political, economic, and social status for Jews and Judaism consistent with the requirements of decency and democracy; that Jews shall be free men; and that the Jewish tradition shall be free to fulfill itself.

To repeat for you the great volume of protest made by the Protestant churches would be impossible. The Methodist bishops have declared that the United States is at war because—and I quote—"there has arisen in the world a pagan philosophy driven by un-Christian motives and bent upon establishing its will upon mankind."

What can be more pagan, Mr. President, than willfully destroying one's fellow men?

Leaders of the Baptist Church have called upon all Christian people to "proclaim the principle of religious liberty" for "all tribes, nations, and races."

Cincinnati's 300 Protestant churches read a pastoral letter not long ago which said:

> The conscience of Christian men cries out in agony and protest when their fellow children of God, the helpless and inoffensive Jews of Poland and Bessarabia, Russian Ukraine, Austria, Belgium, Holland, and France, are tortured and uprooted and put to death by the barbarians of fascism.

Among the many other Protestant bodies which have publicly denounced anti-Semitism are the National Lutheran Council, the Disciples of Christ, the Reformed Church of America, the Northern Baptist Convention, the Quakers, the International Christian Endeavor Society, the Congregational and Christian Churches, and the National Conference of Methodist Youth.

The Roman Catholic Church in this country has likewise made countless utterances against the persecution of Christians and Jews by the Nazis. In doing so it is following the fundamental teachings of the Catholic Church. The late Pope Pius XI stated in 1938:

> Abraham was called our patriarch, our ancestor. Anti-Semitism is not compatible with the sublime reality of this text; it is a movement which we Christians cannot share—no, it is not possible for Christians to take part in anti-Semitism. Spiritually, we are all Semites.

Let me repeat that last sentence of the late Pope. "Spiritually, we are all Semites." To sanction anti-Semitism, my friends, is to destroy our spiritual selves.

The Roman Catholic hierarchy of the United States, in an important pronouncement made last November, stated:

> We feel a deep sense of revulsion against the cruel indignities heaped upon the Jews in conquered countries and upon defenseless peoples not of our faith.
> We raise our voices in protest against despotic tyrants who have lost all sense of humanity by condemning thousands of innocent persons to death in subjugated countries as acts of reprisal, by placing other thousands of innocent victims in concentration camps, and by permitting unnumbered persons to die of starvation.

Mr. President, that is the attitude of Christians in the United States. We can have no part in anti-Semitism. We will fight to the end any doctrine, any political movement, any totalitarian leader who espouses this cruel and uncivilized program against human rights.

With your permission, I should like to quote for you excerpts from two additional statements made by Christian groups who also condemn the poison of race hatred.

The Pastors' Association of the National Protestant Church of Geneva defined its spiritual position by declaring:

> In the strength of the conviction of our evangelical faith, we call the members of our churches to resist any attempt to introduce among us the conceptions of a racialistic anti-Semitism which is condemned by the spirit of our Lord and by our whole tradition based upon Holy Scripture.

Mr. President, could anything be clearer than that? The spirit of Christ, the tradition of Christianity, condemn anti-Semitism.

Now let me read in part a manifesto signed by 43 prominent European Catholics who are refugees from Nazi-occupied Europe. Those Catholics, who saw with their own eyes what Hitler was doing to the European Jews, stated:

> By attacking that people from whom Christ came forth, anti-Semitism shows itself as anti-Christian in its very root. Contrary to Christianity is every doctrine which, by error or by hatred, makes naught of men's exercise of their natural rights by reason of their ethnic or religious affiliations.

Then the 43 signers went on to say:

> Every law of "exceptions" or of "discrimination" is unjust. And furthermore we know that Christians must not only take care of themselves and their interests, but of the good of all their brothers and of the fate of justice and of law, and that the hideous racial, religious, and political persecutions which today engulf the world in blood strike at the heart of each one of us insofar as he belongs to Christ.

What the manifesto is saying is that an attack on the Jews is an attack on each one of us. We are together in this fight—Christians and Jews—and we are fighting the same battle.

In Hitler's own country the Christian leaders are lined up against him. The great Archbishop of Munich, Cardinal Faulhaber, not only denounced the treatment of the Jews, but worked with the Chief Rabbi of Bavaria to save valuable objects from the Munich synagogue when the Nazis tore it down in October of 1938. He stored these holy Jewish objects in his own quarters to preserve them from Nazi violence.

When Nazi posters were displayed in Munich, saying "Away with Faulhaber, the friend of the Jews," what was the answer of Cardinal Faulhaber?

He said:

> You can see in this town of Munich the destruction which blind racial hatred has caused. We Christians must love every race, as Christian love and charity are fundamental commandments of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Though his dwelling was attacked by Nazi mobs, the great Cardinal remained firm in his determination to uphold the God-given rights of all persons.

Conrad Count von Preysing, the Roman Catholic Bishop of Berlin, is another German churchman who has dared to tell the Nazis that they commit wrong. In a pastoral letter last December, which I had the privilege of reading before this body not long ago, Bishop von Preysing condemned Nazi theories as being contrary to "the absolute sovereign power of God."

The Bishop of Munster, August Count von Galen, told his congregation in March that the German defeat at Stalingrad was a punishment for the Nazi persecution of peoples in occupied countries and especially of the Jews.

Here is what all the Catholic bishops in Germany told the Nazis in a pastoral letter this spring:

Before the authorities we stand up for religious and clerical rights, but likewise for the human rights bestowed by God on mankind.

Although many of the Protestant Church leaders in Germany have been thrown into concentration camps for their beliefs, the German Evangelical Church also has stood firm. Bishop Wurm, of Wurttemberg, only recently sent an open letter to Minister of Propaganda Joseph Goebbels condemning the anti-Christian philosophy of the Nazis.

Mr. President, what is happening in the brave occupied countries? I will try to give you a brief picture of the courageous action taken in defense of the Jews by Christian leaders in these subjugated lands—action which they have taken at tremendous risk to themselves.

In France, both Protestant and Catholic clergymen not only have spoken against the mass deportation of the Jews but they also have sheltered and fed their persecuted brethren. Many churchmen have been arrested by the Nazis because of their opposition to anti-Semitic decrees.

The National Council of the Reformed Church of France, which represents French Protestants, protested formally in letters to the highest French authorities against the application of measures against the Jews. The Archbishop of Lyons, Pierre Cardinal Gerlier, told the Catholics that it was their duty not to surrender Jewish children whom they were hiding from the Nazis.

Only last February a high-ranking Nazi official summoned Cardinal Gerlier to him and demanded that the French clergy cease their opposition to Nazi anti-Jewish measures. Cardinal Gerlier told the German commandant that the French clergy was responsible not to the Germans but to the commands of the Pope. Then the French cardinal reminded this Nazi official:

Doubtless Your Excellency knows that the Holy Father has condemned the anti-Jewish laws and measures against the Jews.

In Belgium, although church leaders have been arrested and executed for defying the Nazis, Belgian Christians are still being told by their clergy to pray every day for the persecuted and tortured Jewish brethren.

The Catholic and Protestant Churches in Holland have fought against the mistreatment of the Jews by both separate and joint action. The General Synod of the Dutch Reformed Church took its stand against Jewish persecution by saying:

The commandment of the Saviour to love our neighbors applies to them as it does to any other neighbor. When the authorities exceed the limits of their mandate and their demands are contrary to God's commandments, the words of the apostle should be observed: "We must obey God rather than man."

The Roman Catholic hierarchy in Holland issued a pastoral letter condemning the unmerciful and unjust treatment meted out to the Jews by those in power in our country.

So unanimous are both churches in the condemnation of Nazi brute methods that the Protestants and Catholics of Holland sent a joint open letter to the Reich Commissioner of the Netherlands last February protesting the persecution of religious minorities.

The Netherlands Information Bureau in this country has made public an underground letter which all the Christian churches of Holland circulated last summer. Exposing the inhuman measures taken by the Nazis to deport some 120,000 Jewish Netherlanders, the letter added:

This is a cool résumé of the facts which in harshness and businesslike efficiency are only paralleled by the orders of the Egyptian Pharoah who had all Jewish male children killed, and by the action of Herodus, the anti-Semite, who, in order to kill Jesus, murdered all infants in arms of Bethlehem. Now, thousands of years later, Hitler and his henchmen have taken their places in the ranks of those tyrants.

In Denmark, despite the heel of the Nazi oppressor, Danish clergymen have made their protests heard in the official church press. The Church Gazette of Sonderbourg carried an article which said:

Hatred of the Jews is prompted by the demand for a scapegoat. * * * We will not lend our support to the introduction of anti-Jewish laws. Jew hatred is an infectious disease to which the innate sense of justice of the Danish people will not permit them to succumb. It is a disease that we shall cast out from our midst. Shame upon us if we ever allow ourselves to fall victims to it.

The Danish pastors' journal printed an article by Dean Johannes Nordentoft, a well-known church leader, who said:

As the authorities will not act, the Christians must be amongst the first to fight this dirty anti-Semitism. Those who remain silent, or look upon anti-Semitism with only a mild distaste, are accomplices in the campaign of hate.

The Norwegian Church, whose brave leader, Bishop Eivind Berggrav, has entered his second year of imprisonment, and who was not even allowed by the Nazis to see his wife when she was gravely ill, has led the fight in Norway against Jewish persecution.

The Norwegian Church Council, in a protest to the Nazi puppet premier of Norway, Vidkun Quisling, said:

In the name of Jesus Christ we admonish the secular authorities to stop the persecution of Jews and to stop the spread of race hatred which is being disseminated throughout the land.

By keeping silent while this legalized unfairness against the Jews continues, we ourselves become a responsible accessory to its continuance. If we remain true to the Word of God and the confession of our church, we are forced to speak out. It is the God-inspired duty of the church to express disapproval when secular authorities commit wrongs.

Mr. President and my colleagues, every right-thinking country in the world is incensed at the Nazi violation of our Judaio-Christian tradition of tolerance and liberty. We are all together in this fight—not only the United Nations against the Axis but also the united Christians and Jews against Nazi paganism.

For if Adolf Hitler has made the vow that "the present struggle will not end with annihilation of Aryan mankind but with the extermination of the Jews in Europe," he has also said: "One is either a German or a Christian. You cannot be both."

Hitler's henchman, Alfred Rosenberg, made this telling statement:

I am absolutely clear in my own mind, and I think I can speak for the Fuehrer as well, that both the Catholic Church and the Evangelical Confessional Church, as they exist at present, must vanish from the life of our people.

Mr. President, this is a fight to the death between two philosophies. It is one war, and there can be but one outcome. Let us vow that none of our brave American soldiers, Christians and Jews alike, are going to shed their blood in vain. Let us resolve that a free and victorious future will reestablish God's kingdom upon the earth, and that the right to honor all men deserving of honor will be shared by all the nations of the world.

Mr. President, in connection with the celebration of American Jewish Heroes Day, the following letter was addressed to Dr. Stephen S. Wise by Stephen Early, secretary to the President:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, May 17, 1943.

Dr. STEPHEN S. WISE,
Chairman, United Jewish War Effort,
New York, N. Y.

DEAR DR. WISE: This acknowledges your letter of March 14, addressed to the President, requesting a message from him in connection with the observance of American Jewish Heroes Day, particularly in connection with the luncheon to be given on May 23 in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Levin, parents of the late Master Sgt. Meyer Levin, who was Colin Kelly's bombardier and who later lost his life rescuing his comrades in the Pacific war zone.

May I explain to you that this request comes at a time when the President is devoting his time day and night to prolonged conferences with the British Prime Minister and with other high officials. It seems necessary therefore, for the time being, for him to devote all of his energy to his war duties.

In the circumstances, may I ask you to accept this assurance of the President's good wishes. He hopes the observance of American Jewish Heroes Day will inspire all who participate with a renewed appreciation of the sacrifices made by American Jewish heroes and their contributions to the upbuilding of our free institutions.

Very sincerely yours,

STEPHEN EARLY,
Secretary to the President.

The following letter was sent by the Secretary of State to Dr. Wise:

THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
Washington, May 22, 1943.

Rabbi STEPHEN S. WISE,
Chairman, United Jewish War Effort,
New York, N. Y.

DEAR RABBI WISE: I have received your letter of May 14 informing me of the ceremony in observance of American Jewish Heroes Day being arranged for May 23. I should appreciate it if you would extend my cordial greetings to those participating in this tribute to the valor and sacrifice of American Jewish heroes who have lost their lives in defense of our country. There is no more inspiring feature of our national war effort than the wholehearted devotion with which all Americans, irrespective of race or religion, are performing their duty of citizenship in this grave national crisis. American Jewry has every reason to be proud of the patriotism of Jewish youth in this struggle for the preservation of freedom.

Sincerely yours,

CORDELL HULL.

From the Hon. Frank Knox, Secretary of the Navy, came the following telegram addressed to Dr. Stephen Wise:

MAY 19, 1943.

DR. STEPHEN S. WISE,
Chairman, United Jewish War Effort, New York:

I welcome this opportunity to send my greetings to you on the occasion of American Jewish Heroes Day. Ever since the founding of the Republic American Jews have served heroically in its armed forces. Throughout the years they have proved their unselfish devotion to the Nation and to the ideals which it strives to represent. Once again American Jews are fighting and dying to protect and preserve our precious freedom. The Navy is proud to salute its officers and men of Jewish faith whose courage and patriotism have contributed so much to the struggle against the common enemy of mankind.

FRANK KNOX.

From General MacArthur, on the occasion of the American Jewish National Heroes Day, comes the following message:

Every page of American history belies the enemy claim that one race is superior to another. That doctrine is as wrong morally as it is false scientifically. In peace and in war our country's noblest tradition as well as the best security for our future is the doctrine that each citizen shall be weighed on his merits and not by his inheritance. The searing fires of this war have again and again put to the test the fighting qualities of our men and women. As Colin Kelly and his bombardier, Meyer Levin, so well exemplified, we have met the challenge, whether Catholic or Protestant, Jew or gentile. On May 23, specially set aside in their honor, I am proud to join with you in saluting the memory of fallen American heroes of the Jewish faith.

Admiral Halsey sent an airmailgram containing the following statement:

The Jewish heritage, has been one of suffering and sorrow. Jews have always fought against oppression, seeking freedom for themselves and for all peoples. We are proud to have the Jews in our ranks. Their deeds furnish unshakable proof of their courage and loyalty to our common cause—the worldwide preservation of freedom.

INCREASED ALLOWANCES FOR DEPENDENTS OF MEMBERS OF MILITARY FORCES

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, all evidence now at the disposal of the Congress points to the early induction of men with families into the armed services of the United States. The induction of men with family responsibilities represents a grave and serious undertaking—an undertaking which poses problems of considerable magnitude for the Government of the United States and for the many millions of American citizens who will be directly and indirectly affected by such a policy.

As for me, personally, Mr. President, I have long hoped—as I still hope—that the needs of our armed forces may be fully and properly met without the induction of the American family man. For, indeed, we all know that the American family is the most fundamental and necessary of all the American institutions. I sincerely question the validity of any policy which seeks to invade the sanctity of the home, to break up the family, to induct the head of that family into the armed forces, and to force the remainder of that family to work out its own destiny in a war-torn world. Mr. President, I sincerely question both the merit and need of such a drastic policy at this time. I sincerely trust that ways and means will be found to meet all essential military requirements without resorting to any such all-emcompassing and dangerous policy as that to which this Government is apparently now committed.

But in the event that such a policy is carried out—and there is every reason to believe that it will be—it is the responsibility of this Government to see to it that the terrific burdens which will fall upon the wives and families of the men who are inducted are eased and cushioned in every way possible. No man should be taken into the armed forces without full and complete assurance that all those dependent upon him for support will be fully and amply provided for during his absence. No family, because of the military induction of its main means of support, should be permitted to disintegrate, to fall into a reduced standard of living, or to become a charitable charge in any way whatever. We owe it to ourselves, we owe it to the men in service, and we owe it to America, to see to it that none of these conditions ever comes to pass in our country.

Mr. President, there is not one among us who is not aware of the fact that the costs of living have been tremendously increased throughout this country during recent years. There is not one among us who is not aware that the proper development and nurturing of the average American family require the expenditure of many more dollars than were formerly required. There is not one among us who cannot comprehend the tremendous problems—both economic and social—which will come to the wives and families of the men who, according to all available data, are soon to be inducted into the armed forces. In view of these conditions, and in view of the further fact that there is no reason to believe that these conditions will be appreciably improved, I submit this Government should take immediate action to see to it that the Servicemen's Dependent Allowance Act of 1942 is amended, and that such allotments are increased to a point which will insure the full and proper maintenance of all individuals and families who are completely or partially dependent upon any man who is called upon to serve in the armed forces.

Mr. President, the distinguished and able Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has already foreseen the necessity for taking immediate action in this regard. And he has, therefore, introduced a bill (S. 1131) designed to increase the Government's portion of these allotments by 15 percent. Mr. President, the able Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is to be commended for the action thus taken. Indeed, Mr. President, in my sincere opinion an increase should be immediately forthcoming, if the wives and families of the men in service are to be assured a freedom from want and a freedom from fear of want. Surely this Government, which is exerting its every power to prevent and curtail suffering throughout the world, should deem it an inescapable duty to make certain that those dependents of our men in service are amply and fully provided for. Surely, Mr. President, the American way of life, the American family and the American home are worthy of our most determined consideration and our most complete protection.

I am asking no gift, I am asking no charity when I call upon the Government to increase these allotments. The services which have been and which shall be rendered on our behalf by brave Americans now under arms lie far beyond any power of compensation we may possess. Indeed the very blows they are striking, the punishment they are taking are keeping this country and its people secure. The very least that we can do is to make a full and proper provision for the dependents of these men who do and will fight the battles of liberty for us.

Mr. President, as an indication of the serious light in which this matter is held, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, a telegram which I recently received from Mr. William M. Leader, a member of Selective Service Appeal Board I–A in the State of Pennsylvania, in which he calls attention to the serious problems which will follow upon the induction of heads of families into the armed service, and properly urges that servicemen's dependency allotments be fully and properly increased.

There being no objection, the telegram was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PHILADELPHIA, PA., May 21, 1943.

HON. JAMES J. DAVIS,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

With the day fast approaching when millions of fathers will be inducted into the armed forces of our country which will mean, under the present Government allotments to dependents, a drastic lowering of the American standard of living, let us not wait as we did before for a whole year before the Congress acted to give the American soldiers an American wage, but let us recognize at once the hardships that the women and children of this country face with present dependent allotments which, for a woman with three children, amounts to $82 per month.

As a member of Appeal Board I–A of Pennsylvania, under the Selective Service Act, and having acted on approximately 10,000 cases of appeals in the past 3 years, I am surely aware of what this problem will bring and its effect on the morale of the fighting father, who will be a much better soldier if his loved ones at home are adequately cared for. We owe it to our country and we owe it to our men in the armed forces to pay back, in a small way, the security which is possible for us because of our men and women in uniform, to grant these men sufficient income for their families and to assume other responsibilities that most of them have and will be so poorly prepared to abandon when they will so shortly be called upon to enter our Government's fighting forces, I urge you to introduce, or support, necessary legislation in Congress which will raise the Government allotments for dependent children from $10 and $12 per month to $25 for each child, and for dependent wives and mothers from $15 and $28 per month to $35.- Under this system, a father, with three children, inducted into the armed forces would be entitled to $132 per month for his family against the present $82 which they now receive. A high American standard of living is, after all, our most powerful defense against any enemy. So let's not wait until the actual suffering in this situation begins on a big scale before we act. May I have an early answer as to what reaction this thought brings and if you are sympathetic to this problem, what action you propose?

WILLIAM M. LEADER,
Member, Pennsylvania Appeal Board I-A, Philadelphia, Pa.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I repeat the hope that the necessary military needs of our Government will be met without the induction of family men, but I submit that mere hope will not forestall what now appears to be an inevitable development. I therefore urge the Congress immediately to take whatever action may be necessary to increase these dependency allotments to a point commensurate with the American standard of living and the American standards of health, safety and human welfare. Let us act now. Let us not wait until want, suffering, and chaos are upon us before we move into action to protect the mothers, wives, and children of those gallant American men who may be called upon at any hour to risk life and limb in the immediate defense of their country.

EXTENSION OF RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 111) to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I supported the Trade Agreements Act in 1934 when it was originally enacted and on the past two occasions in 1937 and 1940, when the act was renewed for 3-year periods. I intend again to support its renewal.

I wish to discuss the broad policy considerations involved in this issue. Our responsibility as a legislative body is to lay down sound and wise policies; and if we are to fulfill that responsibility today as befits the Senate of the United States we must not permit our deliberations and our decisions to be diverted.

There are many important policy aspects of the trade-agreements program. Some of us will be concerned with the relationship of this issue to the question of laying the foundations for a just and durable peace. Others will dwell on the relationship of the trade-agreements program to the great issue of regulating our foreign commerce in such a manner that this Nation's domestic prosperity will be safeguarded and promoted. Both of these broad aspects are germane to our deliberations. I could support continuation of the trade-agreements policy because of either of these considerations. However, in my present remarks I desire to invite the Senate's attention to another aspect of the question which particularly commends the trade-agreements policy and program to the favorable consideration of all men who are genuinely anxious that this Government and this country should champion post-war policies which are directed toward the promotion of our common welfare through the workings of free and private enterprise.

There is no need to recite the fundamental economic policies and objectives which ought to be pursued if the next generation is to have an even chance of working out its problems through the processes of private enterprise. During the post-war period we and the other nations will be engaged in demobilization of our manpower concentrations in the armed forces and in the production of war goods and weapons. During this period we shall also be engaged in a gradual demobilization of the multiple of governmental controls which today touch every phase of our lives. We must never forget that the problems of "total demobilization" are bound to be quite as great as—in fact probably much greater than—were the problems of "total mobilization."

To my mind one of the great dangers is that we and other nations will seek to solve these "total demobilization" problems by more and more governmental regulations. I fully recognize that there must be a transition period during which many of the existing regulations will be gradually relaxed and adjusted to peacetime conditions. How and how fast these regulations are relaxed and eliminated is not, however, the issue before us today. Today the question is whether we are to continue a program which has worked in the past and can only work in the future in one direction, namely, in the direction of freeing private enterprise from the heavy and arbitrary hand of governmental control and direction.

The trade-agreements program, by its very nature, is a program of private enterprise. Its main purpose is to give our private producers and traders an opportunity to deal with other producers and traders on terms to be determined by the private parties in their own self-interest. That is the essence of private enterprise; and any governmental program which works in that direction cannot do other than serve the best interests of this Nation as a whole.

The trade-agreements program is designed to remove excessive and discriminatory governmental trade barriers which put private enterprise at the mercy of political forces, both at home and abroad.

This program is the very opposite of governmental bureaucracy. Not only are its purpose and accomplishments in the interest of freer private enterprise, but its actual administration is carried out in an economical manner, without the creation of some huge new bureau which grows as it goes. The trade-agreements program is administered through efficient utilization of the personnel and resources of established governmental departments and agencies such as the Tariff Commission and the Departments of State, Commerce, and Agriculture. The record of the past 9 years, during which the program has been in operation, is of itself the best possible proof that the program has been and will continue to be administered in the best interests of the Nation as a whole.

When the war is over the productive capacity of our country will be greater and stronger than ever before in our history. Broadly speaking, we shall have two choices before us. Either we can seek to expand our markets or we can seek to curtail our production. The first is the way of private enterprise, and the second is the way of governmental regimentation. The first is the way of the trade-agreements program, and the second is the way of governmental restrictions, or even of direct governmental operation.

Mr. President, the details of the future may be uncertain but the broad courses are not. The action which we take on this measure will in large measure determine whether our Government is to regulate its foreign commerce on a basis which fosters the expansion of private enterprise and trade, or whether it is to turn international commerce over to governmental direction and operation. Let no one make the fatal assumption that we can do the latter and escape the same consequences for our domestic commerce. Our economic life is an inseparable whole and we cannot apply one philosophy to part of it and another to the remainder.

Accepting these fundamentals as I do, I am strongly opposed to the amendment which has been proposed by the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] to provide that all trade agreements shall be terminable by joint resolution of the Congress 6 months after the war.

The adoption of the Danaher amendment is equivalent to giving notice to the world that the trade-agreement program may cease 6 months after the war.

Our major objective for the post-war world is the establishment of conditions which will permit our Nation and like-minded nations to build a stable prosperity and a durable peace. Whatever may be the precise nature of the eventual measures which we adopt for the realization of these ends, we know, or ought to know, that neither of these ends can be secured by resorting to nationalistic excesses in any field, least of all in international economic relations. As a Nation possessing the greatest productive capacity and dedicated to progress through private enterprise, our foremost interest is to keep the governments of the world from imposing excessive nationalistic restrictions on the mutually profitable exchange of goods. In short, our vital self-interest demands that our Government should now, and in the future, do everything in its power to assure that post-war commercial relations will not be shackled with excessive and discriminatory trade barriers.

Manifestly, these objectives can only be accomplished through some mechanism which permits our Government to reach and to maintain agreement on these matters between ourselves and the other nations. We simply cannot do this alone, and we cannot do it by sitting back in fancied exclusiveness and telling the rest of the world that we will make up our mind on this question 6 months or so after the end of the war.

We cannot do it alone. International trade is a two-way operation and likewise so is the regulation of this trade. We can raise or lower our tariffs by unilateral action without getting anywhere in the effective regulation of foreign commerce under modern conditions. That is why the Congress adopted the Trade Agreements Act originally in 1934, and that is why we must keep this mechanism of international economic cooperation in effective operation for the future.

The trade-agreements program is a method, and the only practical one, whereby this Government can secure the cooperation of other governments in creating and maintaining healthy and stable international commercial relations. Let me make very clear that it is my considered judgment that unless we and other like-minded nations shall be able to maintain stable international commercial relations in the post-war period there can be no prospect of achieving any stabilization in currency exchanges.

Mr. President, if we now abandon or hamstring the trade-agreements program, our action will have world-wide consequences simply because we would thereby be knocking the props out from under the entire cooperative structure which has been built up around the trade-agreements program. Anyone is living in a fool's paradise who imagines for one moment that we can scuttle a cooperative program of this nature and not pay dearly for it. I shall not dwell on the adverse effects which such action would have on the present war unity of our allies and friends, particularly in this hemisphere. What I do wish to dwell upon until every open-minded person sees it is the fact that any sign of a lack of confidence on our part in the trade-agreements program is tantamount to hoisting a warning for the future. That, I assure the Senate, is precisely what the adoption of this amendment would mean to the world.

What will be the consequences? Other nations which are now—and after the war certainly will be—in a weaker economic position than the United States cannot afford to take a chance that 6 months or a year after the war we will pull down the warning and say we were only fooling. If this signal is now run up on the mast and left flying until 6 months after the war, any prudent government, any prudent businessman, either at home or abroad, must make plans on the assumption that the hurricane will strike. The tragedy of it is that as soon as other governments begin making such plans the coming of the hurricane is absolutely assured and we shall be powerless to prevent it or do very much about it. Once this type of storm warning is posted and taken seriously by the world—and, I might ask, who in this Chamber who supports or opposes this amendment wants to tell anyone not to take the warning seriously?—once that warning is posted, forces will be set in motion which of themselves will bring on the storm.

Mr. President, if this most powerful trading Nation is preparing to go back to a policy of restricting rather than promoting a full and mutually profitable exchange of goods, other nations must and will make their plans accordingly. They cannot afford to wait and see. Their only alternative will be to barricade themselves up behind every form of trade barrier and discrimination against us.

Once these agreements begin to fall, whether on our initiative or on the initiative of the other parties because of lack of confidence in our intentions, the whole cooperative structure could collapse like a house of cards. If and when such forces are put in motion, we and the other nations will not be starting from scratch in building up barriers to trade. With the fall of these agreements, the highly destructive trade restrictions and discriminations of the early thirties, including our Smoot-Hawley tariff rates, will automatically spring into full force and effect. Then these barriers will only mark the beginning rather than, as before, the culmination of our follies.

The argument has been advanced that because of future uncertainties we should adopt this amendment to make the trade agreements terminable by joint resolution of the Congress 6 months after the termination of the war. For my part, I cannot imagine anything which is more likely to contribute to the most chaotic uncertainties with respect to international economic relations than formal notification to the world by the Congress of the United States that we have not made up our minds about so simple and fundamental a matter as the policy embodied in the trade-agreements program. I will go further and state, in the words of the House Ways and Means Committee report on this measure, that—

> Unless we and other like-minded nations take a position now on certain agreed policies and establish procedures for making these policies effective the uncertainties which we fear will soon become the certainties of past, sad experience.

Mr. President, this measure and particularly the Danaher amendment, present to this body our first opportunity to demonstrate whether we are capable of playing a positive rather than a negative, a constructive rather than a destructive role, in the shaping and reconstruction of a worth-while post-war world. I have every confidence that a majority of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle will meet this issue as it ought to be met, with resolution and decisiveness, and thereby give the trade-agreements program the clean-cut renewal which its record and promise fully merit.

I, for one, do not want to return to the horse-trading, Hawley-Smoot days. I know from my own personal experience as an exporter that passage of the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill did more to destroy the foreign trade of this country than any other action ever taken by our Government. Immediately retaliations occurred, and, for the first time, Great Britain imposed a tariff on the importation of foods. It would be a tragedy to change back from the reciprocal trade-agreement method to the logrolling tariff methods of previous day.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat will he yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It is a fact, is it not, I will ask the Senator from Virginia, that if under the terms of the Danaher amendment the result should be the abrogation of any of the trade agreements heretofore made or which may hereafter be made, automatically all the terms of the Smoot-Hawley Act would be restored, and it would be necessary to resort to the old logrolling processes in order to change any provision of it whatever?

Mr. BYRD. The Senator from Missouri is entirely correct, and I stated that during the course of my remarks.

FORREST W. DICKEY

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FERGUSON in the chair) laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 235) for the relief of Forrest W. Dickey, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. ELLENDER. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. ELLENDER, Mr. TUNNELL, and Mr. CAPPER conferees on the part of the Senate.

FLORENCE B. HUTCHINSON

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1463) for the relief of Florence B. Hutchinson and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. ELLENDER. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. ELLENDER, Mr. TUNNELL, and Mr. CAPPER conferees on the part of the Senate.

LEGAL GUARDIAN OF LEONARD L. GAY

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1784) for the relief of the legal guardian of Leonard L. Gay and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two houses thereon.

Mr. ELLENDER. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. ELLENDER, Mr. TUNNELL, and Mr. CAPPER conferees on the part of the Senate.

COMPARISON OF INCOME TAXES IN PUERTO RICO AND UNITED STATES

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the other day—

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield for that purpose?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, a few days ago a subcommittee of the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs returned from Puerto Rico and outlined the difficult living conditions existing in that island. Thereupon a bill was introduced for the relief of Puerto Rico. As I recall, the bill carried an appropriation of $25,000,000. I was interested in knowing what taxes the Puerto Ricans were paying in comparison to those paid by Americans on the same income; and so I have had a chart prepared showing the difference between income taxes in Puerto Rico and income taxes in the United States. I shall take, for example, a $10,000 income. Let us assume that a man in Puerto Rico makes a $10,000-a-year income; he pays a tax of $1,200 on his $10,000-a-year income; but a man living in the United States, and having an income of $10,000, pays a tax of $2,152 on his $10,000 income, or almost twice the amount paid by the Puertc Rican.

Mr. WILEY. I inquire if the tax in Puerto Rico is a Federal tax?

Mr. TYDINGS. Puerto Rico has its own income-tax law and we have our income-tax law. All receipts from income taxes in Puerto Rico are retained by the insular government.

The query naturally presents itself: Why should the American Congress appropriate money for the relief of Puerto Rico when Puerto Rico has an income-tax law which imposes on the same income a tax far less than that which our own citizens have to pay? As a matter of common sense, it seems to me that before we are called upon to appropriate money for the relief of Puerto Rico, the Puerto Rican Legislature ought to tax the people of Puerto Rico as much as we tax our people.

Not only does that general disparity follow all the way through, but the normal tax in Puerto Rico is 5 percent, whereas the normal tax in the United States is 6 percent; and the surtaxes in Puerto Rico are away below the surtaxes imposed in the United States.

The exemptions in Puerto Rico provide $2,000, for a married man whereas in the United States the exemption of a married man is only $1,200. All the way through the disparity is very glaring.

I am sure that none of us realized the other day when, in a spirit of generosity and good will we were appropriating money for the relief of Puerto Rico that there was such a wide gap in the taxes levied on incomes in Puerto Rico as compared with those levied in the United States.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. The situation in Puerto Rico is this: If Puerto Rico should levy on wealthy persons the same income taxes levied in the United States such persons would move their residence to the United States. For wealthy people our country is a more desirable place in which to live. So there is no question that Puerto Rico would lose a large amount of revenue. The Government of the United States, of course, might gain it; but it is perfectly easy, I think, to understand the reason why the Puerto Ricans always kept their higher income-tax rates just below those of the United States. As a matter of fact, as we have increased our rates, they have increased their rates, but always maintaining a differential.

It may be that the figures the Senator has show that Puerto Rico did not increase the income-tax rates in the last law enacted by the Puerto Rican Legislature, but I know that the legislature is very anxious to get from the rich all the money it can. The legislature is controlled by the Populares Party, which believes in high taxes on the rich. I feel sure there is involved the practical consideration which I suggest, that if the present advantage were taken away the wealthy would move to Florida, where there are many advantages. I do not believe anyone goes to Puerto Rico for the purpose of being able to pay lower taxes because to live 6 months in Puerto Rico is pretty much of a burden; but I rather think the Senator will find that Puerto Rico has increased its tax rate since the figures he has had compiled but a differential has always been maintained, and I understand why that is.

Of course, so far as revenue is concerned Puerto Rico is allowed to keep its income taxes, anyway, and I think we have to leave to their judgment the question whether by the rates imposed they obtain more money than they would by imposing rates absolutely equal to those imposed by the United States.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me say to the Senator from Ohio that the law from which I am reading is the 1942 Puerto Rican statute, and the Legislature of Puerto Rico of 1942 just adjourned a few days ago; so it is the latest law.

To illustrate further the wide difference, a married man in America making $1,500 pays $48 in taxes, whereas in Puerto Rico a man making $1,500 pays nothing. A married man in Puerto Rico making $2,000 pays nothing, while in the United States he pays $140.

A married man in Puerto Rico making $3,000 pays $100. In the United States he pays $324.

A married man in Puerto Rico making $4,000 pays $200. In the United States, on the continent, he pays $532.

In Puerto Rico a married man making $5,000 pays $330 a year in taxes. On the continent he pays $746.

A married man in Puerto Rico making $6,000 a year pays $460. On the continent he pays $992.

A married man in Puerto Rico making $7,000 pays $630. On the continent he pays $1,246.

A married man in Puerto Rico making $8,000 pays $800. On the continent he pays $1,532.

A married man in Puerto Rico making $9,000 pays $1,000. On the continent he pays $1,826.

A married man in Puerto Rico making $10,000 pays $1,200. In the United States proper he pays $2,152.

Merely considering incomes from $1,500 to $10,000, it is shown, I think, that it is not the desire of the Puerto Ricans to tax the wealthy particularly. They do not even have comparable income taxes on those of low incomes, who are not thinking of leaving Puerto Rico and coming to live in the United States for income-tax purposes.

Even when we come to the higher brackets, we find quite a difference. Let us take a married man in Puerto Rico with an income of $200,000. He pays $127,420, but on the continent such a man would pay $150,012.

A married man in Puerto Rico making $500,000 would pay in taxes $358,380, but in the United States proper he would pay $414,000.

A man in Puerto Rico making a million dollars a year would pay $743,380 into the insular treasury, whereas here he would pay a little over $100,000 more, or $854,000.

These few illustrations show that the disparity between Puerto Rican taxes and United States taxes is larger in the lower brackets than in the higher brackets. They likewise show that there is an enormous field in which Puerto Rico can increase her taxes on those in the lower brackets if she desires, and collect an enormous amount of money for insular purposes, without having the American Congress appropriate for the relief of Puerto Ricans.

I do not think it is sound, as a general principle, for the United States Congress to pass bills for the relief of Puerto Rico when the people of Puerto Rico, on the same income, enjoy a very, very much lower rate of taxation than is imposed upon our own citizens. I am not saying this to minimize the serious economic effect on Puerto Rico of the war. Relief is proper, but relief should be considered as a burden on our own people, as well as a benefit to Puerto Ricans.

I am hoping that these remarks, which are not made in rancor, which are not made in bitterness, which are not made to asperse Puerto Rico or its people or its legislature, but are made to present the sheer facts of the case, will induce the people of Puerto Rico and the legislature of Puerto Rico at least to close a substantial part of the gap before we are asked in the future to appropriate millions of dollars, which can only be raised by imposing burdens on the American people to a great extent heavier than those borne by our compatriots on the very beautiful island in the Caribbean.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. My recollection is that the income tax of Puerto Rico produces between four and five million dollars. I am very definitely of the impression that if the Puerto Rican tax rates were raised so as to be equal to those of the American law, there would be raised no more than four or five million dollars. Even if no one left Puerto Rico, if everyone remained in Puerto Rico and retained his residence there, I doubt if it would possibly increase the return by $2,000,000. So when we come to talk of the relief necessities of $15,000,000, which is the estimate of the W. P. A. for next year, I doubt very much whether, regardless of the Senator's principles, the alleviation of the need for relief would be very great.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think there is something in what the Senator says, namely, that they could raise the rates so high that the law of diminishing returns might apply, but basically I differ with the distinguished Senator from Ohio in the opinion that there is not room for a very substantial increase in the tax rates of Puerto Rico without diminishing its gross revenue. In my humble judgment, it would be very materially increased.

It is true that the income taxes in Puerto Rico, as compared with those in our own country, are small, but a million dollars or $2,000,000 raised in Puerto Rica is a million or $2,000,000 less to be paid by the people of our own country for the people of Puerto Rico; and as a good, sound American doctrine, I believe that every tub should stand pretty much on its own bottom, and that it is not sound governmental principle for a part of our country which levies a lower burden on its citizens in the form of taxation than that levied on our own citizens in taxation to come and ask for relief, and then ask our citizens to give of their largess to the people of Puerto Rico.

I ask that there be printed in the RECORD immediately following, and as a part of my remarks, first, a table showing the rates of income taxation in Puerto Rico and in the United States, as exhibited in the table which I hold in my hand, not only the normal tax rates, which are 5 percent in Puerto Rico as against 6 percent in this country, but the surtax rates, which are materially less in Puerto Rico than in this country. Immediately following that information is a table showing the rates and amounts of income tax on specific incomes.

All this information clearly indicates that, in the future, we should go a little more slowly than we have gone in making relief appropriations to Puerto Rico, until the island demonstrates that it is carrying a comparable load, all things considered, to that which our own people are shouldering during this burdensome and expensive war.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[1] In the United States income for normal taxes differs from income for surtax purposes in that an earned income credit and certain Government bond interest are deducted in computing income for normal tax purposes. An earned income credit formerly allowed in Puerto Rico was repealed in 1941.

[2] The latest available law (act of Dec. 3, 1942, No. 20) reports these figures as $20,760, $26,560, $32,560, $38,860, $45,460, $78,960, $112,960, and $147,960. The figures reported in the law are obviously erroneous in that they contain mathematical miscalculations. The figures reported in the table are believed to be correct, and are the ones contained in a bill "P. de la C. 31" introduced on Feb. 16, 1943, to correct "dos errores de calculo aritmético." The legislature in Puerto Rico has adjourned, but we have been unable to determine the fate of the bill.

VICTORY TAX IN PUERTO RICO AND IN THE UNITED STATES

Puerto Rico: Tax of 5 percent on Victory tax net income in excess of $15.05 a week.
United States: Tax of 5 percent on Victory tax net income in excess of $12 a week.

EXTENSION OF RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 111) to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I have a consistent record in opposition to the reciprocal-trade treaties, miscalled "trade agreements."

I voted against the act passed in 1934, when it was proposed as a means of ending the domestic depression by expanding our foreign trade.

I voted against the extension of the act in 1937, when its extension was asked on the ground that it would promote world peace.

I voted against the extension of the act in 1940, when it was recommended on the plea that it would keep us out of war.

I intend to vote against extension of the act again, despite the fact that the administration tells us it is necessary for us to extend the act in order to prove our good faith toward our allies in this global war.

In regard to the 1943 explanation of why we must continue the exclusive power of the Executive to negotiate and effect Executive agreements instead of treaties with foreign nations, I should like to ask an answer to this question:

"What more do we have to do to convince our allies of our good faith in conducting this war?"

There are American men in uniform in action on some 70 military fronts all over the world.

We are raising, equipping, training some 11,000,000 men for service with the United Nations. Millions of them are already abroad.

We are sending food and supplies to help support the people of Britain, north Africa, and other peoples. In order to furnish food for the Russians, by next winter our own people are likely to be as severely rationed as are the people of Germany and of Britain.

We have passed a Lend-Lease Act, and backed it by appropriating billions upon billions of dollars, to donate all kinds of supplies to our allies.

The money expenditures—and remember this means contributions of goods and services, not merely financing—for war purposes this year exceed the expenditures of all the nations engaged on both sides in this war.

Expenditures for the United Nations' cause by the United States Government this year will exceed $100,000,000,000. The national debt is climbing steadily; before the war is won it will pass the $250,000,000,000 mark and may go over $300,000,000,000.

I ask Senators, in the name of common sense, what more do we have to do to convince our allies that we are in this war to the limit?

I say that that particular claim advanced as to why we must enact this extension act, unamended, without Congress holding any powers over agreements made with foreign nations, is so illogical as to be fantastic.

Unless we are required to surrender our national sovereignty, I do not see how much further we have to go to convince our allies of our good faith.

As I have indicated, the case for the trade-agreements extension is not being argued at this time on the merits or demerits of the reciprocal trade agreements policy, nor upon the results to date of that policy as administered by the executive branch of the Government.

I have read innumerable tables and summaries of statistics, tending to show how our export trade has increased since the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act was passed. But it has seemed to me that proponents of the program completely ignore the fact that if we include in the balance sheets the amount of subsidies paid on exports to foreign nations, and include also the billions of dollars of gold the Treasury has purchased from abroad at inflated prices, we will discover that the increased exports about equal the sum of these two items.

So far as the remaining years of the war are concerned, these arguments in favor of trade agreements are largely academic. There is no foreign trade, except such as is Government controlled, nor is there likely to be for some years to come.

The main issue involved today, as I see it, is to what extent Congress is going to surrender to the Executive power to make post-war commitments without reference to the will of the people as expressed through their chosen representatives in the Congress of the United States.

Instead of peace treaties at the close of the war, requiring Senate concurrence to become effective, are we to have Executive agreements, along the line of the reciprocal trade agreements, but covering all fields of foreign relations?

Shall the Congress admit, and submit to, the doctrine of totalitarian governments that only the Executive is competent and empowered to deal with international problems?

Are we fighting this war to preserve the United States of America and its representative form of government, or are we fighting it to make the Executive supreme in foreign affairs? The step from that point to making the Executive the law-making power also in domestic affairs may be a short one, Mr. President, if this doctrine is to be accepted by the Congress at this time, or at any other time.

But before discussing the implications of this complete surrender to Executive dictatorship in the field of foreign relations, I desire to restate briefly my own position in regard to the reciprocal trade agreements program as such.

I am in favor of building up our foreign trade, but not at the expense of our domestic welfare. Foreign trade, to my mind, is the means to an end; not the end itself.

Mr. President, I am not in favor of sacrificing the farmers of the United States, or the workingmen of the United States, or the standard of living of the people of the United States merely to be able to point to immense tonnages of goods shipped to and from our shores.

Any attempt to build up our foreign trade at the expense of our domestic economy is attacking the problem from the wrong angle.

I hold it to be basic—I am not now talking of war conditions but of peacetime conditions—I hold it to be basic that our trade with foreign countries flourishes most in periods of domestic prosperity.

When farmers have adequate purchasing power—and that is multiplied seven or eight times through its extension to national purchasing power—that is when we are able to import and do import the largest quantities of necessities and spend most freely for foreign luxuries.

Anything which will improve the purchasing power of the American people will encourage and expand legitimate foreign trade. Anything which will tend to destroy or to impair the purchasing power of the American people, or of any considerable group of the American people, will defeat the admittedly desirable objective of increasing foreign trade.

Mr. President, I am for increasing our foreign trade through policies which will increase the purchasing power of the American market.

I am opposed to what I consider the fallacy of trying to build up foreign trade through diminishing the purchasing power of the American market.

One other point ought to be mentioned, I think, at this time:

By various pieces of labor legislation, and by the wage policies of the administration, we have been increasing the wage levels steadily. I am far from being opposed to that.

Through the A. A. A. and other farm legislation, we have been trying to build up farm prices toward production costs. I am far from opposed to that.

But the near-free-trade objectives of the trade-agreements program, if carried out, would bring in farm products and industrial products at lower prices based on lower wage levels and living standards of nations from which we import.

The two programs, lower prices for foodstuffs and manufactured products forced by competitive imports from abroad and higher prices and higher wages for goods manufactured in this country—these two programs pull in opposite directions.

They simply do not make sense, and no specious arguments backed by advocates' statistics can cause them to make sense.

Right now the main question involved, as I see the picture, is not whether or not the reciprocal trade agreements program is sound or unsound, whether it has worked successfully or not, whether its operations have justified the claims made for it, or the charges made against it.

Mr. President, I think the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act does invade the field of treaties, which is the domain of the Senate under the Constitution.

I think it invades the field of revenue legislation, which is the original function of the House of Representatives under the Constitution.

I think it can be argued successfully that it invades the field of regulation of commerce, which is a congressional function under the Constitution.

The all-important question presented by this proposed extension of the Trade Agreements Act, without the amendment offered by the Senate Finance Committee is whether Congress intends to divest itself of its powers to have some say in regard to the part the United States shall play in the post-war world.

I find myself in agreement with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] that the legislative power never has stood in more jeopardy in this country than at this moment.

Looking ahead to we know not what conditions will prevail in the post-war world, I consider it unwise, almost suicidal folly, for Congress to turn over to the Executive the power to enter into executive agreements without retaining the right of legislative review.

Therefore, I shall support the Finance Committee amendment, which reads as follows:

Provided, That every foreign trade agreement concluded in accordance with the provisions of said act, as amended, shall be subject to termination 6 months after the cessation of hostilities in the present war as fixed by proclamation of the President, pursuant to joint resolutions of the Congress or by the President.

Mr. President, without that language, or language to that substantial effect, the Congress would have little or nothing to say about the post-war foreign trade policies of the United States. They would be left entirely in the hands of the Executive. I do not believe it can be successfully denied that, possessed of those powers, the Executive could write so-called trade agreements which would extend into the entire field of political as well as economic relations with other nations of the world.

It is entirely within the range of possibility that if the Congress again approves the principle of substituting Executive agreements for treaties, the Executive might decide to negotiate and conclude executive agreements, instead of peace treaties, at the end of the war. At the least, he could conclude trade agreements which would so commit the United States in the field of foreign relations that the Senate's share in concluding treaties would in actuality be just about zero.

I say again, Mr. President, that the issue presented is whether the Congress shall regain and retain, or strip itself for good and all, of what is left of its power in the field of international economic reorganization.

In past years the Executive has been steadily building up his powers at the expense of Congress, which is the people. That is a point which is conveniently overlooked by many zealous men and women with good intentions who are advocating one-man control of foreign relations without realizing it. Overlooked also is the corollary, which must follow as surely as night follows day, that then we should also have a one-man government in the domestic field, so as to meet the one-man decisions in the international field.

It is interesting to note the steady trend in that direction. In the first half century of the existence of the United States 27 agreements and 60 treaties were entered into; in the second half century there were 238 Executive agreements and 215 treaties; in the latest—I hope it is not the last—half century of our existence as an independent nation there have been consummated 917 Executive agreements and 524 treaties.

I am indebted to the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] for calling my attention to a recently published book on international Executive agreements, by Mr. Wallace McClure, of the State Department. Mr. McClure apparently expresses the bureaucratic view. I quote from his book two sentences which I believe chart plainly the road we are expected to follow in foreign relations in the post-war world:

It is believed that the President has, and was intended to have, under the Constitution all the powers and functions of the head of a fully recognized member of the society of nations; that he has, accordingly, the authority to enter into any manner of national act on any subject that is entered into by any other nation of the world—

Mr. President, let me call attention to the words "that is entered into by any other nation of the world." If that language means anything, it means that if Adolf Hitler, Josef Stalin, or any other dictator has certain powers in the international field, then our Executive is entitled to the same authority for this Nation. I resume the quotation:

and that, while this power must be exercised without violation of the Constitution and in accommodation with other possibly conflicting powers granted by the Constitution, notably the powers of the Legislature, an Executive agreement not in contravention of the Constitution and not in conflict with any act of Congress (best shown by positive congressional confirmation either before or after signature) is binding on all of the executive and all the law-enforcing agencies of the Government and is the equivalent.

What I have just quoted is found on page 252 of Mr. McClure's book. I quote now from page 363:

The President can do by Executive agreement anything that he can do by treaty, providing Congress by law cooperates.

Mr. President, I can see that passage of the pending legislation without the amendment proposed by the Finance Committee could be taken to be full cooperation by Congress—congressional confirmation before signature.

Mr. President, the administration has been telling us, the people of this country, and the world that action on this proposed legislation is the acid test of the United States post-war policy. In other words, the administration has served notice that enactment of the pending joint resolution without amendment retaining the right of congressional review of Executive agreements will be understood at home and abroad to mean that the Executive will have full power to enter into binding agreements as to post-war foreign relations.

To my mind, such suggestions make it imperative upon Congress to adopt some amendment along the lines of the one proposed by the Senate Finance Committee. Otherwise, the other nations of the world will have been led to believe—through statements from our own Department of State—that Congress has abdicated its powers to review, confirm, or reject such agreements or treaties.

I do not believe that Congress, particularly the Senate, or the people of the United States, are going to take that view of the matter when the time comes to determine our post-war policies and programs.

Therefore, I consider it particularly unwise and not altogether honest to lead other nations to believe that the President of the United States at the close of this war will have powers to commit the United States to certain agreements or treaties or perhaps to some form of a League of Nations—a power President Wilson clearly did not have at the close of World War No. 1.

Secretary of State Cordell Hull and other representatives of the State Department, as I read the record of hearings, declared that Congress has and will continue to have power to terminate these trade agreements without the adoption of the amendment. But they maintained it would be bad psychology to tell other nations that, by adopting the amendment.

If Secretary Hull and Dr. Sayre were not such honorable men, I should say that such an attitude might indicate a desire to soften the facts in the case and to lead other nations to a misconstruction of the powers of the Executive and of the lack of power of the Congress in the field of foreign relations.

If this power is retained in the hands of Congress, I think it is only fair to other nations that they so understand. I am not in favor of leading them to believe that what both Secretary Hull and Dr. Sayre said in the committee hearings is not so. Such a belief on their part might lead to the charge that the United States had "run out" on Europe again, when, according to Secretary Hull and Dr. Sayre, such would not be the case at all.

Mr. President, let me say furthermore that when our representatives sit at the peace table—I presume there will be peace conferences of some kind—it will be their responsibility to make settlement in accordance with the conditions prevailing at that time. Our representatives will be expected by our people, and by the representatives of other nations, to fulfill our international obligations fully, and at the same time to protect the interests of the United States and the people of the United States.

I say that the government existing at that time should be free to determine what our post-war course should be, in accordance with then existing realities. It should not be bound by what our State Department now, in ignorance of future realities, decides should be our course—a decision which might commit us to that course in advance.

I say it is not sound policy—in fact, it is the opposite—to send our representatives to the peace conference bound by previous commitments made through these trade agreements or other Executive agreements. Let us not tie their hands or our own hands; let us arrange to have our hands free in meeting the post-war problems in the light of post-war conditions.

Some mention has been made of article VII of agreements entered into under the Lease-Lend Act. I note that last March the Senate Finance Committee, by unanimous vote, adopted the following language in its report to the Senate:

> Article VII indicates the type of economic action which may be contemplated. It is not a commitment which binds either of the legislative bodies of this Government. For example, Article VII does not authorize the reduction of tariffs or commit the United States to other measures which under the Constitution must be adopted by the Congress or by either branch thereof. * * * The committee believes that there is no authority in the Lend-Lease Act to warrant any general post-war commitments or post-war policies.

I heartily approved that statement, Mr. President. I hope the Senate follows the same line in considering the proposed extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, by adopting the Finance Committee amendment.

In charting our post-war course, our hands should not be tied either by the Trade Agreements Act, by the Lend-Lease Act, or by any other commitments not made in accordance with our Constitution and established American traditions.

I shall support the amendment offered by the Senate Finance Committee, and I plead with my colleagues to accept it. I think the Congress owes that much to its own self-respect, and to the protection of the best interests of the United States and the people of the United States in a post-war world of which as yet we know but little, and that little is very conjectural. I am ready to vote on the amendment and on the bill.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter received by me from Mr. Fred Brenckman, Washington representative of the National Grange, taking a strong stand in favor of the amendment suggested by the Senate Finance Committee.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE NATIONAL GRANGE,
Washington, D. C., May 26, 1943.

HON. ARTHUR CAPPER,
United States Senate:

We trust that before the Senate puts the stamp of approval on House Joint Resolution 111, renewing the Trade Agreements Act for another period of years, this measure may be so amended as to vindicate the ancient and fundamental right of Congress to be something more than a mere spectator in matters relating to the tariff and the formulation of our policies with reference to foreign trade. As we see it, that is the most important issue involved in this whole question.

We hold that any plan which robs the chosen representatives of the people of one of their most important functions, reducing them to impotency, and which wrongfully delegates this power in its entirety to the executive department of the Government cannot successfully be defended as liberal, constitutional, or American.

The Grange opposed the enactment of this law in 1934 on the ground that the sweeping delegation of legislative authority it contains is wholly at variance with the American concept of government, and that it violates both the letter and the spirit of the Constitution.

We have always been in favor of foreign trade under proper conditions. We have never been opposed to true reciprocity, by which we mean an exchange of goods or commodities with other nations on a basis that is mutually beneficial or advantageous.

While one of the declared purposes of the Trade Agreements Act was to develop an outlet for our farm surpluses, as the act has been administered it has had the opposite effect. Under the workings of this act, farm imports have greatly increased, while our exports of agricultural commodities have shown a sharp decline. During the 5-year period from 1936 to 1940, both inclusive, our food imports averaged nearly 250 percent of food exports.

It is true that normal trade has practically been brought to a standstill by the war. However, it must be taken for granted that in asking for the renewal of the act, the administration intends to make use of it in the post-war period, when conditions will naturally be vastly different from those that existed when most of our trade agreements were made.

Under the circumstances, we feel that the amendment adopted by the Finance Committee, which provides that all trade agreements that have been negotiated shall be terminated within 6 months after the cessation of hostilities in the present war, is both wise and prudent. We hope that this amendment may be retained.

The National Grange has repeatedly and unanimously gone on record at its annual conventions in favor of Senate ratification of all trade agreements before they become effective, on the ground that these agreements are treaties within the meaning of the Constitution. At the very least, Congress should have the right to reject, by a majority vote of each House, any trade agreement deemed contrary to the best interests of the Nation.

The supporters of the act without change contend that any such amendment might be misunderstood by the other countries of the world. However, it is worthy of note that 25 of the 30 trade agreements we have thus far made were subject to some form of parliamentary ratification in the countries with which we have dealt. The Grange advocates that the same rule be applied here at home. Imaginary fears as to how this might be viewed by other nations should not deter us from taking proper steps to protect the interests of the United States. Nor should we be afraid to let it be known that ours is still a government of laws, and not of men.

Sincerely yours,
THE NATIONAL GRANGE,
FRED BRENCKMAN,
Washington Representative.

Mr. CAPPER. I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter received by me from Mr. Charles M. Holman, secretary of the National Cooperative Milk Producers' Federation. His letter is along the same line as Mr. Brenckman's letter, and indicates that the agricultural interests of the country are opposed to the proposed extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE NATIONAL COOPERATIVE
MILK PRODUCERS' FEDERATION,
Washington, D. C., May 25, 1943.

HON. ARTHUR CAPPER,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR CAPPER: With respect to the pending debate on House Joint Resolution 111 to extend the Trade Agreement Act, this organization comprised of 71 dairy cooperative associations with a combined farm family membership of 280,000, desires to record its position with the Members of the Senate.

Having followed closely the workings of this act since its inception, we continue firm in our belief that its extension without incorporation of several safeguards should be opposed. Extensive studies made by us disclose, not only the dubious character of alleged economic benefits resulting from the agreements, but also an administration policy that may well threaten agriculture's and the Nation's welfare in the post-war period.

Consistent with our past policy, we would prefer to see the Senate reclaim its prerogative of ratifying treaty arrangements (and trade agreements in our judgment contain treaty matter). We believe, however, that under existing war conditions, provision for termination of trade agreements 6 months after hostilities cease as provided in the committee amendment to the resolution, offers a safeguard insofar as post-war treatment of imports and tariffs is concerned. This is particularly true when coupled with the action of the House of Representatives limiting the extension of the act to a 2-year period. This organization, accordingly, endorses both the 2-year extension adopted by the House as well as the amendment of the Senate Committee on Finance and urge the members of the Senate to adopt both.

In addition, we request the Senate to give favorable consideration to and adopt an amendment which will restore the cost of production principle to trade agreement negotiations. It is only through such an amendment that American producers may be protected against a flood of competitive foreign commodities entering this country at less than domestic levels of production costs.

Sincerely yours,
THE NATIONAL COOPERATIVE
MILK PRODUCERS' FEDERATION,
CHARLES W. HOLMAN,
Secretary.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President. I shall vote for the extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act without amendment. I do not think the act goes far enough; but it is, in my judgment, a step in the right direction.

Secretary Hull was eminently correct when he said we could build no permanent edifice of peace unless that edifice were built upon the free flow of world trade. A truer statement was never made than the statement, "When trade ceases, armies march."

Before the First World War America was a debtor nation. We had tariffs then, but they were not so high as the tariff level subsequent to each of the two general tariff revisions in 1921 and in 1930. The old tariff before World War No. 1 did not, to such a great extent, hamper the free flow of world trade. We had in that era, as now, a surplus of agricultural products—cotton, wheat, corn, and other basic farm crops. The nations to whom we were indebted, industrial nations, desired and needed those products. They were glad to take them in payment of our debts. We therefore sold them those products and thereby secured the foreign exchange to service and pay our debts. Consequently, even with a protective tariff, we had no farm problem then. To a great extent we had a universally prosperous America.

As the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY] pointed out in his speech upon this subject—and let me say that it was an able speech, one which went to the fundamentals of the economy of America and of the other nations of the earth—as a result of the First World War we became a creditor nation. For the United States to do business and for our foreign debts to be paid, it was, therefore, necessary for us to accept goods or gold in payment, since the only way nations, like individuals, can do business is through the sale of goods, personal services, or the transfer of gold. A creditor nation must, to collect its debts, maintain an extensive foreign trade. But in that era we did not accept our responsibilities. We passed a tariff act in the early 1920's which, up until that time, was the highest tariff in history. Because of it foreign countries could not trade with us. If they could not sell us their products, they could not purchase the products of the United States. This is elementary economics.

So, Mr. President, in the fabulous 1920's our country launched upon an unsound program; a program which did not eliminate, but only delayed, the fatal day, the debacle which was sure to follow. In order to keep our economic engine running, in order to maintain that export business which is absolutely and utterly essential to the prosperity of America and to the very existence of our capitalistic system, we loaned the debtor nations vast sums of money. With this money they purchased American products. They took our cotton, our wheat, our meat, our lard, our manufactured goods, and all other products of which we had an exportable surplus. During this era we imagined ourselves rich. But like the castle built upon the sands, our so-called prosperity could not withstand the storm which was to follow. That program contained the seeds of its own undoing. The economic storm which was caused by our own folly and the folly of other nations in erecting barriers and other restraints upon the free flow of trade. Other nations were unable to repay our loans. They could borrow no more money from us; they could not buy our goods. Surpluses piled up. Trade was stagnated. Prices fell. We went into the worst depression in years.

At that time, instead of lowering tariff duties and reopening the channels of foreign trade, which was the proper thing to do and what we most certainly should have done, we made the second tragic blunder. There was enacted in 1930 the highest tariff act in history. Other nations followed suit. They, too, revised their tariffs upward. In addition, they placed other restrictions upon the free flow of trade. Worse still, some discriminated against American goods. Great Britain changed from her age-old free-trade policy to one of protection. The trade of the world was thereby stagnated. The depression was thereby deepened; and out of the unemployment, poverty, and misery which followed, dictators sprang up. Alien creeds rapidly matured into full flower, and some of the peoples of the world surrendered their personal liberties to the new systems, which held forth to them the promise of securing bread. One scavenger nation at this time embarked upon her ruthless course of conquest.

Mr. President, the Congress of the United States, by adopting in 1934 the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act, the extension of which is now under consideration, took the lead in reopening the channels of world trade and in leading the peoples of the earth back to economic sanity. Our Secretary of State, the official to whom the administration of this program was entrusted, is sincere, extremely able, and to a remarkable degree possesses the confidence of the American people. The Congress, in my judgment, acted wisely in the original enactment and in each subsequent extension of this legislation.

But, Mr. President, world trade could not be reopened in a day, or in a year, for that matter. Furthermore, this program had its advent in a world in which some of the major nations were not interested in trade, but were primarily interested in arming themselves and preparing for war. Our economy throughout the 1930's was unsound, because it was not built upon a great export trade. The employment of the country depends upon the business of the country. When the volume of business increases, the volume of employment increases, and this swings upward the economic cycle. Because of the Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act, because of the tariffs of other nations, and because of quotas and other trade restrictions, our foreign trade fell off. There was not a sufficient volume of business to give employment to our people. In the case of agriculture, surpluses were piled up. Consequently, in a world of plenty, there were stark hunger and destitution. There was a world need for the products of the farms and factories of America; but because we did not have the ability to exchange commodities with the nations across the seas, because we could not trade, we were forced to subsidize agriculture, to reduce the acreage planted in basic crops, to kill pigs, to reduce the output of our great agricultural industry, and to reduce the output of a large portion of the business of America. We were forced to support millions of Americans through a glorified dole. During that period we created artificial employment. America lived to a large extent upon its capital. That era, too, was artificial and unsound.

Of course, Mr. President, this program can be of no benefit during the war. There can be no even flow of trade during this period. In the post-war period all the peoples of the earth of every nation, race, and creed will turn to America for leadership. There will then be erected an edifice which we all hope will make for permanent peace and prosperity for mankind. But if we do not rise to the occasion and deal with the realities of the situation, this edifice will contain the seeds of disaster—poverty, hunger, misery, and another great war.

Mr. President, I reiterate, there can be no permanent peace or prosperity without world trade. There can be no sound prosperity unless artificial restrictions on the flow of commerce are removed.

I know that the interests of America must be protected. The welfare of the Nation as a whole must be paramount. I know that these paramount interests will be protected. They have been protected by the Secretary of State. This program during the 9 years of its life has done good. It has not harmed this country. It has not hurt a single industry in this country. It has been of benefit to America. I think the Secretary should have gone further, but I may be a partisan witness; I may be unable fairly to judge.

In my judgment, the amendment adopted by the committee should be defeated. I full well comprehend the argument of the proponents of this amendment, that we must reserve for the United States complete freedom of action in the post-war world; that our hands must be untied when our representatives sit around the council table; and that they favor reciprocity. But the primary interest of Congress must be to uphold the essential national interests of the United States. And so it must. Our national interests will be best upheld by a workable system of cooperation and collaboration. It is the best system I know of. The primary interest of all of us is to uphold and promote the essential national interest of the United States. This interest can be served in no better way than by lowering tariff barriers without injury to the industry of the country. We have here a workable program of international collaboration and cooperation. It has proved to be so by the 9-year span of its life. All of us agree that it is a step in the right direction. Through this program the essential national interests of the United States will be as well served in the future as they have been in the past.

The adoption of the amendment would be notice to the world that we reserve the right to destroy the program and return to the old rates, and the old system of Hawley-Smoot days, which in this instance would be a greater mistake than was the adoption of the Tariff Act of 1921. Mr. President, no matter whether or not our hands are tied, it is better that they be tied if by remaining united we would drift back into the tidal wave of trade barriers, and the restraints on commerce which marked the tragic days which followed the First World War. Of course, no one knows what the global economic state will be after victory is won. But, Mr. President, we know what it must be based upon. It must be based upon a reduction of trade barriers which will not do injury to the economy of the United States. The only way to create security and prosperity for America is by international cooperation and collaboration, which will seek a reduction in those barriers which restrict the flow of international trade.

Practically no one expects the war to be over within the next year or 18 months. Who is there who believes that the hostilities with Japan will cease within the next year or 18 months? This amendment presents merely a theory. We gain nothing by its adoption. If it were adopted it would shake the confidence of our allies and the nations with which we are dealing.

I have been very much interested in the argument that we want the maximum of exports which we can profitably acquire; but that exports are not profitable if gained at the expense of imports which displace essential domestic production and employment; and further, that a rule of reason must balance these forces on a realistic basis. If that be the rule, if a rule of reason must balance these forces on a realistic basis, we have set up a program which has balanced and will balance these forces. It has increased exports. It has increased the flow of world trade without injury to the essential business of the country.

I do not believe we have gone far enough. But I repeat that this program is a step in the right direction. It is far superior to the old system. Under it we are far better off than if we were under the rates of the Hawley-Smoot Act. I do not think the program should be hamstrung in the least by the adoption of a crippling amendment.

For that reason I prefer to see a system of reciprocity administered by the Department of State. I know that there will be no general scaling down of duties in any other way. I would be careful to whom I would vote to delegate this authority. I have confidence in Secretary Hull. I know he can best protect the interests of the Nation as a whole. I believe he will do this in the negotiations around the counsel table. I know further that with authority in his hands he could make better and more satisfactory trades, because foreign nations, like human beings, will enter into more all-inclusive agreements when they negotiate with one who has the authority to speak and to commit us absolutely. No man will show his full hand when dealing with one who must go to some higher authority. This is especially true when the subject might be the object of further negotiation.

As is well known, Mr. President, I represent a cotton-producing State. A greater percentage of the citizenry of my State depend for their livelihood upon the growth of cotton than is true of the citizenry of any other Southern State. Fourteen million people in America depend for their livelihood upon the production of this great crop. More people in America are engaged in the business of growing cotton than are engaged in any other single business. When they are unable to purchase, when they are unable to consume, factories in the East will shut down, and millions of Americans will be thrown out of work. Our country will then be certain to enter a depression, for after all, agriculture is the great market for industrial goods. In productivity, intelligence, and in business ability, America has the greatest and most prosperous agricultural industry in the history of the world. The great Mississippi Valley, the Southeast, and the Southwest, are the greatest producers of raw materials in the world. This area, with its ability to buy and consume the products of industry, has made America the greatest industrial Nation upon the earth. The business of growing cotton, and the livelihood of those who grow it, depend upon foreign trade, upon the export of cotton. If the export markets were lost permanently, and the cotton growers forced to produce only cotton for the domestic American market—and since 1937 we have been producing cotton practically only for the American market—practically every cotton grower in the South would be bankrupted. This will surely occur unless the portals of world trade are thrown open to us.

American-grown cotton is a superior cotton. Foreign countries desire to use it. To do so they must be able to trade with us, to ship us goods, and to take out our surplus products in return. At the beginning of the present war, and for several years prior thereto, we had practically lost those markets. One of the principal reasons for this was that foreign countries could not acquire the dollar exchange to purchase our farm products, and because of that fact the Government was forced to subsidize this great industry. In my judgment, the same thing is true of the agricultural products of the West.

In order to regain these foreign markets after the war, in order to be able to plant a normal cotton acreage once again, in order to be able to purchase the products of American industry, as well as furnish employment to the workers of the East, it will be absolutely essential that foreign countries shall be allowed to purchase our cotton, and that the purchasing power of the South be increased. To do this it will be utterly essential that they shall be in position to sell their goods to us, as well as to acquire the dollar exchange with which to purchase the cotton of the South, and the exportable surplus of the farm products of the West. There can be no permanently prosperous America until this is done.

Mr. President, permit me to say to Senators who represent the States of the West that we of the South have been their customers. We desire to remain their customers. I am sure they desire us to remain their customers. However, we have been capable, and we are now capable, with minor exceptions, of producing the same farm products which they produce. Our soil is fertile. Our growing and grazing season is longer than theirs. If world trade is not restored, if it is not possible through the scaling down of tariff barriers for us to recapture foreign cotton markets, then for our existence we shall be forced into competition with them. We do not desire to do this. We do not desire to enter into competition from which they, we, and industry will suffer because the prosperity of industry depends upon the purchasing power of American agriculture. The Nation would suffer from such competition. But when we are prosperous and the West is prosperous the Nation prospers because when the purchasing power of all increases the consumption of commodities increases, the volume of business increases, factory wheels hum, and there is work for all to do.

In conclusion, Mr. President, let me say that these trade agreements are sound in principle. I do not think the program goes far enough. If I had the power within my hands, I would go further. But I have confidence in the Secretary of State. I am willing that he be empowered under this joint resolution to enter the post-war period unhampered and unimpeded, to reopen the avenues of world trade. I sincerely hope and pray that he can do so. There can be no permanent prosperity unless this is done. There cannot be permanent peace unless this is done. Secretary Hull is economically sound. He has envisioned a new world. That vision is practical and safe. The Congress of the United States must rise to the occasion and see that the post-war castle, wherein there will dwell forever a peaceful, contented, happy, and prosperous brotherhood of man is built upon bedrock.

CIVILIAN PILOT TRAINING

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill which is on the calendar. I ask that Calendar No. 264, House bill 1670, be read by title for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the bill by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 1670) to amend section 2 of the Civilian Pilot Training Act of 1939, as amended.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I do not rise to object. I understand the bill will not provoke controversy. I know nothing of it.

Mr. McCARRAN. If it provokes any controversy, I shall immediately withdraw the request.

Mr. GEORGE. I have no objection.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will not the Senator please explain what the bill seeks to accomplish?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, the Pilot Training Act of 1939 provided for the training of civilian pilots, The Army and the Navy have now placed the training of all military trainees under the direction and supervision of the Civil Aeronautics Authority. The Comptroller General has held that the word "civilian" in the act under which civilian pilot training is now being conducted by the Army requires that when trainees are in the military or naval service the appropriation must come through the Army or the Navy, and not through the Civil Aeronautics Authority. The bill is to correct that situation, so that the appropriation may come through the Commerce Department, thus to be handled by the Civil Aeronautics Authority, so as to enable it to train enlisted enrollees. We seek to have the word "civilian" stricken so that the act may cover not only civilian, but military enrollees as well.

The bill has the approval of the Army, I am certain it has the approval of the Navy, and it has the approval of the Civil Aeronautics Authority. It has the approval of the House of Representatives, having passed the House; it has the unanimous approval of the Committee on Commerce of the Senate, and it is here for the approval of the Senate itself.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Is it a fact that every person taking this training must agree to serve in the armed forces, either the Army or the Navy?

Mr. McCARRAN. Civilian trainees obligate themselves to take the course which may be assigned to them by the Army or the Navy, but the greater number of the trainees are actually in military service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 1670) to amend section 2 of the Civilian Pilot Training Act of 1939, as amended, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce, with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, to strike out "any amounts heretofore appropriated for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the Civilian Pilot Training Act of 1939, and unexpended, shall be available for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of such act, as amended by the provisions of this act," and to insert in lieu thereof "Any appropriations heretofore made and available for obligations during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1943, for carrying out the provisions of the Civilian Pilot Training Act of 1939, shall be available for carrying out the provisions of such act as amended hereby. Any obligations entered into heretofore under such appropriations for purposes which are brought within the scope of such act by this amendatory act shall be deemed to be valid if otherwise properly incurred."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill H. R. 1670 was read the third time and passed.

OFFICE OF WAR MOBILIZATION

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, an event has happened today which deserves the attention of the Senate and of the country. I refer to the issuance of an Executive order by the President which establishes in the Office for Emergency Management, of the Executive Office of the President, an Office of War Mobilization, which shall be under the direction of a Director of War Mobilization to be appointed by the President.

Mr. President, this Executive order provides that there shall be certain well-defined functions of the Office of War Mobilization. Those functions are:

To develop unified programs and to establish policies for the maximum use of the Nation's natural and industrial resources for military and civilian needs, for the effective use of the national manpower not in the armed forces, for the maintenance and stabilization of the civilian economy, and for the adjustment of such economy to war needs and conditions.

To unify the activities of Federal agencies and departments engaged in or concerned with production, procurement, distribution, or transportation of military or civilian supplies, materials, and products, and to resolve and determine controversies between such agencies or departments, except those to be resolved by the Director of Economic Stabilization under section 3, title 4, of Executive Order 9250.

To issue such directives on policy or operations to the Federal agencies and departments as may be necessary to carry out the programs developed, the policies established, and the decisions made under this order. It shall be the duty of all such agencies and departments to execute these directives, and to make to the Office of War Mobilization such progress reports as may be required.

Under the authority of this order the Office of War Mobilization is allowed to perform its functions through certain other officials and agencies of the Government as the Director shall determine.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to incorporate the Executive order in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the order was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXECUTIVE ORDER PROVIDING FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF AN OFFICE OF WAR MOBILIZATION

By virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constitution and the statutes of the United States, particularly by the First War Powers Act, 1941, as President of the United States and as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, and in order to provide for the more effective coordination of the mobilization of the Nation for war, it is hereby ordered as follows:

I

There is established in the Office for Emergency Management of the Executive Office of the President an Office of War Mobilization which shall be under the direction of a Director of War Mobilization (hereinafter referred to as Director), to be appointed by the President.

II

There is established in the Office of War Mobilization the War Mobilization Committee (hereinafter referred to as the committee), of which the Director shall be the chairman and with which he shall advise and consult. The committee shall consist, in addition to the Director, of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Chairman of the Munitions Assignments Board, the Chairman of the War Production Board, and the Director of Economic Stabilization. The chairman shall request the heads of other agencies or departments to participate in the deliberations of the committee whenever matters specially affecting such agencies or departments are under consideration. It shall be the duty of the heads of the agencies and departments to supply necessary data to the Director and the committee.

III

It shall be the function of the Office of War Mobilization, acting in consultation with the committee and subject to the direction and control of the President,

(a) To develop unified programs and to establish policies for the maximum use of the Nation's natural and industrial resources for military and civilian needs, for the effective use of the national manpower not in the armed forces, for the maintenance and stabilization of the civilian economy, and for the adjustment of such economy to war needs and conditions;

(b) To unify the activities of Federal agencies and departments engaged in or concerned with production, procurement, distribution, or transportation of military or civilian supplies, materials, and products and to resolve and determine controversies between such agencies or departments, except those to be resolved by the Director of Economic Stabilization under section 3, title IV of Executive Order 9250; and

(c) To issue such directives on policy or operations to the Federal agencies and departments as may be necessary to carry out the programs developed, the policies established, and the decisions made under this order. It shall be the duty of all such agencies and departments to execute these directives, and to make to the Office of War Mobilization such progress reports as may be required.

IV

The Office of War Mobilization may perform the functions, exercise the powers, authority and discretion conferred on it by this order through such officials and such agencies and in such manner as the Director, subject to the provisions of this order, may determine. The Director shall receive such compensation as the President shall provide, and within the limits of funds which may be made available, may employ necessary personnel and make provision for supplies, facilities, and services necessary to discharge his responsibilities.

All prior Executive orders insofar as they are in conflict herewith are amended accordingly.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 27, 1943.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I mention this matter because the issuance of this Executive order today is a vindication of the effort of Congress to achieve substantially and fundamentally this objective which the President has today adopted as his own.

I think it would not be amiss to ask unanimous consent to incorporate in my remarks at this point Senate bill 607, a bill introduced on February 1 of this year in the Senate by the able Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], who is detained today from presence in the Senate by illness, to whom we all owe a great debt for what he has done in attempting to bring about such a step as has been taken today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 607

A bill to establish an Office of War Mobilization, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That it is the purpose of this act to (1) inventory and mobilize all the economic resources of the United States, including manpower, facilities, materials, technical and scientific knowledge, and natural resources for maximum use in the provision of military and essential civilian needs; and (2) adjust and stabilize the economy in accordance with the needs of full mobilization and other conditions created by war.

ESTABLISHMENT OF AN INDEPENDENT OFFICE AND ITS CONSTITUENT OFFICES

SEC. 2. (a) There is hereby created as an independent agency an Office of War Mobilization, which shall be under the direction of a Director of War Mobilization (referred to in this act as the "Director"). The Director shall be appointed by the President and shall be compensated at the rate of $20,000 per annum.

(b) The following offices are hereby created within the Office of War Mobilization: (1) Office of Production and Supply, (2) Office of Manpower Supply, (3) Office of Scientific and Technical Mobilization, and (4) Office of Economic Stabilization. Each such office shall be under the direction of an Administrator who, subject to the approval of the President, shall be appointed by the Director. Each Administrator shall be compensated at the rate of $15,000 per annum. The Director, subject to the approval of the President, is authorized to appoint such Deputy Administrators as he deems necessary. Each Deputy Administrator shall be compensated at the rate of $12,000 per annum.

(c) The Director and the several Administrators and their deputies shall be full-time employees and they and all other full-time employees of the Office of War Mobilization shall sever all private business connections and shall receive no salaries or compensations other than those received as employees of the Office of War Mobilization.

ESTABLISHMENT OF A COMMITTEE ON REQUIREMENTS AND PROGRAM

SEC. 3. There is hereby created a Committee on Requirements and Program under the chairmanship of the Director and consisting of the Secretaries of War and the Navy, the Chief of Staff of the Army, the Chief of Naval Operations, and the Administrators of the four constituent offices of the Office of War Mobilization. This Committee shall develop, subject to the approval of the President, a comprehensive national program for maximum use of resources for military and essential civilian needs. This program shall be based on schedules of military requirements furnished by the War and Navy Departments and determinations as to minimum essential civilian needs and available resources by the Office of War Mobilization.

ESTABLISHMENT OF A BOARD OF WAR MOBILIZATION

SEC. 4. There is hereby created a Board of War Mobilization under the chairmanship of the Director and consisting of four representatives of industry, four representatives of labor, four representatives of agriculture, and four public members at large appointed by the Director with the advice and the approval of the President. The Board shall hold regular meetings at least once a month. The Board and each individual member shall have access to all information of the Office bearing on the effectivenss and adequacy of war mobilization. The Board is directed to make to the Office of War Mobilization such recommendations relating to policy and operations as it may deem necessary to improve war mobilization. The Board and each member individually shall endeavor to secure maximum cooperation and participation of the American people in war mobilization. To this end, the Board shall direct, extend, and improve the war-production drive, now being carried out through plant labor-management production committees.

DUTIES AND POWERS OF THE DIRECTOR OF WAR MOBILIZATION

SEC. 5. (a) The Director shall effectuate the program developed in accordance with section 3 and shall effectuate the necessary adjustments and stabilization of economic conditions through (1) the establishment of the policy and the supervision and coordination of the several constituent offices of the Office of War Mobilization, and (2) the issuance of directives on policy or operations to other Federal agencies concerned with the purposes of this act; it shall be the duty of all such agencies to execute such directives.

(b) The powers now possessed by the several Federal agencies and subdivisions of agencies which are transferred to the constituent offices of the Office of War Mobilization by section 7 of this act and all powers provided in section 8 are specifically vested in the Director. Whenever the Director deems it necessary to the furtherance of the purposes of this act that additional powers be vested in him, he shall make appropriate recommendations to Congress or to the President for such additional powers.

(c) The Director shall perform and exercise the powers and authority granted under this act in such manner and through such officials of the Office of War Mobilization and of other Federal agencies as he may determine.

(d) The Director is authorized to redistribute the functions of the constituent offices of the Office of War Mobilization and to make such transfers and other internal reorganization which he deems necessary, including the redistribution and transfer of the functions and personnel of the several Federal agencies and subdivisions of agencies transferred to the constituent offices by section 7 of this act: Provided, however, That the powers conferred herein do not supersede the authority vested in the President in the First War Powers Act. Whenever the Director deems the transfer of additional Federal agencies or subdivisions of agencies to the constituent offices to further the purposes of this act, he shall recommend to the President that such transfers be made by virtue of the powers vested in the President under the First War Powers Act.

(e) The Director shall establish within his own office a planning and progress-reporting staff which shall maintain a record of the extent of mobilization of manpower, facilities, materials, technical and scientific knowledge, and natural resources, and shall check progress on the comprehensive program developed in accordance with section 3 of this act and on the programs of the several constituent offices.

(f) The Director shall advise and consult with the Board of War Mobilization on all major policies.

FUNCTIONS OF THE CONSTITUENT OFFICES

SEC. 6. The several constituent offices shall exercise the following general functions, through such powers as are vested in the Director or acquired by him in accordance with section 5 and further delegated by him to the several administrators in accordance with section 10 (a): (a) The Office of Production and Supply shall (1) maintain a current inventory of materials, facilities, and other productive resources, other than manpower, and shall maintain a record of the present and projected use of potential industrial capacity; (2) translate the production program developed in accordance with section 3 into a detailed time schedule of end and intermediate military and civilian products by plants; (3) procure through contracts, or otherwise, the requirements of the Departments of War and Navy, and of the Maritime Commission, and all foreign requirements including lend-lease; (4) review progress on all outstanding contracts and renegotiate such contracts where necessary so as to conform to the schedule under (2) above; (5) allocate critical materials and facilities, in accordance with this same schedule; (6) check on the use of facilities, materials, and other production factors through plant inspection; (7) determine in collaboration with the Office of Manpower Supply a detailed time schedule of plant-by-plant manpower requirements.

(b) The Office of Manpower Supply shall (1) maintain a current inventory of manpower resources and a record of the present and projected use of manpower resources; (2) allocate manpower as between combat and other essential needs, including production, so as to meet the comprehensive program developed in accordance with section 3 of this act; (3) develop to the maximum extent, through proper training and placement of workers, all potential manpower resources needed to meet the program and schedules determined under sections 3 and 6 (a) above; (4) arrange for the transfer of workers from plant to plant, industry to industry, and area to area in accordance with the needs of war mobilization; (5) insure through plant inspection the use of labor at maximum effectiveness.

(c) The Office of Scientific and Technical Mobilization shall effect the full and immediate mobilization of scientific knowledge, techniques, and personnel, for the prosecution of war and for making adjustments necessitated by war conditions.

(d) The Office of Economic Stabilization shall effect the adjustments of economic structure and conditions of business or employment needed to effectuate the purposes of this act. The Office of Economic Stabilization shall have jurisdiction over Federal regulation of civilian purchasing power, prices, rents, wages, salaries, profits, rationing, subsidies, loans, and all other matters relating to the adjustment of the economy to the needs of full war mobilization and to the conditions created by war.

TRANSFER OF FUNCTIONS AND PERSONNEL OF CERTAIN EXISTING AGENCIES

SEC. 7. (a) There is hereby transferred to the Office of Production and Supply the functions and personnel of (1) the War Production Board and the Smaller War Plants Corporation; (2) those subdivisions of the War, Navy, and Treasury Departments, of the Maritime Commission, and of the Office of Lend-Lease as shall be determined by the Director, subject to the approval of the President, as being related to, engaged in, or concerned with the procurement, manufacture, or other provision of war matériel; (3) the Federal Loan Agency and the Department of Commerce as shall be determined by the Director, subject to the approval of the President, as being related to, engaged in, or concerned with financing plant expansions, materials, purchases, or other operations bearing on the purposes of this act; and (4) the Petroleum Administration for War.

(b) There are hereby transferred to the Office of Manpower Supply the functions and personnel of the Selective Service Administration and the War Manpower Commission, excepting that subdivision transferred under (c) below.

(c) There is hereby transferred to the Office of Scientific and Technical Mobilization the functions and personnel of the National Roster of Scientific and Specialized Personnel of the War Manpower Commission.

(d) There is hereby transferred to the Office of Economic Stabilization the functions and personnel of the Office of Price Administration and the Office of Economic Stabilization.

(e) All persons attached to the military services who are transferred to the Office of War Mobilization by this act or who are subsequently so transferred shall be relieved from active service for such length of time as shall be requested by the Director.

AMENDMENTS TO EXISTING STATUTES AND ADDITIONAL POWERS AND DUTIES

SEC. 8. (a) The Selective Service Act is hereby amended as follows: "The Director of War Mobilization through the Office of War Manpower shall establish such organization and procedure for determining occupational deferment as he shall deem proper, and the findings arising through such procedures and organizations shall supplant those heretofore made by the local selective-service boards."

(b) The Director, through the Office of War Manpower, is empowered to make loans or grants to cover costs of subsistence and transportation of workers, including their families, being placed in or transferring to war essential civilian activity whenever he deems such assistance will further the purposes of this act. The maximum grant to any individual family shall not exceed $200 and the maximum loan shall not exceed $300.

(c) The Director is authorized and directed through the Office of Scientific and Technical Mobilization to (1) appraise current use of scientific and technical personnel and facilities and make plans and proposals for maximum mobilization of such personnel and facilities for the war effort; (2) review all proposals for development of improved processes, products, and materials or for other scientific research and development, including development of models and pilot plants, which may be brought to the attention of the Office of War Mobilization or initiated by the staff of the Office, and promote such proposals deemed in aid of war mobilization through loans or grants to public agencies or private persons or through the establishment of research facilities and pilot plants under the direction of the Office; (3) promote the widest and fullest utilization of advanced processes, techniques, and products; and for these purposes he shall have access to all production facilities and all information bearing on processes, products, materials, or other factors of production; (4) arrange and where necessary compel the licensing for the duration of the national emergency of patents, secret processes, and special technical information at reasonable compensation in order to foster their wider utilization where this is deemed necessary in the interest of war mobilization.

FUNDS

SEC. 9. (a) All appropriations for any agency available for use in connection with any function transferred to the Office of War Mobilization are hereby transferred and shall be available to the Office of War Mobilization for the purpose of exercising the function so transferred. For the purposes of this subsection, the Director of War Mobilization shall determine, subject to the approval of the President, which functions have been so transferred. Funds appropriated for the Army, Navy, Maritime Commission, and lend-lease procurements shall not be limited in their expenditure to the original purposes specified in their appropriation but shall be based on the program determined in accordance with section 3 of this act.

(b) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated $200,000,000 to the Office of War Mobilization to defray loans or grants made under the authority of section 8 (b). There is hereby authorized to be appropriated $200,000,000 to the Office of War Mobilization to defray costs or loans or grants or other expenditure under the authority conferred in section 8 (c) (2) of this act.

DECENTRALIZATION OF ACTIVITIES

SEC. 10. (a) The Director shall delegate the powers and duties conferred in this act to the administrators of the constituent offices to the maximum extent consistent with proper determination of policy and coordinated operations.

(b) The Director and the several administrators are hereby directed to decentralize operations on an area basis to the maximum extent consistent with efficient operation.

(c) The Director is authorized and directed to employ State and other area representatives, who shall coordinate and integrate the operations of the constituent offices in these States and other areas.

(d) The Director and the several administrators are authorized and directed to establish boards similar in structure and function to the board established under section 5 of this act on a national, area, and industrial basis.

SEC. 11. (a) All laws or parts of laws conflicting with the provisions of this act are to the extent of such conflict suspended while this act is in force.

(b) Upon the termination of this act all executive or administrative agencies, governmental corporations, departments, commissions, bureaus, offices, or officers shall exercise the same functions, duties, and powers as exercised prior to the date of enactment of this act.

(c) This act shall take effect immediately upon its enactment and shall remain in force during the continuance of the present war and for 6 months after the termination thereof, or until such earlier date as the Congress by concurrent resolution or the President may designate.

SEC. 12. (a) All orders, rules, regulations, permits, or other privileges made, issued, or granted by or in respect of any agency or function transferred to any other agency or function under the provisions of this act, and in effect on the date this act takes effect, shall continue in effect to the same extent as if such transfer had not occurred, until modified, superseded, or repealed.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the purpose of this bill is to establish an Office of War Mobilization. The bill, in terms, is the successor of a bill introduced in the Senate last October by the able Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE] and the junior Senator from Florida, and about the same time in the House of Representatives by a distinguished Representative from California [Mr. TOLAN].

I cannot refrain from paying tribute to what Representative TOLAN has done in this field, for it was first his committee, the Tolan Committee on Migratory Labor, set up in the House of Representatives, which on December 18, 1941, recommended a single civilian agency for the conduct of civilian and war production. On March 9, 1942, and again in October 1942, the Tolan committee described the agency which should perform this function, and, as I have said, it was thereafter that the Kilgore-Pepper and the Tolan bills were introduced, respectively, in the Senate and in the House of Representatives.

The bill to which I refer as introduced in the Senate in October 1942 was heard before a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, and that subcommittee made a report, and I ask unanimous consent to incorporate in my remarks the report which was made at that time, which is not long.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REPORT OF SUBCOMMITTEE OF SENATE EDUCATION AND LABOR COMMITTEE ON S. 2871, TO ESTABLISH AN OFFICE OF WAR MOBILIZATION

This subcommittee of the Committee on Education and Labor was directed by the chairman of the committee, Senator ELBERT D. THOMAS of Utah, to hold hearings on S. 2871 and to report to the full committee. The members of the subcommittee, originally established to hold hearings on Senate Resolution 291, were Senators CLAUDE PEPPER, of Florida, chairman; LISTER HILL, of Alabama; H. H. SCHWARTZ, of Wyoming; ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, Jr., of Wisconsin; and EUGENE D. MILLIKIN, of Colorado. In discharging its duties by this report on S. 2871 your subcommittee recommends that the Committee on Education and Labor give favorable consideration to this legislation.

NATURE OF MODERN WAR

This is a total war. What does that mean? We have heard the phrase so much in recent months it has begun to lose its impact.

During the First World War total expenditures of the Federal Government were $26,000,000,000 through the year 1919. Since June 1940, when the National Defense Advisory Commission was established, Congress has appropriated approximately $225,000,000,000 and approximately $56,000,000,000 have already been expended.

The numbers in our armed forces today already exceed by about 2,000,000 the numbers in the service during the last war and plans are already made for adding approximately 4,000,000.

We fought the last war largely by weapons produced by our allies. Very few of our combat planes saw a fight, and a very small number of our guns fired a shot in battle. Already in this war our weapons are fighting on every front although we are far short of the supplies needed to overwhelm the enemy.

In the First World War we employed only 8,000,000 in all manufacturing. This figure is far short of the 17,000,000 employed today in war industry and much further behind the 25,000,000 we may expect at the peak of war employment. This enormous increase in the numbers on war jobs is taking place simultaneously with the huge drain into the armed forces.

These figures give some idea of the magnitude of the undertaking in which we are now engaged. They help convey the meaning of "total war."

We need to realize that by entering upon this war we have committed America to enormous changes. Defeat, we all know, will destroy the America we are fighting to defend. It may not be so apparent to most of us that the effort to gain victory is also bound to transform America.

How it will be transformed depends upon decisions already made and on others now on hand.

It is well to remember that today America has only one important customer: Uncle Sam. Congress has already appropriated the major part of the funds required to fight this war during 1943 and most of 1944. From here out the ruling question is how that money will be spent, by whom, what production goals will be, and how they can be met. Even of the $56,000,000,000 already spent, a large part has gone as advances for incomplete end-products or for new plants. Many of these end-products will require further expenditures for their completion.

During the first 2½ years of defense production and throughout the first year of the war, Congress has considered that its primary duty was to appropriate. It has been assumed that other branches of the Government were equipped to carry out the mobilization of America's resources, to give meaning to the figures on these Treasury checks. This has proven to be an unjustified assumption.

Our productive effort to date has been great. But compared to our productive capacity it has been unsatisfactory. The margin between what we have done and what we can do will not merely decide the length of the war. Here, now, today, we are deciding the shape of the peace and the structure of post-war America. The nature of the problems at hand rules out military control or even monopolistic civilian control of this war-production effort.

The problem of a war economy is how to maximize production and how simultaneously to maintain balance in motion.

This is a brand-new job, and it requires a new understanding of the problem. Our military men are unprepared to face such a program. Their solution, as they have demonstrated, is to let the contracts to the individual large firms and expect them to deliver on time. Many of these large firms in turn want to be allowed to do the job in their own way without interference, supervision, or any centralized control.

Peacetime production may have been possible by this means. Wartime production is not. Without coordination of all the parts, the war machine won't work. The reason should be apparent. Our peacetime economy has depended upon surpluses of men, materials, and machines. Surpluses gave us leeway. War scarcity allows no room for serious miscalculations or mistakes in judgment.

As surpluses have disappeared our war-production program has begun to run into difficulties. This was understood in advance and forecast by those observers who had studied the war economy of our enemies and of our allies.

It is possible now to predict that we shall run into increasingly serious difficulty from now until the end of the war if we do not meet the problem of scarcity head-on.

If we continue as we have begun, we shall try to overcome scarcity by robbing Peter to pay Paul. Already the armed services have cut back the proposed goals for important military end-products.

To date many of these cuts could be explained away. In another 6 months the discrepancies between our achievements and our goals will be so glaring as to call for sweeping shake-ups. Six months hence we shall be far worse situated than we are today to benefit from thorough reorganization. We shall have lost most of the leeway that remains to us.

And 6 months hence we shall hear as we hear today the warning not to change horses in the middle of the stream. Unfortunately, the "don't rock the boat" boys have won all the arguments and lost all the games to date.

It is easy to understand why this is the case. We are fighting an entirely new kind of war. Our enemies understand this. Our team does not. The stakes in this war are high. They are: The world of the future.

Our enemies are fighting to enslave this world. We say that we are fighting to free it; but how?

Throughout the first 2½ years of our effort 100 of America's largest corporations have received 75 percent of all war contracts by dollar volume. To them has gone the great bulk of new plants built at Government expense, over $14,000,000,000. To them are flowing in increasing numbers the workers seeking jobs in war industry. America, a land of giant corporations before the war, will emerge from this war with a larger share of its vastly expanded economy controlled by a smaller number of firms.

This situation has developed during this war more by accident than by design. It has been accompanied by the destruction of one small community after another through the shutting down of its factories and the migration of its people. The face of America is already greatly changed. But it rests with Congress whether these changes shall continue unnoticed and uncontrolled. The time for decision is now.

The military authorities have protested that there is no fundamental conflict between the civilian and military agencies charged with military production. In a certain sense this is true. Insofar as both groups have to date resisted the need for a fundamental change in our approach to the war production job, there has been too little conflict. Recently, however, certain new elements have been injected into the effort to improve the program. New personnel within the War Production Board has brought forward proposals directly counter to the usual approach found both within the contracting agencies and the Board itself.

This new personnel is production minded. It realizes the importance of clear lines of authority and responsibility. It places a high value upon the establishment and maintenance of flow schedules. It relies upon over-all programs to get its job done and it knows that such programs are unattainable without the constant flow to some central spot of continuous and up-to-date information on progress of that program.

The war production effort to date has been characterized by the absence of such understanding. No centralization of information has been possible because no adequate information about the progress of the program existed anywhere. Forecasts were a substitute for schedules. Frequently the end-products produced fell far short of the forecasts but in a number of instances production far exceeded the forecast. This lack of balance has meant that many end-products remained uncompleted for lack of certain components. Meanwhile some components and even some important end-products were produced out of all proportion to any immediately foreseeable demand. Many new productive facilities were produced without regard to the need for their product.

This lack of balance runs throughout our war production program to date. It cannot be corrected without a basic change in our general understanding of the problem.

The central problem is this: War today involves our entire economy. When we confront this fact squarely, the American people will agree that our war production must have the broadest possible popular base and the most democratic and representative control if we are to wage a successful war and make a lasting peace.

Today the drift is in the opposite direction. This drift arises from fear, the fear of excessive capacity in the post-war world. The forces struggling within our war production program have from the start fought over the question of expansion and of what should be expanded. The battle to expand raw-material facilities is still going on although it has been throughout a losing fight. Much of the reduction in the President's goals for 1942 and 1943 has stemmed from failure to expand this capacity. The resistance to raw-material expansion was followed by reluctance to convert. A competent investigation of conversion would reveal how limited it has been. A large part of our increased production will come from new facilities.

Because of these shortcomings of our production program the President's goals have been revised downward. It is possible to predict moreover that we shall not meet these goals if the present conduct of the program is not changed. It is easy to substantiate this prediction. An inspection of the records of the past 6 months will show how we have fallen behind our projected goals to date. The monthly goals for the coming year call for a rapid rate of increase. If we have been unable to maintain the much slower rates of increase in 1942, it is impossible to imagine that we can achieve the vastly accelerated increases for 1943.

There is a paradox hidden within our present situation. Our current production program aims at a speedy victory. Failure to meet the program's goals will prolong the war. Meanwhile, however short the program falls of early victory, it is piling up vast problems for America when the war is won. The capacity to produce 8,000,000 tons of shipping a year and 14,000 aircraft a month will be available to us at the war's end. Where do we go from there?

The same absence of balance which threatens our war-production program threatens our post-war economy. If we continue destroying America's small businesses and uprooting our smaller communities, and many of our large ones as well, we shall not recognize post-war America. The clamor to maintain a vast standing Army and Navy and a huge armament industry will be almost irresistible.

The numbers in the armed services and in war industry whom we must demobilize are out of proportion to the numbers involved in the last war. We cannot expect our largest corporation alone to reemploy them. Indeed, the jobs for many of them are already disappearing as new metals, new materials, and new methods simplify the productive process. War, and especially this war, brings in its train a scientific and technical revolution. We cannot expect the borders of our own country, even with the best balanced economy we may achieve, to absorb the production of which we shall be capable.

The productive capacity which astounded the world in 1929 has been far surpassed already by the national output in the year 1942, and that we shall further extend it in 1943. This is the other half of the paradox previously cited. Unbalanced and disorganized as it has been, the productive effort is enormous. It is not self-correcting. We need the balance of a new war-production program to channelize the energies of this economy if we are to win the war, and in learning to maintain this balance throughout the war we shall learn much to ease our transition into the post-war period.

We should count ourselves fortunate that the best approach to our war-production program will also provide the best transition to a post-war economy. We can embrace this solution so much more wholeheartedly because it serves this double purpose.

BRIEF SURVEY OF WAR-PRODUCTION PROGRAM

After a year of war the people have learned that the War Production Board has not been engaged in the business of war production. They are told that the chaos in raw-material distribution, long recognized and admitted, will be remedied by the celebrated Controlled Materials Plan which will come into full operation 6 months from now. They look hopefully for improvement in manpower mobilization and wonder whether the recent changes in the War Manpower Commission will do away with compromise and conflict. They learn that the armed services divide their time on the home front between devising military strategy and attempting to organize war production and manpower. This is the method of partial war, not the method of total war. It harbors grave consequences for the future.

One year after Pearl Harbor, the Nation looks in vain for a unified program of all-out war production. Each new crisis in production evokes a piecemeal attempt at solution. Errors accumulate and crises intensify because these attempts are not part of a comprehensive program. The constant reshufflings in the Washington war agencies reflect our failures and not the progressive results of experience.

Some people would justify a disjointed war effort in terms of speed and urgency; they show a tragic misunderstanding of the requirements of total war. They cannot support their position with evidence that the output of war implements comes up to stated goals. The record is sharply against them.

We are still tinkering with the elements of war production when the entire resources of the Nation should have been fully mobilized.

Military procurement in peacetime presented no great problems. Established relationships of the procurement services with a small number of large corporations were relied upon for small quantities of items delivered in leisurely fashion. But this is war—total war—and the continuation of peacetime methods cannot achieve the transformation of the economy to an all-out war footing and the tremendous, uninterrupted output of weapons to triumph over the enemy.

Procurement means the letting of war contracts. This function is basic to any program of war production. It is idle to talk about raw-material control, production scheduling, and manpower allocation outside the framework of contract award. Today, a few large prime contractors are overloaded with war work, while the resources of many communities and numerous medium-sized and small plants lie idle. It is not too much to say that the procurement officials and through them the largest war contractors hold in their hands the power over the life and death of hundreds upon hundreds of American communities. The evidence does not permit doubt that these officials have failed signally to organize the Nation's resources for all-out war.
